Now, go along to March 3, 1915, and here is a scandalous ate of affairs. The O-1 and the O-2, little $800,000 ships, each state of affairs. one being sent to a Government yard so that we could rush them to completion-it was after the scare in Europe and we wanted submarines to defend harbors-one went to Portsmouth and the other to the Puget Sound Government yard, because we were going to rush them to completion and show private builders what the Government could do in building ships-2 years old, and each of these ships 0 per cent completed.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not now. If it takes two years to have 0 per cent completed, how many years will it take to have these ships 100 per cent completed? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Figure that out yourself. I hope that the Democratic administration will not last long enough to complete these ships. [Laughter.]

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. For a question. Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Let me ask my colleague if during the Taft administration any contracts

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, if the gentleman is going to talk about the dead, let us forget it. [Laughter.] Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRITTEN. All right, ask the question, but do not talk about the Taft administration.

Mr. WM, ELZA WILLIAMS. Was there any time limit within which these contracts should be completed?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will not answer the question, because the gentleman is dealing with the dead. Let us talk about something that applies to the present.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. The gentleman finds fault with the administration because these ships have not been completed,

Mr. BRITTEN. Was the country at war at that time? Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I am asking the gentleman if was any time limit on these

Mr. BRITTEN. I suppose that there was.
Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. No; there was not, and it is the fault of you gentlemen.

Mr. BRITTEN. It was not my fault; I was not here at the time, I am sorry to say. The two ships that I am talking about now were authorized in 1915, after the war in Europe had progressed seven months, and the world was strained and frightened, and we wanted these ships badly, so we sent each to Government yards, where we could control their construction. After being there two years they are 0 per cent completed.

Now, let us get away from submarines and take up the destroyers. Torpedo-boat destroyers are light ships, about 1,100 tons, costing a million and a half dollars each. They have no heavy armor or armament, but depend almost entirely on the torpedo tubes and torpedoes for offensive warfare. These are the ships that did such wonderful work for Germany off Skagerrak last year, the only big naval battle they have had during this war, when they dashed in among the British warships and put two or three dreadnaughts out of commission.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the gentleman's remarks, may I ask a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am much interested in the statement.

Will the gentleman give to the House the real reason and cause for the delays that he is calling the attention of the House to?

Mr. BRITTEN. I said a little while ago to the gentlemen in the House that the real reason for the cause of the delay and failure to construct these ships on time is that we lack in the Navy Department to-day proper business administration to carry any contract successfully into effect, [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DICKINSON. What is the reason and cause in the mind of the administration?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am sorry to say that I can not see into the mind of the administration. It may be light, but you can't see through it. Now, let us talk of the torpedo-boat destroyers. On June 30, 1914, we authorized six torpedo-boat destroyers. Four of these have been completed and commissioned. Of the other two, one is 96.7 per cent complete and the other is 99 per cent complete. It will please my good friends in the House who are partial to navy yard construction to know that the one of the two remaining uncompleted is being built in a Government navy yard, and, as usual, the navy yard ships are behind all the others authorized at that particular time.

On March 3, 1915, we authorized six more torpedo-boat destroyers. Remember, gentlemen, they are of 1,100-ton displacement, carry no extensive arms or armament, and should be quickly constructed. One of these is in the Norfolk Navy Yard for construction, and the other one is being constructed at the Seattle Construction Co. Will it surprise you to learn that in two years on the construction of these ships, one of them is 2.3 per cent completed and the other is 5.6 per cent completed. Think of it! That will mean—50 times 2 are 100—that in 100 years from now these two ships will be completed. [Laughter.]

Mr. EMERSON. They are very good in carrying doubtful States, are they not?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes; in time of peace. I have a very interesting statement to make concerning the construction of the transport Henderson. That was authorized under the Taft administration. The Navy needed a big transport; we did not have one; therefore it was desired quickly. One of the first things our Secretary of the Navy did was to advertise for bids for this transport, and he prescribed in the notice that he sent out to prospective bidders that the ship must be completed within 24 months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. BRITTEN. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give me 30 minutes more. I have yielded quite freely

Mr. BUTLER. That is true, and I shall not yield to the gentleman unless he shall insist on going on with his speech, because time is precious. [Laughter.] I yield the gentleman

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas rose.

Mr. BRITTEN. I can not yield. This ship, the Henderson, was authorized four years ago, and the request sent out for bids by the present Navy Department distinctly said that no bid would be considered by the department that specified more than 24 months for the completiton of the same, because they wanted it quickly. It was further prescribed that a penalty of $150 a day would be imposed for failure of any contractor to deliver that ship within 24 months. Bids were taken. Secretary of the Navy with his usual desire to play a little politics and favor navy yards gave the construction of the transport Henderson to the Philadelphia yard. I am not going to criticize the navy yard, because it is a very good yard, but will you gentlemen be surprised to learn that that ship is not completed to-day, and at that rate the Navy Department owes itself $108,000 penalty at the present time. Its hull is 94 per cent completed and its machinery 73 per cent completed. This is a little $2,000,000 transport, which has been under construction for four years in a navy yard under the complete control of the present administration, and the bids varied very slightly between the Government bid and the bid of the lowest bidder.

About that time we also needed a supply ship that had been authorized under the Taft administration. It was called the Bridge, a little ship costing $1,300,000.

The Secretary of the Navy realized the value of a supply ship—we had to have it quickly, so in a notice he sent to the various contracting concerns bidding on the construction of same he said to them that no bid would be considered that prescribed more than 22 months to complete the ship, and that for every day over 22 months it would take to complete the ship the contractor should be penalized $150. I do not infer, it is not up to me to even suggest, that any figures may have been juggled by anybody, but it is surprising to observe that the Boston Navy Yard's bid was but a few dollars below the bid of the lowest private bidder. I will not say that any chicanery or deceit was practiced, but I have a notation here that says:

After receipt of bids the department requested some or all of the navy yards to check over their estimates and revise, if necessary.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BRITTEN. Not now. Is it not perfectly natural that the navy yard might have been told the amount of the low bidder in order that they could come below it and get the contract, and if so, let us see the result. Twenty-two months was the time specified, and the penalty was $150 a day. The Boston Navy Yard has been at that ship all during the present administration, and I find that its machinery is 57.11 per cent completed, so that at the present rate of construction in another three or four years the ship will be completed. It should have been completed within 22 months, and would have been by one of the private bidders who was low and offered to do the business in 22 months or suffer enormous penalty. At the rate of penalty prescribed for the bidders the Navy Department owes the Government about $120,000 for the delay.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BRITTEN. I have only a few minutes. The gentleman realizes that. Will he give me some of his time?

Mr. GARDNER. I only have half an hour.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is all I had, and I am a member of the committee. [Laughter.] Of course, it would not be fair for any big Navy man to say that the administration should complete a battleship in four years, a dreadnaught, because we are working under very adverse conditions nowadays in our navy The minority says that the war in Europe may be over in a few days, and that we will not need any ships then and that we had better delay. Let us see just what has been done.

Exclusive of the pending bill, the present administration has authorized 13 first-line fighting ships, all of which are far from completion, and therefore not to be considered in our program of national defense in the event of war in the immediate future. The dreadnaught Idaho, being constructed by the New York Ship Bullding Co, is 64.5 per cent completed and is ahead of her nearest rival, while the big ships being constructed in Government yards are, as usual, the tallenders. Three battleships were authorized in June, 1914. One is being built in the New York Navy Yard, the other two are being built by private con-Will it surprise you to learn that the one being built in the New York Navy Yard, a sister ship to the other two, is 20 per cent completed as far as machinery is concerned, and the other two are 60 and 66 per cent completed as to machinery, or 300 per cent nearer completion than the one in the navy Let us see about the two authorized two years agothe California, being constructed in the Mare Island Navy Yard, the other, the Tennessee, being constructed in the New York Navy Yard, two big dreadnaughts being constructed by the administration in Government yards.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman means, to be constructed? Mr. BRITTEN. One of them, the Tennessee, after two years, is no per cent completed on machinery, no per cent completed as to hull. How would you gentlemen feel about placing in the hands of the present administration, with such apparent lack of efficiency, the affairs of your Government during a great war with some foreign power equipped to fight? The one in the California yard at Mare Island, 2 years old, is no per cent completed so far as machinery is concerned, and 1.9 per cent completed as far as hull is concerned.

And so it goes with all the work that has been contracted for under this administration.

Mr. FESS. At that rate how long will it take to complete it?
Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman wants to know how long it will take to complete it. The gentleman is a college professor, and if he can figure out the time the Navy Department will be

Mr. MAHER. Will the gentleman tell us how long it took to complete the Arizona?

Mr. BRITTEN. I just have a little more to say during my few remaining minutes. Now, we get down to what, in the parlance of the street, is called the milk in the coconut.

As a résumé of the increase in fighting value of the Navy authorized and commissioned under President Wilson's administration we have the grand total of no submarines, no battleships, no hospital or supply ships, and but four small destroyers of 1,100 tons each.

Does it not give you "goose skin" when our country's unpreparedness for a great emergency is so apparent, and do you not hope that the President will continue to be "too proud to fight '

Do you realize that right at this moment, if you please, we are on the verge of breaking off diplomatic relations with one of the most powerful fighting countries of the world? And we hear the cry that the Navy to-day, man for man and ship for ship, is the greatest Navy in the world. Yet if we are dragged into that terrible European war you will be told that a large part of our Navy can not go to sea because of a shortage in ordinary seamen. Yes; ship for ship in cold steel, tied to a dock, we are the equal of the best; but unfortunately for us our enemy will not tie his ships to a foreign dock and match them against ours in that way. He will have full crews, properly trained, for every ship, while ours will be manned as best they

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.
Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman consent to write into the bill the House is now considering that no battleship shall be let unless it can be constructed within 36 months, and no submarine shall be let unless it can be constructed within 8 months

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is making a speech in my time. I do not control what should be written into the bill; but I will say this, that the present administration of the Navy Department, through its lack of business ability, has destroyed competition in every line of materials that go into the Navy, whether it go on the Jacky's back, in the Jacky's stomach, or whether it go on the Jacky's back, in the Jacky's stomach, or in the construction of the ship. There is no question about that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I can not right now; the gentleman will get his own time. Do you gentlemen realize that more than 50 per cent of the tonnage of our Navy is at the present moment tied up to the docks in the various yards and our various harbors because we have not sufficient men to man them? Do you realize that the fighting value of a ship does not lie in its ton-nage, it does not lie in its guns, but it lies in the men behind the guns? It lies in their ability to accept a command and carry it out successfully, quickly, and shoot and hit the mark. That can not be done by a lot of green seamen that are taken from citizenry. It takes a year to train men to carry out their orders and man the immense fighting machines. There are all kinds of mechanism, radio, firing devices, that a boy from the street can not control; and then we have the nerve to say to the country that, man for man and ship for ship, our Navy is equal to that of any navy in the world. Well, we have, if they keep theirs tied up to the docks on the other side and we keep our own, as they are, tied to the docks on this side. Then we are equal. But men are as necessary as ships. Neither can operate without the other. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back any time I may not have used.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.
Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, one of the gentlemen a minute ago asked when the Arizona was authorized. It was authorized on the 4th of March, 1913, and in order that there shall be no confusion in discussing why the Arizona was built more quickly than some other vessels have been built, I call attention to Secretary Daniels's evidence on page 720 of this year's hearings before the Naval Committee. Secretary Daniels said:

We did some extra work on the Arisona in order to get her out speedily. We have not regular three shifts on any large proportion of the work. It is only when we can not get the men to hurry the work out. It has been very difficult to get the men for more than one shift. We have therefore had to go to overtime, which is very costly.

I merely call attention to that statement so that in discussing the case of the Arizona you may not overlook the fact that it was not altogether built on an eight-hour single-shift basis. SHORTAGE OF ENLISTED MEN.

The authorized enlisted strength of the Navy is 77,956 men. We are short of that number by 24,500, as Admiral Palmer told me this morning. In other words, for every three men which we need to man our ships we have got two. Now, it is no wonder that in order to man this Arizona when it was commissioned in October, three years and six months after it was authorized, it was necessary to rob the battleships Kansas, and Vermont, and New Hampshire of their crews. (See morning papers of Oct. 18, 1916.) That is precisely what was done. All three of those battleships were sent to cold storage, or "in reserve," as it is euphemistically called, and yet the oldest of them was not quite 10 years in commission. Yet they went to cold storage, and we took their crews for the Arizona. Furthermore, according to Associated Press dispatches of May 13, 1916, Secretary Daniels on that day ordered the battleships New Jersey, Virginia, Rhode Island, Nebraska, Connecticut, and Louisiana to be put "in reserve," with their crews reduced 60 per cent, so as to provide men for a destroyer division and for the new dreadnaughts Oklahoma and Nevada. Now, that is what comes from this business of opposing year after year the increase in the number of enlisted men in the Navy. Secretary Daniels changed his policy last year, and we authorized a large increase in the number of bluejackets, but we are not getting the men. This year the Secretary comes along and suggests two plans, both of them good, to make the service more attractive to the enlisted men. One of these plans was adopted by the Naval Committee and is included in this bill. The other plan was turned down.

Secretary Daniels asked that he be permitted annually to appoint to the Naval Academy 100 enlisted men, provided that appoint to the Naval Academy too consister them the can show the requisite fitness. The Committee on Naval Affairs, wisely, in my opinion, has adopted this suggestion. He also asked that the pay of enlisted men should be increased $5 per month. This was the suggestion which the committee negatived. The Secretary testified that 90 per cent of those enlisted men had somebody depending on them. It is true that they are paid more than a soldier or a marine; but that does not alter the fact that their pay is inadequate. The base pay of a third-class seaman in the Navy is $17.60 a month, and the base pay of a private soldier or marine is only $15 a month, with clothes, lodging, victuals, and courts-martial all thrown in free of charge. Now, that pay is not enough. You have got to pay men what they are worth in this world if you want them to work cheerfully.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF UNDERMANNING OUR NAVY.

I have been looking into some rather interesting figures to see just exactly what the consequence of undermanning our vessels has been.

A certain prize is awarded annually to our battleships. It is known as the "engineering trophy." Our battleships and our largest cruisers compete for this trophy. Article XIX of the rules under which the award is made disqualifies any ship which has been in a navy yard for more than 150 days during the year. In the last fiscal year 15 battleships and 7 large cruisers were disqualified for that engineering trophy because for over five months they were wallowing in a navy yard, and only 10 battleships and 1 large cruiser qualified for the trophy. During the last fiscal year we had 33 battleships. Fifteen of them were disqualified for the reason which I have given, three venerable survivors of the Spanish War were out of commission, and the other five were disqualified for various reasons. Only 10 battleships out of the whole 33 could qualify for the engineering trophy. (See Navy Department letter to commanders in chief, No. 27832–256, July 25, 1916.) Now, that is what comes of not having men enough in your Navy. That is the condition to-day, with 24,500 men short in the Navy.

DELAYS IN CONSTRUCTION.

Now, I am going on to this question of procrastination and delay in the actual building of the ships which Congress has authorized. Excuses and explanations which failed to explain have been offered by the bushel. I am perfectly willing to admit, so as to save any gentlemen asking me the question, that the delay was exactly as bad under Republican administration as it is now. But the world was not on fire in those times and sparks were not flying on every side.

The fastest capital ship in the fighting line of the United States Navy is the Delaware, with a speed of 21½ nautical miles per hour. The fastest ship in the British Navy, a battle cruiser of the fighting line, is the Princess Royal, whose speed is 34½ nautical miles, according to our Navy Yearbook, which cites press reports in support of its statement. The fastest capital fighting ship in the German Navy is the battle cruiser Seydlitz, with a speed of 29 nautical miles per hour.

We have never built any battle cruisers. Foreign nations have been building them; and, finally, last year we decided to construct four. Recently the Secretary of the Navy opened bids for those four. One of the bidders would not specify any time limit for delivery. Two of the bidders named 48 months and the fourth named 51 months as the period. Later on, in testifying before the Naval Committe, one of the bidders shortened the period to 46 months. So if this bill goes through by March 4, and if the Secretary of the Navy signs the contracts at once, it will be the 1st of January, 1921, before the United States has its first battle cruiser completed, 13 years after Great Britain's first battle cruiser was completed and 10 years after Germany's first battle cruiser was completed.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. As the gentleman is informed on these matters, I would like to hear from him as to the remedy for the conditions about which he complains.

Mr. GARDNER. I am coming to that in a few minutes.

Our new Navy law last summer was a good law so far as the building program was concerned, but it seems to be fundamentally impossible for the Navy Department to push the construction through to a conclusion in the way that business men must push matters through to a conclusion or else go to the wall. When we are faced with a trifling difficulty like insufficient draftsmen we wait a year before we correct it.

Last year it was found that the "ways" in the Government yard at Mare Island were not sufficiently long for the construction of a battleship. We had not foreseen it. We had to wait for months until the Cuyama was off those "ways" before we could extend them. We do not look ahead. This shortage of labor could have been foreseen. This overcrowding of private ship-yards ought not to have taken us by surprise. The fact is that the lack of business methods in the Navy Department is grotesque. It was so under Republican management, and it continues to be so under Democratic management, in spite of the conflagration in Europe.

Since President Wilson's inauguration nearly four years have elapsed; but no Navy appropriation bill under his administration was passed until June 30, 1914. In that bill and in the bills since that time Congress has authorized the immediate construction of 110 war vessels of all kinds, counting the 66 vessels authorized last summer for immediate construction. Of this number of ships of all sorts, as the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. Britten] said, only four have been completed; four destroyers-the Sampson, the Rowan, the Wilkes, and the Davis. Not a battleship, not a battle cruiser, not a submarine, not an auxiliary has been pushed through to completion, except ships authorized before Mr. Wilson was President. Those 4 destroyers are the only vessels out of 110 authorized under the present administration which have been finished. Last March we commissioned for the first time the superdreadnaught Nevada and last May we commissioned the Oklahoma. How long ago do you suppose that Congress first voted money for the Nevada and for the Oklahoma? Over five years before they were put in commission. The Arizona made a much better record. It was three years and nine months from the time she was authorized until the time she was put in commission.

I hold in my hand the Navy and Marine Corps List and Directory for January, 1917. It is the last number published. It shows that the keels have not yet been laid for any of the 30 submarines authorized last year. It also shows that the Navy Department has 33 other uncompleted submarines on its hands authorized in years prior to 1916.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] has told you about the submarines, and you have heard the facts which he presented. He took those facts from the bulletin of the Bureau of Construction and Repair. If he had also looked in the Navy and Marine Corps List and Directory, he would have found two more submarines whose names do not appear in his list, the G-2 and the G-3. The G-2 was authorized in 1908 and is now 92 per cent complete. The G-3 was authorized in 1909 and is now 89½ per cent complete. In both instances the contract was forfeited by the Lake Co. and Uncle Sam has not finished the boats yet. Besides these two vessels, 4 of the unfinished submarines were authorized in 1912, 1 in 1913, 8 in 1914, 8 in 1915, and 30 were authorized in 1916. Three of the 33 unfinsubmarines authorized prior to 1916 are fleet submarines Fleet submarines are the big 1,200-ton submarines, which can follow the fleet and fight anywhere. The first one we authorized was the submarine Schley. It is known as Fleet Submarine No. 1. We authorized it on June 30, 1914. On March 19, 1915, nine months later, Secretary Daniels made a contract for the completion of the Schley in three years, so that in March, 1918, Uncle Sam will have his first finished fleet submarine. Then, again, on March 3, 1915, we authorized two more fleet sub-marines. On October 2, 1916, one year and a half later, the Secretary of the Navy signed contracts for their construction. The contract calls for the completion of one of them in two years and of the other one in two years and two months.

I have looked through the reports of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and I find that for our 30 submarines which are being constructed under contract 20 months is the shortest period, while 36 months is the longest period within which delivery is stipulated.

Now, what sort of a way of building a Navy is that when the world is on fire?

Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did anyone offer to build in a shorter time?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If nobody would offer, what would you do?

Mr. GARDNER. I am coming to the remedy later. Now, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] has told you, the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation built 10 submarines of the H class for the British Government. They were put together near Montreal and shipped off to Europe on their own bottoms in five months after the contract was made. [Naval Committee hearings, Jan. 17, 1917, p. 1040.] The company got a very high price, of course. They were all of the same pattern.

I want to present to you this thought: There are only two cofferdams which we can extemporize for our protection while we are building up a permanent system of preparedness. There are only two ways in which we can improvise a temporary defense against possible trouble within the next year or so. One way is by building submarines and the other is by increasing our Regular Army.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would you think it as important to recruit the men to operate the ships that we have already constructed as it is to devote so much energy to the construction of new ships?

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, I think both courses are absolutely This year the General Board recommended that we should build four battleships. The Secretary of the Navy and the committee have reduced that number to three. The General Board recommended the building of two battle cruisers. The ecretary and the committee have reduced the number to one. The General Board recommended 4 scouts and 20 destroyers. The Secretary and the committee reduced the number to 3 scouts and 15 destroyers. The General Board recommended nine fleet submarines. Secretary Daniels recommended four, and the committee recommended none. The General Board recommended 18 coast submarines, Secretary Daniels recommended 14. The committee has decided on 18 submarines, big ones, I am glad to say, of the 800-ton type. [Naval Committee hearings, Dec. 11, 1916, p. 723.] As to those little submarines, of which we have authorized a good many heretofore, the European war shows that their radius of action is so limited that they are not in the same class as these 18 big coast submarines which it is proposed to authorize in this bill. Eight hundred tons, by the way, is about the tonnage of the U-53, which came into Newport Harbor last autumn.

Undoubtedly the Secretary of the Navy and the committee will say that the reason why they did not recommend the complete program of the General Board this year is because of the congestion in navy yards and private shipyards. They will tell you that the capacity of our private shipyards is not sufficient to take care of the program laid down by the General Board. That is precisely what the Secretary claimed last year. The Secretary of the Navy, along about Christmas time in 1915, just after he had recommended a meager shadow of the preparedness program of the General Board of the Navy, said that the capacity of the navy yards and the private shipbuilding yards of this country would be exhausted by a building program calling for five capital ships. Later testimony showed that over twice that number could be cared for.

Congress overruled the Secretary of the Navy, and we provided a big program. We ought to do the same thing this year. It is my sober judgment—gentlemen have asked me for my remedy for the delay in construction—it is my sober judgment that we ought to pass a law giving to the President the right to compel private shipyards, in cases of emergency, to put aside private work where it interferes with the progress of Government work. And, furthermore, I for one would cheerfully vote for a resolution declaring that such an emergency exists at the present time. It is no use shilly-shallying with the preparedness program merely because private yards are overcrowded with private business and the Government yards are insufficiently equipped to do our work. The Secretary of the Navy in his annual report suggested the possibility that he might need additional legislation to compel the cooperation of private yards. In his report he submitted nothing in the way of legislation, and so at my request the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Browning], at one of the hearings, asked the Secretary whether he did not have some legislation to propose along that line. The Secretary agreed to do so, and a little later he did submit legislation along that line, quite inadequate for the purpose, I think, because it only gave him the power of compulsion after contracts had been made with private shipyards. But be it effective or be it ineffective, it was not pressed in the committee, and it is not contained in this bill, not even that mild provision for com-

As to whether or not warships can be built more cheaply and more quickly and better in Government or in private yards, I do not know, and nobody else knows, because no system of bookkeeping has ever yet been adopted which any council of chartered accountants would agree on as a fair system. You can argue from now until doomsday, and you will come to no conclusion until you have an impartial commission to examine into the facts. I am very glad, however, to vote the money requested by the Secretary of the Navy for the extension of the facilities of Government navy yards. We must have plenty of facilities for Government building in any event. But just now it seems to me that the one thing necessary is speedy construction, and that at the present time gentlemen ought not to be guided by considerations of a penny saved or a penny gained. If I had the decision of the question, I should build our ships wherever they can be built most quickly.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. MADDEN. Would not the gentleman accompany that by the enlistment of sufficient men to man the ships after they are

Mr. GARDNER. I have not the slightest doubt that getting the men is merely a question of paying them. I am going to address this House a little later about the question of enlistment, because I have been in touch with the noncommissioned officers of five different regiments who have been on recruiting

Mr. MADDEN. Unless we do something of that sort, there would not be much use in speeding up the construction of the

Mr. GARDNER. I quite agree with the gentleman. I am going to offer an amendment to increase the pay of the men.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman spoke of forcing private shipyards to build more speedily. Does the gentleman think it would be wise to commandeer these private shipyards under the circumstances which we are facing now?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly I do, portions of them. I see no other remedy. I do not like it. I do not like compulsion myself, and I do not agree with the Secretary that these private yards have been misbehaving themselves, but that is not the point. It is no use discussing whether this sort of inefficiency existed under Republican administration. It is no use arguing as to how many ships were authorized at one time and how many at another, how many under one administration and how many under another. That sort of talk has nothing to do with the problem in hand. We are discussing now what we need to make the country safe.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I think I fully appreciate the force of what the gentleman has said about commandeering. Is that practicable in time of peace? I understand, of course, that if we were involved in war, the President would have that power and authority; but is it practicable or is it constitutional burden on the other fellow of going into court.

Mr. GARDNER. I should try it and see. I should put the

Mr. HOWARD. What is the gentleman's opinion about the further construction of these small submarines that have proven themselves to be of little use, in the light of foreign experience? I understand we are constructing some 33 or 39 of this small type that the gentleman spoke of.

Mr. GARDNER. A great many of them.

Mr. HOWARD. Would not the gentleman oppose the construction of that type of submarines that the experience of foreign navies has shown to be ineffective?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know. I am not on the Naval Committee. I have no doubt the committee discussed that question with the officers who appeared before it. I am not an expert. My mind is merely a crucible into which a lot of ideas have been poured, and I am trying to give you the precipitate in the cru-cible, but I do not know how to answer that question. If I had my mind made up on it. I should answer.

Mr. FARR. Does not the gentleman think these smaller boats could be used effectively in coastwise work?

Mr. GARDNER. We have such an enormous coast line that that may be true.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I have been interested in the question whether the Government should construct these ships in Government yards or in private yards. Whatever be our policy, we at least should not cripple the private yards to such an extent that we could not utilize them.

Mr. GARDNER. I agree with the gentleman absolutely. We should be careful not to cripple the private yards, but I consider that such an emergency exists at the present time as makes it imperative for the Government to be given the power of compulsion. I should give everybody a square deal, but I should get things done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood the gentleman immediately preceding you to say that there had been authorized under the present administration $960,000,000 for the construction of warships and war vessels.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know the figures. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman give us information as to how much has been appropriated for the purpose and used in the construction of battleships during this administration, and how many are completed.

Mr. GARDNER. No; I do not know. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many have been completed? Mr. GARDNER. There are only four ships, all destroyers, which have been completed that were authorized during this administration. The gentleman remembers that this administration came in on March 4, 1913. The first appropriation bill to be passed after that date was approved June 30, 1914. Of the ships authorized June 30, 1914, and since that time, only four have been put in commission. The Rowan, the Sampson, which is the one that had the collision the other day, the Davis, and the Wilkes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. The gentleman stated that it was his purpose to offer an amendment increasing the pay of the enlisted men, both in the Army and the Navy.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes Mr. OLDFIELD, W

Will the gentleman state how much he proposes to increase it?

Mr, GARDNER. In the Navy I am going to take Secretary Daniels's recommendation of $5 per month for each man. That will make the base pay of a third-class seaman $22.60 per month. A third-class seaman, which is the lowest paid grade in the Navy, now gets $17.60 as his base pay, against $15 for a private in the Marine Corps and $15 for a private in the Army. When the Army bill comes along I am going to try and raise the pay of the enlisted men in the Army. It seems to me that a man has a better opportunity in the Navy than in the Army,

Mr. OLDFIELD. What would it cost at the figures the gentleman has given?

Mr. GARDNER. The Secretary figures that the Navy increase would amount to $3,600,000 additional per annum. schedule of pay for the Army, which goes all through the branches of enlisted men, figures out over $25,000,000 more per annum than the existing schedule.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Does the gentleman think that will obtain a sufficient number of men?

Mr. GARDNER. I am quite confident of it, if we shorten the period of enlistment. The time of the gentleman from Massa-The CHAIRMAN.

chusetts has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have reserved the greater portion of my time, and at the conclusion I purpose to reply to some things that have been said which I do not wish to say now. I yield an hour and a half to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] for the use of himself and those to whom he may wish to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for I have and 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in view of the statement just made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] that he would furnish to the committee some informing and accurate data in answer to the many misleading, inaccurate, and reckless assertions you have just listened to from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN],

I will not now take time to further discuss the same. At the conclusion of my remarks I will insert a table showing the vessels ordered during the term of every four-year administration, commencing with the year 1901, including the present, and showing the number of vessels completed during each administration and the percentage of work done on those not completed. A mere glance at this table will refute fully the views entertained by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], and will clearly demonstrate that the record of achievements under the present administration constitutes far more than the mere basis of a favorable comparison with that of previous administrations. Unquestionably too much time has been given in the past for the completion of naval vessels, and these long delays in deliveries have probably occurred under every administration since 1901, and before that even. Now the important question for this Congress to settle is how to avoid these delays in future.

The sincerity of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] in registering complaints against what he terms long delays in the building of ships for our Navy is open to serious question, since he now stands ready to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to give to private shipbuilders a time limit of from 48 to 52 months to build capital ships in, although these same companies assured him, and the other members of the committee, before the authorization for such ships was given, that they could be built within 38 months, and if a bonus was offered an earlier completion could be had. He is also now willing to give these same shipbuilders 42 months to build scout cruisers in, although the same parties assured us before the scout cruisers were authorized that they could readily build them in 32 months, and sooner if a bonus for speedy construction was provided. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten], at the last session of Congress, less than six months ago, with eight other members of the committee, filed a minority report in which it was asserted that both battle cruisers and battleships could be built in less than 30 months, and scout cruisers in less than 20 months, and they strongly insisted that these maximum time limits should be fixed by Congress in making the appropriations for such ships, so as to insure the building of them speedily and within the limits of time so prescribed. Yet he and the others, who signed such report so recently, are now demanding for the shipbuilders 48 to 52 months for capital ships, and 42 months for scout cruisers, and at the same time are urging a large increase in the appropriations for such ships, even with the

The only explanation they offer for this sudden change is that the shipbuilders now claim that labor is so scarce that it is impossible for them, on this account, to promise earlier construction. I beg to remind these gentlemen that these same shipbuilders informed the committee last year that their plants were being worked to full capacity and that labor was then just as scarce if not more so than now.

The Bethlehem Steel Co. owns the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., of Quincy, Mass., and the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco Col. cisco, Cal; and these two plants together now have from four to five thousand more laborers than they had last year, when they gave assurances to the committee that the maximum time which they would require for the building of capital ships would be 38 months. The other shipbuilding plants have certainly as many, if not more, laborers now than they had last year, when like assurances were made to the committee, and the Government yards have 5,000 more laborers than they had last year. These figures, which no one will now rise on the floor to dispute, show clearly that the claim of shipbuilders that scarcity of labor is alone responsible for their inability at this time to make good the assurance and promises which they gave the committee when the building program was being considered, is not substantiated by the facts. [Applause.]

The real, underlying reason is this: That shipbuilders are now enjoying an abundance of profitable private work, which can be completed in comparatively short periods of time, and they are anxious to get Government contracts, at the high prices now prevailing, with long-time limits, so that they can complete such contracts at their leisure when the European war over and normal prices and conditions return. Six members of the Naval Committee were so convinced that the facts above recited were true, we have felt impelled to dis-sent from the majority report and to submit herewith for your consideration some suggestions in the form of a minority report, which I earnestly invite your thoughtful and careful study of.

This is not the time for further discussing the academic question as to whether our Navy should be strengthened, both 1 as to material and personnel. This question was finally settled more than five months ago in this Congress by practically a unanimous vote, and a three-year building program adopted, carrying the largest appropriation ever voted for a similar purpose by any Government at one time during peace or war. Those of us who now dissent from the majority report are not seeking in any way to oppose or hinder the prompt carrying out of the three-year building program, so authorized by you on August 29, 1916. It is of the utmost importance, however, that judgment and discretion be used in spending the large appropriations which Congress is now willing to vote for the Navy, and inspired by this desire alone certain members of the Committee on Naval Affairs in their minority report endeavor to show by a recital of admitted facts that the completion of this three-year building program can be really hastened and a saving of both time and money accomplished at the same time. [Applause.]

I now ask your careful attention to this, the minority, report:

saving of both time and money accomplished at the same time. [Applause.]

I now ask your careful attention to this, the minority, report:

The undersigned members of the Committee on Naval Affairs dissent from the report, submitted by the chairman of the committee, in respect to the appropriations providing for three additional battleships, one battle cruisers, and three scout cruisers, to be built during the fiscal year 1918, and assign, in part, as their reason the following:

Four battle cruisers and three scout cruisers, authorized and appropriated for by this Congress at the close of its first session have not yet been let, and the Secretary of the Navy, in a letter on this subject to "The department has done its utmost in this connection about getting ready to build these ships, but finds that the private shipbuilders of the country are unable or unwilling to complete the program with any assurance of speed in completion, even at prices which the department regards as unreasonably high."

The report of the committee at the first session of this Congress pointed out and specially emphasized the Navy's imperative present need of these two types of ships, and the chairman of the committee, in a speech on the floor of the House, urged the speedy building of these ships to the exclusion of battleships. If there was necessity then for foreign powers are steadily increasing these types of vessels, which they already possess in considerable numbers.

The committee, in recognition of these facts and to insure the construction of these ships, has in the present bill recommended an authorized increase in the appropriation for each of said battle cruisers of from $3,000,000 to $8,000,000, and have further recommended an appropriation of $12.000,000 to $8,000,000, and have further recommended an appropriation of $12.000,000 to $8,000,000, and have further recommended an appropriation of $12.000,000 to $15,000,000 carried in the last bill, to enable the Secretary of the Navy to equip the Government to one with a subjec

An expert from the Navy Department estimates that the materials for a battle cruiser, which will now cost approximately $11,000,000, could, in normal times be bought for $6,000,000, and that the present cost of labor is-from 22½ to 30 per cent over normal times.

Officials of some of the shipbuilding companies stated that it would require 9 or 10 months to equip their yards for the building of battle cruisers, and that such equipment would entail an expense of about $1,000,000, and that at the conclusion of the European war this additional equipment would be worth about 50 per cent of the present cost for installation, since they claim there will then occur a horizontal drop in the cost of materials and the cost of building. They assign this as a reason for requiring the Government to include in the overhead charges demanded for the building of battle cruisers on the percentage basis, hereinbefore referred to, a special depreciation charge of $500,000. In other words, the Government must, as a penalty for the conclusion of the European war, pay shipbuilding companies who may now make contracts with the Government the sum of $500,000, which represents their estimated difference of the price of a permanent improvement built at this time and what the same improvement would cost if built when peace is restored.

Without undertaking to now set out in detail further facts justifying our dissent from the report of the majority of the committee, we beg to state that it is our opinion and judgment—

First That a postponement of appropriations at this time for the four additional capital ships and the three additional scout cruisers, carried in the present bill, will materially aid the Navy Department in providing the best possible terms for the construction of the battle cruisers and scout cruisers, which were authorized and appropriated for at the first session of this Congress, and are still uncontracted for.

Second. The delay in appropriating for the building of additional ships of the types of those now appropriated for, and uncontracted for, until the next Congress meets will result in a reasonably probable saving of many millions of dollars to the Government, and at the same time will probably insure an earlier completion of said ships than if now appropriated for and a long time limit thereby impliedly given for their completion.

will probably insure an earlier completion of said ships than if now appropriated for and a long time limit thereby impliedly given for their completion.

In support of these conclusions the following facts may be briefly adverted to, namely:

With the shipyards already overcrowded with Government and private work and all labor available for building ships being now worked to its full capacity, it is a mistake to largely increase the Government contracts to be let out until some promise of real competition by shipbuilding plants can be assured. This competition will be assured:

First. When the European war is concluded (and this is not beyond the pale of reasonable probabilities during the present year).

Second. When our navy yards are equipped to build any type of ships that Congress may order (and this may be accomplished, so the Navy Department advises, with the appropriation carried in this bill for such purpose, in the same limit of time that will be required for private shipbuilding companies to equip yards for the building of battle cruisers).

It will be noted that we have not dissented from that part of the bill carrying appropriations for additional destroyers, submarines, and other ships, contracts for the construction of which the Navy Department has heretofore been able to secure, and we suggest that if the appropriation for additional capital ships and scout cruisers is postponed until the next Congress meets the Secretary of the Navy can be authorized to prepare the necessary drawings and specifications for said ships, so that bids may be asked for thereon in time for the submission of the same to the first session of the next Congress, which can then make immediate appropriation therefor if advisable.

It may be interesting to call attention to the five-year building program which the President in his annual message at the first session of this Congress recommended and which the Navy Department then strongly urged. An examination of this five-year program will disclose that if appropriations f have been substantially complied with for the fiscal years of 1914. Int 1918.

In conclusion, we will state that the bill as reported simply follows the authorizations provided for in the bill passed about five months ago by this Congress and does not undertake to provide a building program for any emergency. If a real emergency should arise, the Government would at once commandeer all navy yards and would wholly change the building program authorized in the bill passed at the first session of this Congress, and by thus assuming control of all private shipbuilding yards and devoting the same to the building of Government ships the completion of any building program required would be largely hastened, and it would be a serious mistake to have contracts outstanding whereby the Government had impliedly assented to a time limit of 48 months or more on some of its capital ships and 41 or 42 months on its scout cruisers. Even if there should exist in the minds of some ground for apprehending that emergency legislation may be required, this but suggests the wisdom of the recommendations hereinbefore made, so as to prevent committing the Government to contracts that would not be completed within the limit of time required.

Mr. Chairman, the report speaks for itself, and if there be

Mr. Chairman, the report speaks for itself, and if there be any Member of this House who desires to question the accuracy of the facts therein set out, or the correctness of the conclusions drawn therefrom, we stand ready to substantiate the same by proof of an indisputable character, we think.

If the exigency is such as to now demand speedy construction of ships, which you in August last authorized, then the President should by this bill be given authority in his discretion to commandeer private shipbuilding and supply plants. He should also be provided by this bill with all necessary funds and clothed with full discretion as to the spending of such funds in the construction of the three-year building program and such additional naval small craft as to him may seem necessary. If this power is conferred on the President, the objections raised by the minority report will have been largely met and you will thus have probably well and best insured the speedy construction of the types of ships now most urgently peeded to give proper balance and real afficiency to contract the speedy construction of the types of ships now most urgently peeded to give proper balance and real afficiency to contract the speeds of the same and real afficiency to contract the same and real afficiency. gently needed to give proper balance and real efficiency to your [Applause.]

Even though the President is clothed by this bill, and I think he should be, with authority in an emergency to commandeer private shipbuilding and supply plants and is supplied with funds sufficient to build speedily any and all vessels authorized in the three-year program above referred to, and such additional small naval craft as he may determine, it is still supremely important, by way of providing for the possible contingency of such emergency authority not being exercised, that there be written into this bill, by way of amendment, some directions that will insure first the building of battle cruisers and next a maximum time limit of not exceeding 38 months for the com-pletion of any ship herein appropriated for. No one will ques-tion what naval experts now advise as to the importance of adding battle cruisers to our fleet, even if it results in temporarily postponing the further building of battleships, and certainly no one will seriously question the justice and reasonableness of insisting that private shipbuilders, when given ship contracts, shall complete such vessels within 38 months.

Notice is now given that when the paragraph providing for new construction is read I will endeavor to insure the observance of the above suggestions by proposing two amendments, as follows:

Amend, on page 58, line 13, by inserting, after the word "each," the following proviso: "Provided, That no money herein appropriated shall be expended in the construction of any vessel unless the period of time for the final completion of said vessel shall be fixed at not exceeding 38 months."

Amend, on page 58, line 13 by inserting, after the word "each," the following proviso: "Provided, That no money herein appropriated shall be expended in the construction of battleships until contracts shall be first made for the construction of the battle cruisers herein appropriated for."

If these amendments should not be adopted, I will at the proper time offer a motion to recommit and thereby seek to have the appropriations now carried for two battleships so changed as to provide for the construction therewith of 15 additional destroyers and 12 additional submarines. Both of these types of vessels will add to the efficiency of the fleet and will be speedily available if an emergency arises. We also know the Secretary can secure contracts for their completion within a reasonable time.

The motion to recommit will read:

Strike out all appropriations for two of the three battleships now carried in the bill and insert in lieu thereof appropriations for the construction of 30 destroyers instead of 15 and for 30 submarines instead of 18, the type and cost of such additional destroyers and submarines to be the same as those now carried in the bill.

The conditions at present make it signally appropriate to substantially repeat what was said by me when this Congress approved at its last session the large naval program, which we are now providing further appropriations to carry out:

"In the preparation of this and the previous bill we have not been unmindful that Congress, in providing for our Navy, should consider any potential dangers from without that ad-dress themselves to the calm judgment of reason, yet we have not undertaken, and I hope we never will, to prepare for national aggression, and so long as our preparedness is impressed with the character of self-defense, as opposed to aggression, there can be no merit in the argument that we are drifting into militarism. All recognize that an adequate Navy is the best bulwark of our safety if the time should ever come when necessity and might become the supreme law. Yet our people have never, and I hope will never, give assent to that declaration attributed to Lord Nelson in the years gone by to the effect that "a line of battleships is the best negotiator in Europe."

"Our country looks with confident hope to the time when peaceful argument can be relied upon in the settlement of national differences, and it is significant that representative citizens from every section now discuss in serious and hopeful vein the probability, after the close of that almost indescribable struggle across the ocean, that the nations of the world by common consent establish along practical lines some tribunal to which differences can be referred for advice and determination, subject to the final approval of the nations involved. There is now a continuous appropriation of $200,000, which may be expended at the discretion of the President, in calling an international conference looking to this end. "It is but a recognition of that human truth that to strike a blow in wrath is simply the operation of passion, but to manfully restrain national passion, even under provocation, is the result of human reasoning. If civilization means anything be-sides the mere technical achievement, it is self-restraint, and the degree it is practiced is the measure of our real culture. It should be practiced by nations as well as by individuals.

"And in the building program of the future, while it must be always sufficient for adequate defense, may we always re-member that a Navy more powerful than is necessary for defensive purposes might invite its abuse and might prove, instead of a protection, a menace to the peace of the world and to our own liberty. Surely none of us will ever want to see our country in the rôle of an international bully. Let us hold to those traditions we have always been taught and which enjoin on us to always set the world an example in the love of liberty and peace and in the ways of justice and fair, dealing in all our relations with others.

What a nation does exclusively for themselves passes away; what they have done for the world remains. For a nation to place all people of all lands under a debt of conscious obligation, because of her real service to humanity, for that nation to send forth light from her high places to illumine the earth, to realize within herself that real righteousness which exalteth a nation, to champion the cause of justice, and to sacrifice the glory of conquest for the right of universal peace—this is indeed to conquer the world, and happy are they who can play a part [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following as an answer to statements made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]

"Statements have also been made during the discussion of this bill reflecting upon the rapidity with which work has been pushed upon ships authorized in this administration, one favorite allegation being that no ship authorized in President Wilson's administration will be completed before his present term expires. In this form this statement, I think, is incorrect, as a number of the vessels authorized in this administration will be completed before the 4th of March, 1917.

"As regards capital ships, not only for this administration but for all other administrations, this statement is correct, and for a very simple reason. Each administration begins on the 4th of The first Congress of the administration assembles in the following December. The first naval bill of an administration is passed some time in the following summer, or some 15 months after the administration begins. The result is that from the first authorization of a capital ship to the expiration of an administration is about two years and nine months only, and this time is inadequate to prepare plans, advertise, award contracts, and complete the construction of a capital ship.

"As a matter of fact, progress that has been made on ships authorized in this administration and the prospective progress between now and March 4, 1917, compare very favorably with that of preceding administrations.

The table below shows the number of vessels authorized during the first two years of the present and the three preceding administrations, and their average percentage of completion at the end of the administration, the percentages being estimated as regards the work under the present administration between now and March 4 next.

"The table below gives a list of all vessels, both authorized and completed, during one administration since the administra-tion beginning March 4, 1901. As before, the completion esti-mated during this administration is estimated, but there is no reason at the present time to doubt the accuracy of the estimates:

"Particular stress has been laid in some statements upon the fact that vessels being built directly by the Government are much behind sister vessels being built by contract, it being stated, for instance, that the Mississippi and Idaho, being built by contract, are 100 and 200 per cent ahead of the sister vessel New Mexico, being built at the New York Navy Yard. This is another case of figure juggling. When these three vessels were authorized by Congress, it was directed by the law that one of them should be built in a navy yard. The navy yard, New York, was the only yard fitted at that time to build battleships, and the single ways at that yard were already occupied by an earlier battleship—the Arizona. It was necessary to get this battleship launched and out of the way before the construction of the New Mexico could be undertaken. Hence the New Mexico was started some six months later than the sister vessels being built by contract. At the time she was started her sister vessels—using the methods of the critics—were some thousands per cent ahead of her, instead of a puny one or two hundred. On May 1, when the

New Mexico's keel had been laid some six and one-half months, and that of the most advanced sister vessel over 15 months, the total percentage of completion was 59 in the case of the latter and 26 in the case of the former. The other sister vessel-the Mississippi-which had been under construction only a little over a year, was 44 per cent advanced.

"As a matter of fact, at the present time work on the New Mexico is being pushed to the limit. This limit is fixed at present by the number of men available in the shipfitting trades. Many more men could and would be worked if the prevailing scarcity of skilled labor did not prevent them from being obtained. Though it has not been possible to obtain sufficient men to work shifts upon this vessel, certain shops are being worked night and day, and upon the ship itself the single shift available is being worked overtime at materially increased expense wherever it will facilitate speed.

"The truth is that the backward status of the New Mexico, as compared with the Mississippi and Idaho, is due primarily to the requirement of the law that she should be built in a navy yard when the ways were already occupied. Since laying the keel, her progress compares favorably with the progress of sister vessels for the same period, and she is now gaining on the latter.

"The Shaw, building at the Mare Island Navy Yard—the first destroyer to be constructed in a Government navy yard is progressing thoroughly satisfactorily, and there is no reason to doubt that she will meet her estimated date of completion, which is January 1, 1917, or only a month or two behind the date for completion of sister vessels building by contract. This is not a bad showing for the first Government-built destroyer where material had to be shipped to the Pacific coast, 3,000 miles away.

"The critics are still repeating the story that England had 20 submarines completed in the United States last year in five months. They do not give the facts, which are that 10 submarines were assembled for England in Canada and 10 built in the United States. The time was not 5 months but 10 months, and these submarines were duplicates of an old class of small submarines built for the United States, which the critics now allege are worthless.

The submarines being built for the United States are very different boats, and much superior. The submarines authorized two years ago vary from 56 to 63 per cent in their completion, with the exception of the Schley. The fact that on May 1 the Schley was only 121 per cent completed is the foundation for the allegation that, as regards the submarines authorized in 1914, 'some of these ships are 5 per cent completed.' The Schley was contracted for a good deal more than a year ago, the contract date of completion being March 19, 1918, and the contractors express confidence in completing her by their contract date.

"Quite as rapid progress has been made by the Wilson administration as under any former administration. This, too, in the face of the fact that to-day every shipbuilding yard is overcrowded with work; it is difficult to secure material, and it is impossible to obtain enough skilled labor to carry the three shifts which the Secretary of the Navy has been endeavoring to put at work to hasten construction. Under former administrations it was easier to obtain material quickly, there was a surplus of labor looking for work, and it was much easier to rush work than under present conditions. Democratic prosperity has done many good things, but the demand for skilled labor has made it impossible to secure enough labor to enable that quick construction which the Navy Department is doing everything possible to secure.

"It may be interesting to here state that Mr. Foss in 1907, while chairman of the Naval Committee, stated on the floor of this House, as will appear from the Congressional Record, that the battleship Nebraska had been building more than six years and was only then nearing completion, and that many of the other ships building were then more than two years over contract time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves the balance of his time. He has consumed 40 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to yield my time to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Roberts]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the Republican side has used an hour and a quarter, one-half of the time allotted to them, and we expected naturally that the other side would use as much time.

Mr. OLIVER. How much time have you used?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. An hour and a quarter-one-half of our time. You have used about 43 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think if we meet at 11 o'clock in the morning we might as well rise, anyhow. We are going to meet at 11. That is already fixed.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632) and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 9533, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Monday evening at 8 o'clock. I think we can finish it clearly at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, ordinarily I would have no objection to that, but just at this moment I do not think I could agree to make anything the exclusive business of the Senate at any particular moment for any considerable length of time. understand the request embodies the idea that nothing else shall be considered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will withdraw that part and just make it a special order for Monday evening.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There may be matters arising of very vital importance, and it may be very advisable-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I withdraw that portion of the request. ask that the request be submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the request now?
Mr. SHAFROTH. The request is for unanimous consent that House bill 9533, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That, the Chair understands, is what the Senator from Mississippi objected to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I understood that there was coupled with that that nothing else should be considered. He objected to that portion of the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, just what will it be?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall object if that is left out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that House bill 9533, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will ask unanimous consent that nothing else shall be considered that evening, I have no objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can give that personal consent, but we have just heard the objection made by the Senator from Mississippi. He will not consent to it if that is made a part of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let the Senator incorporate that in his motion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; that can not be done. That is the difficulty. A call for a quorum would end the session if any business would interfere with it, and the Senator would not be willing to consent to that. This is a bill which has been before the Senate now for more than six months, and I have been trying time after time to get it up for consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Why does not the Senator move to take it up during the day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because we can not get time during the day. Here is an appropriation bill before us now the consideration of which is going to last longer than Monday night. I can not get the bill through except in this way. I ask that the motion be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado moves that on Monday evening at 8 o'clock what is commonly known as the Porto Rican civil government bill be made the special order of the Senate. It requires a two-thirds vote. [Putting the question.]

On a division, the motion was not agreed to.

WILLIAM LOWELL HILL.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, I desire to ask for a recommittal to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the bill (S. 7288) providing for the appointment of Chief Boatswain William Lowell Hill as a commander in the United States Navy. It is a report I made from that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending-June 30, 1918,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, when we laid aside the agricultural appropriation bill yesterday afternoon we had under discussion the appropriation for the investigation of diseases of the pecan. I wish to explain that appropriation, The question was raised as to why the amount had been increased, and it seemed confusing on the face of it.

On page 19 appears the appropriation-

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits, $76,415: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

On page 25 there appears-

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the methods of fruit growing, harvesting, packing, storing, handling, and shipping, etc., $112,200: Provided, That $14,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation and improvement of the pecan, and methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of same.

Then, on page 55-

For investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards and nuts, $83,380: Provided, That $9,600 of said sum shall be available for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan and method of control of same.

It appears by adding those specially provided items the amount exceeds $20,000, which it does, but the present law provides that $3,000 under the first head shall be used for pecans. We simply add $5,000 on the first page. For cultural investigation the present law allows $4,000, and we added $10,000. For the last item, under the Bureau of Entomology, the present law allowed $4,600 in reference to the pecan, and we added $5,000. So the real increase over what was specially provided last year is exactly $20,000.

Mr. JONES. I do not understand that it is an increase over the last appropriation, but the question is what the appropriation is in this bill. I understood yesterday that it was really the idea of the committee to appropriate $20,000 for this specific

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is exactly what was the specific purpose, in excess of what was specifically provided

Mr. JONES. Of course, that is quite different. The House apparently made no special appropriation for beginning the investigation for which this bill, as a matter of fact, appropriates over $30,000 for this special investigation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Including last year's appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. JONES. Last year's appropriation has already been

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, I understand. Mr. JONES. This does not incorporate that. This appropriates $30,000 additional.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it does not. There is now provided in the bill $14,000 for that specific work.

Mr. JONES. In what bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In the old bill and in this. Mr. JONES. Yes; in the old bill. That is an appropriation distinct in itself, and now you appropriate $30,000 more.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We do not. Let me explain it to the Senator. The Agricultural Department sent a letter. I will just read the letter and then the Senator will understand thoroughly just what we have done:

It is evidently the purpose of these amendments to provide for an enlargement of the investigational work of the Bureau of Plant Industry on the diseases of the pecan and the improvement of pecan varieties and cultural methods, and for the work of the Bureau of Entomology on the investigation of insects affecting the pecan by providing increases for these three lines of work as follows—

Now, here is the table:

Bureau of Plant Industry, present annual expenses, pecan diseases, investigations, $3,000.

Proposed increase, $5,000.

Mr. JONES. You propose to appropriate $3,000 and then $5,000 more.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Surely.

Mr. JONES. That makes $8,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was speaking of the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. JONES. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senate committee amendment does not appropriate $8,000.

Mr. JONES. It says $14,000 of this sum shall be used for that purpose

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There was already $3,000 set

Mr. SMITH of south Carolina. There was already $5,000 set aside by the department for this special work.

Mr. JONES. And this is $14,000 more. You have included that $3,000 in this $14,000, for that was a separate appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is a lump sum, out of which for this special investigation $3,000 will be set aside, whether this $8,000 is appropriated or not. We simply specialize it; we take the $3,000 which was appropriated last year, and which will be used again this year under the general terms of the bill, and make it specific. So the Senate committee only raised the amount that is going to be used anyway $5,000, in the first instance, plus $3,000. The department have indicated to us that they are going to use half of the amount provided for in this general appropriation; they say they are going to use

Mr. JONES. Out of the lump-sum appropriation for the current year the bill sets aside a certain sum for the investigation of the pecan. This bill takes care of the next current year, independent of the present current year, and this item, as I understand it, has nothing to do with the present current year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me call the Senator's attention to this language:

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits, $76,415.

If the Senator will notice, he will see that we have merely raised that $5,000, the House having appropriated $71,415.

ask the Senator to examine the bill on that point.

Mr. JONES. That does not make any difference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, The point I am making is that the Secretary of Agriculture says that out of this general appropriation for the diseases of orchard and other fruits he has set aside and will set aside out of this $76,415, as he did last year, $3,000. There were subsequent facts brought to his attention that justified him in recommending to us that the Senate committee increase what the House had allowed in the lump sum by $5,000 in the first instance, in order that there might be $8,000 available for the pecan investigation.

Mr. JONES. For the next year?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; for the next year.
Mr. JONES. So that the amount we are appropriating, then, for this purpose is that full amount; it is in addition to the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have not disputed that. Mr. JONES. That has nothing to do with this appropriation.
Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am simply saying that the Senate committee has not increased the total amount $30,000.

Mr. JONES. I am not talking about that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was the bone of contention

Mr. JONES. What I am talking about is that the committee is setting aside for the pecan industry for the next current year

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is what it is doing; but it has not increased the general appropriation by $30,000.

Mr. JONES. I am not talking about the general increase. What I am trying to get at is, What has been set aside for the pecan investigation? Are you taking of the lump-sum appropriation $30,000 for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We have taken the $11,000

We have taken the $11,000 available this year, and have added $20,000 for the pecan industry, making $31,000 in all. That is exactly what we have done.

Mr. JONES. You are setting aside over $30,000 for the pecan industry for next year, and taking it out of this lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but we have not increased the House provision by $30,000; and that was the point Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. as to which I was confused in my mind. I did not know just exactly what the Senator from Washington was trying to get

Mr. JONES. What I am trying to get at is the exact amount we are setting aside, especially for the pecan industry.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is correct; contention was made yesterday that the Senate committee was increasing the amount $30,000. It had only increased it $20,000, but had made a specific appropriation of $31,000, as the Senator

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Secretary of Agriculture has a right, out of the lump-sum appropriation, to set aside $3,000, why has he not a perfect right to set aside $8,000 of the appropriation and simply increase the amount appropriated? That would be the proper way to do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I beg pardon.
Mr. SMOOT. If the Secretary of Agriculture has a right to set aside $3,000 for this purpose, under the provisions of the bill he can set aside $50,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Surely he could; but he ought to use his discretion in the expenditure of a lump sum.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly he ought to use his discretion. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There are other things that need to be looked after. He could only, in justice to those other objects, set aside $3,000, and that is what he has done. That is perfectly clear. Mr. SMOOT. I am not saying what he will do; I am saying what, under the provisions of the bill, he could do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, surely, he could refuse to spend any of it, for that matter.

Mr. SMOOT. What I am trying to get clear here, if the Senator will permit me, is, if the Senate committee had increased the appropriation from $71,450 to $76,450, that would have been an increase of $5,000, and there would have been no necessity of inserting the proviso here-

That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Suppose the Senate committee, as suggested by a Senator near me, thought it was wise to specify the particular plan, which it did, because of the peculiar conditions, which I do not think it necessary to take up the time of the Senate to explain, what then? A new disease has occurred. This industry is growing by leaps and bounds; it is getting to be a very important one. They have now discovered that by a new process of grafting they can take the paper-shell pecan and graft it on to the little common stock, and in a year or two they will have a tree bearing the finest nut, as against waiting for six years' maturity if the seed are planted. These are things of importance to us. It is coming into the realm of our oil-bearing fruit. It is essential for those who have millions of dollars invested to know what is the best method by which they can increase this wonderful production of American horticulture. We thought that it was proper, as this is a new disease which has arisen, to specifically divide this appropriation and put these specific amounts where they would do the most good, and, exercising our judgment, we did it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator in just a minute. Mr. President, these appropriations are made for specific purposes; that is, the appropriation of $8,000 is for the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits. The Secretary of Agriculture has no authority whatever to use the money for the purposes mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina. He has a right under this bill to expend it for investigating diseases of orchard and other fruits. Then, on page 55, he is given authority to make an investigation of insects affecting the pecan. That has nothing whatever to do with what the Senator has just said the appropriation was for. Then, I notice here an amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to this very bill

For investigation and improvement of the pecan industry and eradication of diseases peculiar thereto, $25,000.

That, of course, has not yet been adopted, and I do not know whether or not the Senator from Texas expects it to be adopted; but the only appropriation that there is in this bill for the investigation and improvement of fruits is found on page 25.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there is no use of the Senator from Utah trying to belittle this matter. The Senate Committee on Agriculture certainly had sense and judgment enough to know that in connection with the question of improvement would also be involved the question of grafting and of diseases. If the Senator knows anything about the hickory tree or knows anything about this particular nut-bearing tree, he knows also that there is a little worm that in the spring cuts off the fruit-bearing ramifications or the branches that bear the fruit. There is also a disease of the tree not caused by an insect, but a disease in the tree that affects its life, its circulation. That is a question of such importance to this country that we, in our judgment, thought we should follow the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and should appropriate the $20,000 and divide it between these three important items in order that the whole question might be specifically provided for.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah does not want to belittle the appropriation made in this bill for the in-Mr. President, the Senator from Utah does not vestigation of the diseases of orchard and other fruits, which, of course, would include the pecan; nor does the Senator from Utah want to belittle the appropriation for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan; but the Senator from Utah noticed that both of these items-and no one will suggest that there should not be an appropriation for these purposes-amount to the same sum that is appropriated on page 25 of the bill for the investigation of methods of harvesting, packing, storing, handling, and shipping; in other words, there is $10,000 appropriated for this purpose, only $5,000 additional to what the department had last year for the investigation of the diseases of the pecan, and $5,000 for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On page 25, did the Senator read the word "growing"? That is the most important feature of "growing" is the most important feature of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it includes "growing." Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The investigation of methods

Mr. SMOOT. It is the most important feature. feature that the Government ought to interest itself in is to try to show the pecan grower how to eliminate diseases of the tree and how to eliminate insects affecting the tree. I do not think we ought to appropriate money to investigate packing, storing, handling, and shipping. I think that is going too far

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That comes under the general head of "growing," and that is what we had reference to. Now, let me ask the Senator from Utah, is he opposing the appropriation? We are appropriating millions of dollars for the improvement of corn seed; we are appropriating millions of dollars for the improvement of different food crops; and this is right along the same line. It is a rich food crop. The Senator from Utah, I think, had an amendment on one of these bills appropriating money to treat diseases of wild ducks on a lake in Utah. I want to know who is going to get the ducks?

Mr. SMOOT. But we did not have any appropriation for investigating how to kill them or how to ship them or how to take care of them or how to pack them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I presume we were merely getting ready for all that.

Mr. SMOOT. That appropriation was made to eliminate dis-The Senator from Utah does not object to any appropriation that will tend to teach the farmer how to get rid of a disease affecting a tree or to teach the farmer how to get rid of insects, just as appropriations of millions of dollars have been made for the eradication of the boll weevil.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. These amendments are placed in the language and at the places suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture. We have exactly followed his recommendations I have his letter in my hand, and I will reupon the subject. peat that we took his exact language and his exact recommendations and followed them.

I agree with the Senator in one respect. I do not like the way these bills are made up; but we are not in a position to change them at this session. If we act at all, we have got to act under the old plan. It is my purpose to take up with the Secretary of Agriculture during the coming vacation, if we have a vacation, the possibility of some system of consolidation and doing away with what seems to be a scattering method of appropriation.

If the Senator will yield to me for just a moment further

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We determined, for illustration, that $300,000 ought to be appropriated to fight the disease of the white pine. That was recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture; but instead of putting that into a general appropriation, we specified that he must use it for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. That was proper.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then we concluded that $20,000 more, in addition to the $11,000 that is being spent under the existing appropriation, could with propriety be spent upon the pecan tree. We had an appeal for an additional appropriation to study the problems of grafting. I do not think it will be a continuing appropriation. I think they will soon complete that work; but the department has expressed a desire for such an appropriation and also for $10,000 to handle a new disease which has made its appearance in the pecan tree. The pecan industry is one that is growing rapidly. It is being found that pecans can be raised successfully in cold climates wherever the hickorynut tree grows. At first I was indisposed to help, but after conferring with the department I became satisfied that it was a wise appropriation, and I will read the Senator just what the Secretary said.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it has been read, and I think perhaps the Secretary was correct in it; but what I want to call attention to is this: The Secretary of Agriculture called this matter to the attention of the House, and the House did not think it was necessary to put in these words, specifically naming pecans, and I do not believe it is necessary now. If the Senate Committee on Agriculture desires to increase the appropriations, well and good, and as long as the Secretary of Agriculture says that he wants the increase for that purpose, why, let him have the increase. Let him decide as to whether this increase should be spent for this particular purpose.

I say that for this reason: Suppose we appropriate the $20,000 and specifically say that it shall be spent for this purpose, and for no other purpose. Conditions may arise under which it would not be necessary to spend that amount of money. I think the Secretary of Agriculture ought to have the authority, and he has under the increased appropriation in a lump sum; but in this way he would have no authority to spend the money for any other purpose than is named in the proviso. I think it is a poor way of legislating.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we did not wish to give the additional $20,000 unless it was needed for this purpose. We would not have increased the appropriation except for this particular purpose; and if the Secretary finds he does not need it for this purpose then we expect him to turn it back into the

Treasury

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, that may have been the case; but here on the very first item you have increased it $5,000 and instructed him to use $8,000 of it for this purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because he already uses $4,000 for this purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. No; $3,000. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three thousand dollars, as shown by his classification of expenditures. He asked for the additional sum to be used for this purpose, and he asked us to do it in this language-I read from his letter:

Page 18, line 16, strike out "$71,415" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "$76,415: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan."

That is the very language of the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. I see it is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, we were willing to give him the additional $5,000 for this purpose, but not for any other. We thought he had enough for the other purposes, but if he needed this sum for this purpose we were willing to give it to

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the House thought he had enough without the increase.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When we know what we want it for, I think it is always wise to tell him to use it for what we want it for. I really take just the other view from that suggested by the Senator, and I think he has, usually-that if we know what we want money spent for we had better tell them to spend it for that purpose than to turn it loose indefi-

Mr. SMOOT. That is true wherever the whole amount of a lump sum can be segregated; but in this amendment we take $3,000 that has been set aside already out of a lump sum by the Secretary of Agriculture, add to that $5,000 upon his recommendation, and then take it out of a lump-sum appropria-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will allow me one minute, I will state that that matter was subsequently brought to the attention of the Senate committee after the bill had left the House. It was not brought to the House committee, but was brought to us as a pressing emergency. That is the reason why we authorized this specific work, under the advice of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator will find also that we have in a number of other places, from large lump funds, specified that certain parts should be used in a certain way. For instance, we determined that it was desirable to make some sheep tests in Idaho, and we said, as to the lump sum: "Provided, however, That a certain amount of this shall be used in this way," because we wanted it used in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is perfectly correct where it is a new item entirely, as, for instance, in the establishment of the sheep investigation in Idaho. I think $12,700 was the amount provided in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. BRADY. Twelve thousand seven hundred and eighty dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. Twelve thousand seven hundred and eighty dollars. I forgot the $80. That is a new item entirely. The appropriation is increased just that amount, and I think that in that case it ought to be specified, and that the committee did perfectly right. But here it is entirely a different proposition.

However, I shall say no more about it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I believe that we understand this question, or, rather, we understand what the Senators think about it, and I suggest that we vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 19, beginning on line 7, the following amendment is proposed:

Strike out "$71,415" and the semicolon and insert "$76,415: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan."

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, there has been so much discussion about this item that I simply wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge a question relative to the real increase. As a member of the committee, after hearing all the discussion that took place before the committee, my understanding is that the intent of the committee was simply to increase this appropriation $20,000, and that in increasing the appropria-tion $20,000 we assumed the right and responsibility of specifying where the appropriation should be used. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is correct. Mr. BRADY. For that reason, Mr. President, I think it is only fair to say that the committee gave this item very careful consideration; and after discussing the matter it was the unanimous judgment of the committee that the appropriation should be increased, and that the money should be used as specified in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 10, to insert:

For applying such methods of eradication on control of the white-pine blister rust as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, including the payment of such expenses and the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, in cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations, or individuals as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, $300,000, of which $150,000 shall be immediately available; and, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, of the remaining $150,000 no expenditures shall be made until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purpose: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in the first line of that amendment manifestly the word "on" should be "or," as the Senator will see if he will look at it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I ask that that amendment be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to change the word "on" before the word "control," in line 11, to read "or," so that it will read "of eradication or control."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word about this amendment. This is the only really large increase that the Committee on Agriculture has added to the The evidence satisfied us that the white-pine House bill. blister rust had become a very serious menace to the white pine; that it had seriously injured them in the northeastern section of the country; and that it was spreading on toward the Mississippi. It was the opinion of the department that steps might be taken to prevent it from passing the Mississippi and to check it in its tendency toward the middle Northern States, and perhaps even lessen it in the Northeastern States. While and perhaps even lessen it in the Northeastern States. While the appropriation is large, we believed that the importance of the subject justified it, and it was the unanimous decision of the committee that this large appropriation should be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. As I have taken a very great interest in this matter, it is extremely gratifying to me that the committee has made so liberal an appropriation. There are two hundred and sixty millions and more of white pine in this country that are threatened with destruction. We know what has happened to the chestnut trees, and had we taken that matter in hand as vigorously as it is proposed to take this disease of the white pine, I am satisfied that we might have saved the chestnut trees of the country, but they are practically destroyed.

I am glad, Mr. President, that the amendment is in the bill and hope it will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT, The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 1, after the words "United States," to strike out "$75,010" and insert "$90,010: Provided, That not less than $15,000 of this sum shall be used for experiments in cotton-seed interbreeding," so as to make the clause read:

For acclimatization and adaptation investigations of cotton, corn, and other crops introduced from tropical regions, and for the improvement of cotton and other fiber plants by cultural methods, breeding, and selection, and for determining the feasibility of increasing the production of hard fibers outside of the continental United States, $90,010: Provided, That not less than $15,000 of this sum shall be used for experiments in cotton-seed interbreeding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 9, on page 23, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production, and the study of cereal diseases, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $176,505: Provided, That $40,000 shall be set aside for the study of corn improvement and methods of corn production: Provided also, That $20,000 shall be set aside for the investigation of the diseases of wheat, oats, and barley known as black rust and stripe rust.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply wish to ask the Senator having charge of the bill how long we have been making special appropriations for the study of corn improvement and methods of corn production?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I can not answer that question. I know the investigation is still in process of development.

Mr. JONES. What I desire to ascertain is whether or not this is the first time that a special amount has been set aside for that purpose. I do not remember having seen a provision of that sort before in the Agricultural bill. It may have been there; but in this item we take $40,000 out of the lump sum and direct that it be applied specially for that purpose. I should like to know whether this is the first time the provision has been that way, or whether we have been doing that heretofore.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In the report of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1917, on page 156, I observe that this work began in 1901. We have been setting aside appropriations for the purpose and the work has been carried on.

Mr. JONES. Does that mean that the work began then, or that we then began setting aside a specific amount for this purpose?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It seems from the text here that we have been setting aside a specific amount for the purpose, for it says that this work has been under specific experimental tests in different environments. It has been carried on in Nevada, Montana, Colorado, Nebraska, South Dakota North Dakota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, and New York. It seems, I will say to the Senator, that the department by this experimentation has discovered the very peculiar fact that in the case of corn bred, say, in the Senator's State and corn bred in a place some distance away, if the seed is interchanged it will not breed back to type; so that they have bred these varieties in the different environments in order to get the variety best adapted to each.

Mr. JONES. Is that the reason why we can not get any good corn bread any more?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I think the reason we do not get any good corn bread any more is because they really are not housing the corn before it is put on the market. It is husked in the open, allowed to stand out in the rain, and readily absorbs the moisture, so that a kind of deterioration sets in and you get a kind of a bitter, musty stuff.

Mr. JONES. I think if we had good corn we could get good corn bread when you find some one who knows how to make it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will visit me some time, I will give him good pone corn bread.

Mr. JONES. I wish the Senator would suggest something to the restaurant down here as to how to make corn bread.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I suggest that the Senator from South Carolina invite the entire Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will be delighted to do so. The reading of the bill was resumed, at line 10, on page 23. The next amendment was, on page 24, line 15, after the word "distribution," to insert "except within the district now covered thereby, in accordance with Bulletin No. 2, issued by the superintendent of the Northern Great Forest Section, Mandan, N. Dak., October 12, 1914," and, in line 22, after the word "purposes," to strike out "in the States of North and South Dakots, west of the one hundredth meridian and in Montane. Dakota west of the one hundredth meridian, and in Montana and Wyoming east of the 5,000-foot contour line," so as to make the clause read:

For the investigation and improvement of methods of crop production under subhumid, semiarid, or dry-land conditions, $160,000: Provided, That the limitation in this act as to the cost of farm buildings shall not apply to this paragraph: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the free distribution, or propagation for free distribution, except within the district now covered thereby, in accordance with Bulletin No. 2, issued by the superintendent of the Northern Great Forest Section, Mandan, N. Dak., October 12, 1914, of cuttings, seedlings, or trees of willow, box elder, ash, caragana, or other common varieties of fruit, ornamental, or shelter-belt in the Northern Great Plains area, except for experimental or demonstration purposes.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, at my request the Committee on Agriculture was kind enough to insert the same language that was inserted in the bill last year. I find, however, upon a close examination of the language which came from the House, that it is clearer than the provision which I asked to have substituted. I also find that there was a typographical error in the bulletin referred to. I therefore ask that the amendment of the committee, which is the amendment that I proposed, be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 8, after the word "countries," to strike out "$102,200" and insert "$112,200: Provided, That $14,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation and improvement of the pecan, and methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of same," so as to make the clause read:

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the methods of fruit growing, harvesting, packing, storing, handling, and shipping, and for experimental shipments of fruits within the United States and to foreign countries, $112,200: Provided, That $14,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation and improvement of the pecan, and methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of same.

The amendment was agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment to the so-called revenue bill

(H. R. 20573), and I ask that the same be read and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out line 4, page 11, and insert "Treasury notes."

Strike out lines 15 to 24, inclusive, on page 11, and lines-1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 12, and insert the following:

"That for the purpose of defraying the expense to be incurred in placing the Nation in a state of military and naval preparedness, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to issue on the credit of the United States not to exceed $500,000,000 of United States notes not bearing interest, payable to bearer at the United States Treasury, and of such denominations as he may deem expedient, not less than $5 each, to be paid to all who shall supply material to and for the Army and Navy of the United States of whatever character and description and in compensation therefor. That such notes shall be redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the Secretary on and after the year anno Domini 1935, and shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excises, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States of every kind whatsoever; and shall be also lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

LIQUOR-TRAFFIC PROPAGANDA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to the fact that a concern calling itself the United Press Association has been sending over the country free newspaper copy favoring the liquor interests. This copy is sent out under an envelope bearing the return address, "The United Press Association, Cleveland." The impression has thus been created that the famous association so familiarly known as the "United Press" is sending out this copy. The United Press has taken notice of the fact and has issued a statement which I ask to have the Secretary read. The proper name of the United Press is "United Press Associations," and the head office of this great organization is located in the city of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

EDITORS: The following is sent on advice of our counsel for your information and for publication if desired. In view of the fact that the liquor propaganda referred to above has been sent to many newspapers not receiving the United Press service we will greatly appreciate the publication of this disavowal.

W. H. HAWKINS.

NEW YORK, January 30.

A concern operating out of Cleveland, Ohio, is sending newspapers in the country a great deal of free copy favorable to the liquor interests. This copy comes in envelopes bearing the return address "The United Press Association, Cleveland"

The United Press Associations, with general offices in New York and bureaus in many cities throughout the country, is in no way connected with or responsible for the concern that is sending out this antiprohibition propaganda, and it has instructed its attorneys to institute proceedings to enjoin the methods which make it appear that the United Press Associations has abandoned its course of distributing only regular news matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is merely another illustration of the methods pursued by the liquor traffic in the endeavor to perpetuate its existence in this country.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 71) providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Saturday, the 3d day of February, 1917, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that Mr. Norton had been appointed as one of the managers on the part of the House in the place of Mr. Campbell in the conference between the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolu-tion, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 8090. An act granting the consent of Congress to Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River; and

S. J. Res. 203. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

House concurrent resolution 71.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Saturday, the 3d day of February, 1917, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make

Mr. KERN. I move the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June

The reading of the bill was continued to page 26, line 7. Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what results have come from the farm across the river here. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state that it is just one of the regular experimental farms on which the Government is making experiments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer the Senator from Washington that there has been one very important result achieved, and that is the Government has built a good road between the Potomac River and Alexandria, Va. That is a very valuable result.

Mr. JONES. As to Virginia, it is all right.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In the program of work for the fiscal year 1917 the department says in its note that the object is to maintain a field laboratory for the various bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture. This is owned by the Department of Agriculture. It began in 1900.

In general the land is being gradually improved and drainage systems extended. Additional areas have been rendered suitable and assigned to experimental work.

This is Government property.

Mr. JONES. I know, but what I wanted to get at is what results have come from the experiments over there.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suppose they have dis-tributed different seeds grown there adapted to different localities throughout the country. It is just like an experiment station in any State, they experiment as to the production of different seeds and distribute them. It comes under the general class of experimental work.

Mr. JONES. I know, but what I wanted to get at is, has anything concrete been brought to the attention of the committee that has resulted from experiments there that will be of benefit and has been of benefit?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No more than you would find from other experimental farms.

Mr. JONES. That does not give me the information. I am trying to find out what the results are on this farm.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think it can be discriminated somewhat from the other farms. As I understand it, the immediate men in the department here use this land, and they want the money for their own special experiments. Just how they find the results, I do not know; but the scientists in the department here use it not in connection with the State of Virginia but for their personal experimentations from time to time on every kind of subject that they are investigating and that they want to experiment with. That is my understanding of it. How they subsequently use the results of their experiments, I do not know; but they have asked for this appropriation for their personal work.

Mr. JONES. When the committee considers the Agricultural appropriation bill another time, I think it would be a good idea if they would go a little into detail and find out what particular good the people are getting out of this farm and from the twentyodd thousand dollars that we are expending yearly in connection with it. I have passed by the farm on the road that has been constructed to Alexandria, which, of course, is very nice for people wanting to go there. It shows that Virginia has some good roads, anyhow, even if we can not get connections to Richmond. I should like to know what good they have done for the corn grower, for instance. I notice that they have an orchard there. I should like to know what good they have brought out for the orchardists for this section of the country: whether they have been able to give them any advice that has been of benefit or whether they have developed anything there of benefit. I notice that they seem to grow wheat, and I think oats and grasses of different kinds. I wish to know whether they have done anything more there than the ordinary farmers around here are doing in the growing of fruit or in the growing of corn or wheat or oats.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator from Washington that all these matters are very easily ascertainable. We have set apart certain experimental stations throughout the country and we do not ask what is done specifically at one of them. The general result is for the benefit of the country at large. As I said a moment ago, the department is having different seeds propagated in different localities in order that they may be used advantageously.

Let me suggest to the Senator that he made that Mr. JONES. statement, I think, a little too broad. They do not determine anything about beneficial irrigation in the Yakima Valley or anything about production out in my part of the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will say to the Senator from Washington that there was brought out in the hearings before the House committee information on this very point. If he will turn to pages 192 and 193, I think he will be thoroughly satisfied. If he wants a specific report as to what has been the beneficial result, I will be very glad to interrogate the department upon that matter.

Mr. JONES. I want the Senator to understand that I am not suggesting that there have not been beneficial results, but I am trying to find out what they are, if there are beneficial results. If there are beneficial results, and I think there are, I should like to know what they are. That is what I am trying to get at. I was not intimating at all that there are not good results coming from this farm.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, all that information can readily be obtained from the bulletins issued by the department. I take it that the farm is being used and developed and cultivated to experiment with plants grown in this latitude. There are plants that would probably be experimented with here that would not suit the western country. It seems to me that for everything which can be grown in this latitude it is a very fine thing to have a farm here under the direct observation and supervision of the Agricultural Department. The work that has been done by it can be known by simply reading the bulletins that are issued, which cover the work on that farm,

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Mississippi knows that we do not have time to read all the bulletins and all the various documents that are gotten out by the various departments with reference to their activities. I thought that possibly the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, having special charge of this matter and special consideration of this bill, might have gone into it with some of the representatives of the department. They could furnish this information in much less time than I could get it by reading all the various bulletins. I should like to read them, and I know they are interesting, but I have not time to do it. Mr. BRADY. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. Certainly. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Idaho will allow me a minute, here are some of the facts:

Dr. TAYLOR. Item 99 covers the work at Arlington farm which, as the result of the enlargement of the area that has now become available for experimental use through the reclamation of the marsh land formerly unavailable for commercial use, requires improvement; and we need $7,500 for that enlarged area. There is about 60 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. How would you use that $7,500—for putting in tile drains?

Dr. TAYLOR. That will be used in draining and for some small buildings required for tools and that sort of thing.

He goes on to give the special reasons:

He goes on to give the special reasons:

The Chairman. How many buildings, just one or two?

Dr. Taxlor. I think only some tool sheds and such things. I do not know that a detailed estimate of those has been submitted.

The Chairman. It says here that your buildings are to consist of a cement reservoir to cost $3,000. That will leave $4,500 to put in tile drainage and buy your equipment.

Dr. Taxlor. That reservoir is needed for the water supply of the present improved portion of the farm. This building estimate covers the whole operation at Arlington farm.

Mr. Steele. Why is it that you can not raise fruit over there?

Dr. Taxlor. Fruit?

Mr. Steele. Yes.

Dr. Taxlor. Certain fruits succeed very well there, Mr. Steele. There is this, however, to be said with reference to the peach and other stone fruits that under tidewater and river bottom conditions in this middle Atlantic section fungus diseases are much more trouble-some.

He goes on to show how by spraying and by different experiments they found how to improve the orchards. Then he covers the different items that you will find in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House.

Mr. JONES. Is that information that fruit growers did not have before they commenced experimenting there? We have had information with reference to spraying fruit, and all that sort of thing, for a good many years in our section of the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Washington does not pretend to say that they are not improving the methods by which they are eradicating peach rot or the fungus that causes the peach to rot, when at maturity the peach suddenly develops a black rot which almost destroys the entire The old Bordeaux mixture attempted to correct that. They have improved the methods of spraying now so that you can eradicate it without picking over the tree carefully and destroying it. Each year they are improving the methods. Here is a fine place to investigate the matter locally and disseminate the information through like territory.

Mr. BRADY. If the Senator from Washington will permit me, I will say that it is the wish of the department to improve this experimental farm here near Washington for demonstrations under the direct charge of the Department of Agriculture.

Where we have an experimental station in Idaho or in Washington or in South Carolina the department finds they are too far away to test out certain plants or to make certain experiments, which they can do, however, if they have such stations in close proximity to the department where the work can be done. I have studied the matter very carefully, and I believe if the Senator from Washington will read the report of the Secretary of Agriculture he will be satisfied that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that general experiments here on the Arlington farm would be of any substantial benefit out in his country?

Mr. BRADY. I think they would in the broad sense. I will ask the Senator from Washington if he thinks that an experimental farm in Washington or in Idaho would have any specific beneficial effect on the District of Columbia?

Mr. JONES. I doubt it very much.

Mr. BRADY. Well, that is precisely the condition which exists relative to this farm.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator from Idaho agrees with me on that point, he agrees with me on the suggestion that the experiments here are of no special benefit out there. I do not say they are not beneficial here, but what I am trying to get at is what are the benefits that have come from this farm and in return for the twenty-odd thousand dollars that we are spending year

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] suggested that the officials here wanted to have their personal investigations and experiments. He did not mean that they were to be for their personal benefit, but for the particular work they had in charge they wanted them here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In order that they might personally see the work in progress

Mr. JONES. But what I want to get at now is, what do they tell us they have been able to accomplish there, if anything?

Mr. BRADY. It would take up too much of the time of the Senate to state to the Senator from Washington in full the report that has been made by the Secretary of Agriculture relative to the Arlington farm.

Mr. JONES. Could the Senator tell me one or two things Mr. BRADY. As the Senator from South Carolina says, they have demonstrated-

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator from Idaho tell me something different from what the Senator from South Carolina told me?

Mr. BRADY. I can only in a general way state that the purpose of the department is to make specific demonstrations on the Arlington farm, under their personal supervision, as to plants, trees, and shrubs, the utility of which to some other parts of the country has not been fully demonstrated.

Mr. JONES. Has the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry made any experiments that he has pointed out which have been of any benefit?

Mr. BRADY. I merely rose for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator in charge of the bill that, in order to get this information properly before the Senate and the country, he insert in the Record what the Secretary of Agriculture has to say relative to this particular item. As members of the committee, we do not have time to go into every detail of these matters, but we must depend largely on the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture relative to particular projects. I do not myself believe that the Secretary of Agriculture would recommend that we continue this experimental farm at Arlington did he not believe that it was of some specific benefit to the people of the country as a whole.

Mr. JONES. Of course if we go on that theory in making appropriations, and so on, we shall spread out almost everywhere and take almost all the money that we have in sight and all the money that is in prospect, for the department certainly make their recommendations; and if we simply assume that because they have made a recommendation great benefit will result, we might just as well say, "Well, whatever you send down we shall appropriate for."

I do not mean to suggest that they do not estimate for what they think they ought to have, and for beneficial purposes; but we have to pass on that to some extent also. That is the reason why I am merely asking for some information as to what is being accomplished by all this money that we are proposing to appropriate.

Mr. BRADY. I will say to the Senator from Washington that it is the earnest aim of the committee to secure all the information that we can before acting on particular items.

Mr. JONES. I know that. Mr. BRADY. Some of the Some of the members of the committee brought records to show us that the Government had given Washington, Idaho, and many other States of the West a hundred million dollars for the purpose of developing our irrigation resources.

Mr. JONES. Did the Senator say $100,000,000?

Mr. BRADY. Yes; $100,000,000.

Mr. JONES. When did they give us that?

Mr. BRADY. That was the record that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] brought in. I did not think it had been so much.

Mr. JONES. No; they have not given us that amount, and what they have given us we are paying back.

Mr. BRADY. We are paying every cent of it back.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amount given by the National Government has been $116,000,000, and it has gotten $6,000,000

Mr. JONES. I know that; but we are obligated for it all; we are going to pay it, and it will come back.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh!

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that on a project near my home town we have paid back to the Government over a million dollars already for money that was spent there, and every dollar of it will come back to the Gov-

Mr. BRADY. Idaho is paying back the money she received in just the same way, and we intend to pay it all back; but the point I wanted to make was that the Senators from the South do not have time to investigate every detail of the appropriations asked for by us. They have to depend largely upon our honesty and integrity that the money will be expended for useful purposes and will be returned to the Government, and I have no hesitation in saying that the people of the West will return the money

Very frequently on this floor it is charged that we are not going to pay it back-I do not mean the charge is made by any particular Senator, but every once in a while somebody says the money will never be paid back; but the Senator from Idaho knows it will be paid back.

Mr. BRADY. There may have been intimations of that kind, but I do not believe that any western man has any such thought, and I do not believe that the people of the East, when they are properly informed, will doubt for a moment that every dollar of this money will be paid back.

I might say, in passing, that the lands that have been re claimed are producing crops now that are worth over $20,000,000 a year, which, in a direct way, must necessarily be of benefit to the entire country. But the point I wanted to make—
Mr. JONES. If the Senator will permit me, I think his estimate is very low.

Mr. BRADY. I myself think it would be found to be over $30,000,000 if we could get the exact figures, but I think the last report of the Reclamation Service shows that it is a very large amount, and it will increase every year.

Returning to the Arlington farm-for we seem to have drifted away from the original subject-I was in favor of that provision, for the reason that I believed the recommendations that have been made by the Agricultural Department were justified. That farm may not be of any direct benefit to the people of Washington or to the State of Idaho, but I do believe it will be a direct benefit to the Nation, as a whole; and I am satisfied that the experiments which have been and are being conducted there have been made and are being made in good faith. Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not un-derstand that I am opposing this item or suggesting that it has not been made in good faith, or because it may not be of benefit to our section that the work ought to be discontinued. Nothing of that kind entered my thoughts.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator desires to strike out the item, I suggest that he move that it be stricken out.

do not care whether it is stricken out or not.

Mr. JONES. I have just told the Senator and the Senate that I have not even suggested that I am opposed to it. I am simply trying to get information; and if Senators are opposed to giving that information, or if because a Senator inquires for information they think he has some ulterior motive, of course we had better just not try to get it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think the Senator is right. In justification of the appropriation for this farm, and in answer to his question, I desire to read the conclusion from the testimony of Dr. Taylor before the House committee, so that the Senator may understand what is being done.

Mr. BRADY. That is what I should like to have done, and that was the purpose for which I rose.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I read from Dr. Taylor's testimony, as follows:

Dr. Taylor. No; there are certain lines of experimentation with reference to plant diseases and certain of them with reference to insects affecting plants in which certain plots are left deliberately unprotected and untreated in order to determine as quickly as possible the resistance of those several varieties to these troubles. For instance there is one block of seedling pear trees there under test. They have been grown by systematic crossing of relatively blight-resistant pears with our best pears, such as the Seckel, Bartlett, and pears of that type, which are planted there and left exposed to pearblight infection without attempting to protect them in order to determine through natural selection whether there is any one of those hybrids which is resistant enough and good enough to constitute a commercial pear that would be relatively free from blight. And in the case of the insect work, although that should be discussed by the Bureau of Entomology, certain blocks have been planted specifically with reference to the determination of their relative immunity or relative resistance to this attack, and certain of them also for the test of spray mixtures, to ascertain the strength and character of mixture that the tree would endure. It is felt better to risk trees that are owned by the department in these tests than it is to go into a commercial privately owned orchard and risk damaging the trees. The strength of those has to be determined somewhere by actual test, and a good deal of that is being done at Arlington farm. It does not represent demonstration work, and should not be so regarded. In fact, there is little of the field planting at Arlington farm that should be regarded as a demonstration of just how to do a thing. It is rather a testing place, an out-of-door laboratory.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that is something like what I was

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that is something like what I was trying to get at. I hope the members of the committee will not think, because I have been asking these questions, that I have intimated or that I have an idea that the committee is not doing its duty. Such a thing as that never occurred to me. I know that the committee can not inquire into all these different items. I know very well with reference to bills brought before committees of which I am a member that there are many things about them concerning which I do not know; but if any Senator not a member of the committee—and Senators must rely upon the committee for information—should ask as to any particular item about which I did not have information, or that the committee had not inquired about, it would be simply an incentive to look into that, of course, in the future. I want the members of the committee to disabuse their minds of any idea that I am intimating that the committee has not done its duty or that the committee is not disposed to do its duty, or anything of that sort. I have no thought of that kind at all.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 27, line 5, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$2,111,530" and insert "$2,441,530," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $2,441,530.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the next amendment of the committee, striking out the provision on pages 27, 28, and 29, for the "purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," including the amendment of the total on page 29, line 21, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the subhead "Forest Service," on page 35, line 8, after the word "Arizona," to strike out "$9,044" and insert "$8,044," so as to make the clause read:

Coronado National Forest, Ariz., $8,044.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 21, after the words "New Mexico," to strike out "$8,067" and insert "$6,067," so as to make the clause read:

Lincoln National Forest, N. Mex., $6,067.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 8, after "$6,165," to insert "Provided further, That the cost of any building erected at the nurseries on the Nebraska National Forest may amount to but shall not exceed $1,000," so as to make the clause read:

to but shall not exceed $1,000," so as to make the clause read:

Nebraska National Forest, Nebr., $1,165; and to extend the work to the Niobrara division thereot, $5,000: Provided, That from the nurseries on said forest the Secretary of Agriculture, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may furnish young trees free, so far as they may be spared, to residents of the territory covered by "An act increasing the area of homesteads in a portion of Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to use so much of any of the funds herein appropriated for the Nebraska National Forest as may be necessary to acquire by purchase or condemnation lands in Nebraska which he may deem necessary and suitable for nursery sites to be used for the purpose of growing trees for planting on the Nebraska National Forest. So much, not exceding $1,200, of any funds hereafter appropriated for the Nebraska National Forest for any fiscal year to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, as may be necessary, shall be available for the purchase of land now under lease and used as a nursery site for the Niobrara division of the Nebraska National Forest, $6,165: Provided further, That the cost of any building erected at the nurseries on the Nebraska National Forest may amount to but shall not exceed $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 6, after the word "act," to insert: "Provided, That hereafter, all moneys received on account of permits for hunting, fishing, or camping, on lands acquired under authority of said act, or any amendment or ex-tension thereof, shall be disposed of as is provided by existing law for the disposition of receipts from national forests, $66,100," so as to make the clause read:

Additional national forests created or to be created under section 11 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 963), and lands under contract for purchase or for the acquisition of which condemnation proceedings have been instituted for the purposes of said act: Provided, That hereafter, all moneys received on account of permits for hunting, fishing, or camping, on lands acquired under authority of said act, or any amendment or extension thereof, shall be disposed of as is provided by existing law for the disposition of receipts from national forests, $66,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 25, after the word forests," to strike out "$1,816,367" and insert "$1,813,367," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the specified national forests, $1,813,367.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 11 on page 45, the last paragraph read being as follows:

to line 11 on page 45, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $450,000: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 may be expended for the construction and maintenance of boundary and range division fences, counting corrals, stock driveways and bridges, and the development of stock watering places on the national forests: And provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent except he be traveling on business directly connected with the Forest Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized in and by this appropriation: And provided also, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President. I desire to ask the Senator

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he will not accept an amendment striking out the word "and," on page 44, line 23, and then, in line 24, inserting, after the word "places," the words "and the eradication of poisonous plants"?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then how would the sen-

Mr. SMOOT. It would then read:

Counting corrals, stock driveways and bridges, the development of stock-watering places, and the eradication of poisonous plants on the national forests.

I just want to make a statement to the Senator as to why I ask this. At least 5,500 head of cattle have been lost annually during the last three years from poisonous plants on ranges within the national forests. The value of the stock lost annually is approximately $300,000. The loss in my own State in 1916 was reported as 1,300 head. In some places on the forests they can be fenced. In other places it is absolutely impossible, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will say to the Senator that the department have indicated a desire for such an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I know they have, and I hope the Senator will accept it.

SMITH of South Carolina. That is all right; I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 44, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the second word "and"; and after the word "places," in line 24, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "and the eradication of poisonous plants."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 12, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$3,263,275" and insert "$3,260,275," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $3,260,275.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 1, after the words "Forest Service," to strike out "$5,711,075" and insert "$5,708,-075," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Forest Service, $5,708,075.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Chemistry," on page 49, line 6, after the words "Animal Industry," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the preparation for market, handling, grading, packing, freezing, drying, storing, transportation, and preservation of poultry and eggs, and for experimental shipments of poultry and eggs within the United States, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and the Bureau of Animal Industry, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 10, after the word "food," to strike out "$18,600" and insert "$14,000," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, and for experimental shipments of fish, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 18, after the word "organism," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof, including investigations of the physiological effects of such products on the human organism, $10,000.

Mr. NORRIS. As to this item regarding the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances, it is one estimated by the department at $15,000, passed by the House at $15,000, and the Senate committee reduced it. There was no investigation made by the Senate committee. I have had the matter called to my attention since the action of the committee, I have made somewhat an investigation of it, and it seems to me that the committee made a mistake. I believe that this particular investigation, while it is purely and entirely scientific, is of very great benefit in giving information, and will result in giving information of great value in regard to the various foods that should be given to animals.

It is a comparatively new proposition. The investigations are somewhat new. Some of the investigations that are being car-The investigations are ried on by this particular bureau are carried on nowhere else. They have already given some very valuable information in regard to a balanced ration for food for various animals. For in-For instance, they have given a great deal of consideration to the food value of the peanut. They have found that in one respect it has a food value superior to corn, and by using some of it in connection with corn it would make a balanced ration that would greatly increase the weight of any animal to which it was fed. They have made an investigation in regard to Kafir, sometimes called Kafir corn, that has added greatly to its use and to the information in regard to it. It is really in its infancy, and it seems to me that it gives to the feeders a scientific knowledge that they ought to have. This bureau proposes now to apply the information that they have gained in regard to the investigation of these various food products in actual experiments and in feeding cattle and hogs. It enables them to give information at various times to the farmers who are feeding various kinds of stock as to the fat-producing qualities, the weightproducing qualities of the various foods that they may utilize.

It seems to me, therefore, that we ought to disagree to this amendment. I hope therefore the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I agree with the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska, who is also a member of There has grown up quite a lot of useful knowlthe committee. edge in this matter. They have investigated and found that the extraction of oil from certain seeds and certain fruit does not affect the food value at all after the oil has been extracted. They are making these experiments, as the Senator pointed out, on peanuts. They experimented with cotton seed and found you might take the oil from it and it would not affect its food value at all. The experiments along this line are of wonderful benefit in that they will enable the farmers or the owner of the seed to first get the commercial value from a partial manufacturing process; that he can get the oil and then he can get the food value and the fertilizer value.

I am rather inclined to take the House appropriation, and so far as the acting chairman of the committee is concerned I agree that the amendment of the committee shall be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 4, after the word expenses," to strike out "$849,201" and insert "$829,601," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $829,601.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 5, after the words "Bureau of Chemistry," to strike out "$1,212,191" and insert "$1,192,591," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Chemistry, $1,192,591.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Entomology," on page 55, line 4, after the word "nuts," to strike out "$78,380" and insert "$83,380: Provided, That $9,600 of said sum shall be available for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan and method of control of same," so as to make the clause read:

For investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts, $83,380: Provided, That $9,600 of said sum shall be available for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan and method of control of same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 14, after "$89,400," to insert "of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $89,400, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 12, after the word expenses," to strike out "$519,250" and insert "$524,250," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $524,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 13, after the words Bureau of Entomology," to strike out "$926,480" and insert $931,480," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Entomology, $931,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 26, page 57, at the end of the items for the Bureau of Biological Survey.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to offer an amendment after line 26.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee amendments are first to be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What does the Senator from Alabama propose

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted to offer an amendment at this point, but I understand we are considering only committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will withhold it for the present. The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Biological Survey," on page 59, line 15, after the word "demonstrations," to insert "upon the lands of the United States," so as to read:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations upon the lands of the United States in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, and for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten, $395,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 23, after the word "them," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$12,560," so as to make the clause read:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of work, including cooperation with other Federal bureaus, departments, boards, and commissions, on request from them, $12,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 24, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$548,140" and insert "$545,700," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $545,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 25, after the words "Bureau of Biological Survey," to strike out "$594,510" and insert "$592,070," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Biological Survey, $592,070.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Division of Publications," on page 61, line 14, after the words "chief of division," to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$3,750," so as to Salaries, Division of Publications: One editor, who shall be chief of division, $3,750; one editor, who shall be assistant chief of division, $2,500; one chief clerk, $2,000.

Mr. BRYAN. I call attention to this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ought to be disagreed to. The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for salaries, Division of Publications, on page 62, line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$181,920" and insert "$182,-170." so as to read:

Two messengers or messenger boys, at $360 each; one laborer, $840; two laborers, at $600 each; three charwomen, at $480 each; three charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $182,170.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ought to be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, one page 63, line 6, after the word "films," to strike out "to educational institutions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit," so as to make the clause read:

For photographic equipment and for photographic materials and artists tools and supplies, $17,000: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as he may prescribe, to loan, rent, or sell copies of films, all moneys received from such rentals or sales to be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous

Mr. BRADY. I ask that that amendment be passed over for

hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this amendment is intended to give discretion to the department to loan these films to all parties who may apply. This seems to be a restriction in the bill.

Mr. BRADY. The bill as it stands without the amendment would permit the department to loan or sell the films to all

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I understood.

Mr. BRADY. The amendment which I propose to offer reads: Provided, That when films are loaned or sold, educational institu-tions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit shall be given preference.

I do not believe that we should restrict the sale of these films to educational institutions; but I believe it would be well to give them the preference over persons dealing in films for profit, who might rush in and purchase all the films that would be most desirable, and thus deprive the educational institutions of the privilege of securing any at all. At the proper time I propose to offer that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think by all means the educational institutions ought to have a preference. I am not quite sure that it ought not to be largely guarded so that irresponsible persons could not be considered at all. I am afraid the paragraph itself is not very well guarded.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me state to the Senator from New Hampshire that we investigated this matter thoroughly along the line of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Idaho; but it was our idea that certain films representing conditions would be educational, even where they were not sold to educational institutions or agricultural associations; that the general public would see them, and that to place this restriction upon them might seriously restrict the opportunities for education by a popular demonstration. The Sena-tor from Idaho gives notice that at the proper time, when we are through with the committee amendments, he will offer the amendment he suggested, and then the Senate can use its discretion in the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 63, line 19, after the words "Division of Publications," to strike out "$213,990" and insert "$214,240," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Division of Publications, $214,240.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Crop Estimates," on page 63, line 23, before the word "clerks," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "eleven" and insert "nine"; in line 25, after the words "at $1,000 each," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-four"; on page 64, line 2, before the word "messengers," to strike out "five" and insert "two"; and in line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$129,140" and insert "$122,880," so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, Bureau of Crop Estimates: One statistician, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000; 1 chief clerk, $1,800; 6 clerks, class 4; 9 clerks, class 3; 15 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 19 clerks, class 1; 19 clerks, at $1,000 each; 24 clerks, at $900 each; 2 messengers, at $40 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 2 messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 1 messenger, messenger boy, or laborer, $480; 1 charwoman, messenger, or laborer, $540; 2 charwomen, messenger boys, or laborers, at $360 each; in all, $122,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 12, after the words as follows," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the Monthly Crop Report shall be printed and distributed on or before the 12th day of each month.

So as to make the clause read:

General expenses, Bureau of Crop Estimates: For all necessary expenses for collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, and interpreting data relating to agriculture; for making and publishing periodically crop and live-stock estimates, including acreage, yield, and value of farm products, as follows: Provided, Tara hereafter the Monthly Crop Report shall be printed and distributed on or before the 12th day of each month.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee why that limitation is put into the bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Heretofore the printing of these reports was so retarded that they were issued sometimes as much as three months after the report was ready.

Mr. JONES. Did the committee take into consideration the matter of getting data from the far Western States that must necessarily go into the making up of these reports?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; and the department have that data at the time of the issuance of the report. What we desire to accomplish here is to insure the printing in case the matter is all in hand. According to our investigation, the delay heretofore has been unjustifiable, and we thought that as the printing was largely done by the department itself, they had in hand all the data needed for the purpose.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that all of the data that they usually include in one of these reports would be available so as to be put into the report and printed on the 12th of the month?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Then, I think this is a very good provision. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if that is the case, then the proposed amendment will not change the present situation. Every month there is a bulletin issued. I do not know that it contains all the information which the department may have, but there has never been a month in which there has not been a bulletin issued. This proviso reads:

Provided, That hereafter the Monthly Crop Report shall be printed and distributed on or before the 12th day of each month.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is what we had reference to—the crop report that we want for the month in order to know what was the condition for the month preceding. We wanted it so as to have the benefit of that information. If the report should come at the last of the month, what good would it be to us?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I have always understood that in the monthly bulletin all of the information which the department has is printed, and I suppose it would be so even under this proposed amendment; but does the Senator from South Carolina say that the department has had crop reports and withheld them from publication for three months?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it was on account of a confusion as to the printing. Some of the printing, as I undercontains as to the printing. Some of the printing, as I understand, was done at one place and some at another place. That caused the delay. The facts were brought out before the committee. I do not charge the department with intentionally withholding or delaying the printing of the report, but they had absolute discretion as to when it should be printed.

The result was that complaints came in to such an extent that we thought it wise to restrict it, and we had recommendations to the effect that the printing of the report should be restricted to not later than the 12th of the month. After all the facts were brought before us-with some of the causes of the delay I do not charge my mind—the committee felt justified in recommending the monthly bulletin which should be issued, giving the information as to the previous month, should not be later than the 12th of the next succeeding month. That recommendation was unanimously adopted, and the department thinks it will have the desired effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina must understand that I am not objecting to the amendment; I am simply saying that the bulletin is printed in one place, but the preparation of the material for the bulletin may come from different bureaus of the department.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We ascertained that fact, but the department has all of the material.

Mr. SMOOT. The delay may have been caused as I have suggested, and not because the bulletin has been printed in different places.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee was very careful to investigate the very point which the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] raised; that is, whether the publication of this report at that date would exclude certain data so far as it related to distant States, and we concluded that it

Mr. JONES. Does this printing refer to what is designated as the Crop Report?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It refers to that along with the bulletin.

Mr. SMOOT. This refers to the bulletin.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It refers to the bulletin as to crop conditions. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the data are gathered as of date of the 25th, so that the crop month runs from the 25th of one month to the 25th of another month, so we propose to give from the 25th of one month until the 12th of the next month for the printing. Most of the data, I will say, are gathered by telegraph.

Mr. JONES. I can see how there might occur under this provision what, as I understand, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] suggested. This amendment does not specify that the monthly report of one month shall be printed by the 12th of the succeeding month.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But that is what is understood.

Mr. JONES. I think that is the purpose aimed at, but I was going to suggest that if the department are behind in the printing of these reports three months when this law goes into effect, then they could bring that data out the next month and still the next month, and yet be three months behind all the time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the understanding as to this provision is that the report shall be printed as stated; that is the purpose of it.

Mr. JONES. But that will not be brought about by the language used in the amendment. Does the Senator think that under the amendment the department will do that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think so. Mr. JONES. If we made the language a little bit more specific, so that it would require the department to do just what they probably will do when the statement of the Senator is known, I think it would be preferable.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think this will cover it.

Mr. JONES. But when we put language in the bill to accomplish a certain thing, I think it would be better if we so framed the language as to require them to do what we expect to have done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 64, line 20, after the word "investigations," to strike out "$179,950" and insert "$175,872," so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, travel, and other necessary expenses of employees out of the city of Washington engaged in field investigations, $175,872.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 22, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$204,650" and insert "$200,572," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $200,572.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 23, after the words "Bureau of Crop Estimates," to strike out "$333,790" and insert "$323,452," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Crop Estimates, $323,452.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Library, Department of Agriculture," on page 65, line 3, before the word "clerks," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "seven" and insert "six," and in line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$33,060" and insert "$32,160," so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, library, Department of Agriculture: One librarian, $2,000; 1 clerk, class 3; 1 clerk, class 2; 5 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,080 each; 3 clerks, at $1,020 each; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 junior library assistant, messenger, or messenger boy, $720; 1 junior library assistant or messenger boy, $660; 3 junior library assistants or messenger boys, at $600 each; 1 messenger, messenger boy, or laborer, $480; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; in all, $32,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 15, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$22,000" and insert "$18,000," so as to make the clause read:

General expenses, library: For books of reference, technical and scientific books, papers, and periodicals, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series; for the employment of additional assistants in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for official traveling expenses, and for library fixtures, library cards, supplies, and for all other necessary expenses, $18,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what knowledge he has concerning the employment of messenger boys in the Agricultural Department? I observe running through the bill the term is used, "messenger or messenger boy," and the salary is fixed such as is paid messengers. In some of the other appropriation bills messenger boys are differentiated, and they are paid, I think, about $480. I will ask the Senator from Utah about that. Mr. SMOOT. They are paid $480.

Mr. GALLINGER. Running through this bill, I repeat, the term is used "messenger, or messenger boy."
Mr. SMOOT. Some of them are paid $720.

Mr. GALLINGER. With salaries at $720, $660, and so Worth. Does the Senator from South Carolina know how that is?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I really am unable to give the Senator any information as to that. In running over this bill we depended largely upon the other House and upon the hearings held there. We took some things in the bill for granted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, there ought to be uniformity, so far as we can reach uniformity in these different classes of employees. In the other bills of which I have had knowledge the messenger boy is separated from the messenger and is paid less compensation, as would be natural and proper; but in this bill the term is used "messenger or messenger boy," giving the salaries at about the figure that messengers are appropriated for.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It attracted my attention. I notice in the paragraph we have just had before us it says "messenger boy, or laborers, $480." I am not positive as to just what constitutes the messenger at a higher salary.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that the Agricultural bill is framed on a different basis as to salaries than other appropriation bills, and it always has been so. The salaries are fixed entirely independent of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The explanation, to my mind, as to these messengers and messenger boys has been that a certain class of them are boys who not only have their present occupation but who are pursuing a line of education looking to higher places in the department.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suspected something of that sort.

Mr. WARREN. But the Agricultural Department is founded upon a special law, and has grown up by itself. Senators will notice all through the bill that instead of all the salaries being fixed by classes 1, 2, 3, 4, and so forth, many of them are provided at so much each, and that there are different classes of salaries breaking the hundred dollars; for instance, salaries of $1,140, $1,160, and so on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment

is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The reading of the only was testing the next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture was, on page 65, line 16, after the word "library," to strike out "$55,060" and insert "$50,160," so as to make the clause read: Total for library, $50,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

to the value of the buildings?

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read down to the item on page 66, line 9, beginning with the subhead "Rent in the District of Columbia."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he knows what rent is being paid now for the buildings for the Agricultural Department, and does he know what percentage the rent the Government is paying bears

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, the Government is now paying $143,000 a year rent for buildings for the Agricultural Department. Just what per cent that is of the value of the buildings I am unable to tell the Senator; but that matter came before us, and we thought that it was not good business to be renting buildings when we own sufficient ground and have ample space for the use and convenience of the Agricultural Department. Hence, we put in the amendment which the Senator will see, beginning in line 13, on page 66.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Are the buildings now rented near the Agricultural Department?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; they are scattered all about.

Mr. VARDAMAN. All over the city?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; just like all other buildings rented by the Government are.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator states that he does not know the percentage of the value of the buildings that the Government is paying in rent?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know.

Mr. VARDAMAN. A year or two ago this question came up with reference to the Post Office Department, and in one instance it developed that the Government was paying 16 per cent on the value of the building it rented. It strikes me as very poor business, when the Government of the United States can borrow money for 21 per cent, to pay the enormous rental that is being paid for buildings. It does not look good on the face.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President— Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that there has been a joint committee already appointed for the purpose of investigating that subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. When was that committee appointed-a couple of years ago, was it not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator it was appointed in the closing days of the last session of Congress. That committee at present is making the investigation, not only as to the rent of buildings for the Agricultural Department, the floor space occupied, and so forth, but as to every other department of the Government. The committee hopes before long to have a report ready to present to Congress, with certain recommendations; and I am quite sure that the recommendations will be such, if adopted, as to do away with just such conditions as the Senator has cited.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, "'tis a consummation devoutly to be wish'd." I have never understood why the policy of renting buildings for Government use should have been inaugurated in the first instance. I can account for it upon one theory, and one alone, and that is to give somebody a profit upon an invest-The custom is discreditable to the good judgment of Congress, and if persisted in after the matter has been called to the attention of Congress, it reflects upon the integrity and good faith of the Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it was not many years ago that the Agricultural Department was housed in one building, but an appropriation was made for additional buildings, and two other buildings were constructed in close proximity to the original building. Now, it seems that that department has outgrown these three buildings, and is spending in rent $183,000 a year. If my mental arithmetic is not at fault, we could erect a $5,000,000 building and not pay any greater interest than that; and it does seem to me that we ought to have relief in this regard.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to state in this connection, that we do not need a $5,000,000 building; but Congress can provide for the erection of a building that will serve all purposes and meet all the requirements for a very much less sum. We can pretty nearly erect a building for the rental we pay per annum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President— Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to say, further, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that, so far as the growth of this department is concerned, that is gratifying to me. In the beginning this department amounted to very little. I have observed its growth with a great deal of interest, because I really think, as I have said so often heretofore upon the floor of the Senate, that the money invested in the development of agriculture brings a larger return to the American people than the money invested in any other department. I have noticed the increased production of land due largely to the progressive and intelligent aid rendered by the agents of this department. The farmer is learning to analyze the soil; he is learning to breed plants so as to more than double the production of the soil; in every way the condition of the farm is being improved, and farm life is being made more attractive to the people. I think it is a great work; and Congress can not do too much to forward that character of enterprise. As a matter of fact, we all understand that upon the products of the farm all the superstructure of commerce rests. It will be noted that when propitious seasons come and the farmer is able to properly till | utes p. m.

his soil, intelligently manage the affairs of his farm, there is plenty in his home, and from his fertile fields is gathered the wheat and the corn and the cotton and all the grain that feed and clothe the world, the railroads are running on schedule time with heavily loaded trains, the merchant collects his bills, the doctor is not forgotten, the humble preacher dons a new suit of clothes, and the lawyer gets his share. The banks are filled to overflowing with "somebody else's money," and the life-giving current of commerce rushes through the arteries of trade like the freshets from the mountain side. But paralyze the strong arm of the farmer, send a blight upon his crops, unfavorable seasons to hinder his efforts, the current of trade, dries up and the whole superstructure languishes and dies. It is well for the Congress to be prudent and economical, but to be niggardly in its appropriation for this department is a crime against all the people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Mississippi, but I want the Senator from Mississippi not to misunderstand me in regard to my suggestion about a $5,000,000 building. I meant to say that, if necessary, we could construct a building costing $5,000,000, and that it would not cost the Government any more than to pay the amount of rent it is now paying.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understood the Senator thoroughly. It was just an illustration to show the mistake we are making by pursuing this policy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and what I think an extravagance. Mr. VARDAMAN.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; I so understood the Senator. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the amendment put in this bill by the Agricultural Committee. Already certain plans and specifications have been prepared for what is to be known as the "middle building." The two new buildings of the Agricultural Department were erected when Mr. Wilson was Secretary of Agriculture. The idea at that time was to erect two buildings as wings and to construct the middle or the main structure between the two. The Committee on Agriculture thought that they would appoint members of the committee to investigate and see what could be done, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, and report to Congress not later than December, 1917, in order to get rid of this intolerable condition of paying $150,000 a year rent-

Mr. GALLINGER. The amount, I think, is $183,000. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For buildings, when we have ample ground, and the plans have already been prepared for an additional building. It would be infinitely better for the Government to issue bonds and to erect adequate buildings than to go on renting scattered buildings all over the city, causing inconvenience to those who desire to visit the departments, necessitating their running all over the city and to go into all sorts of nooks and corners in order to get information which they desire. I hope this amendment will stand, because it provides for a specific committee, charged with a specific work, which has already in a sense been undertaken. The committee will be enabled to do the work and to report to Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to suggest to my friend the Senator from South Carolina, who doubtless will be on the committee, if one shall be constituted, that I trust the committee will make a very careful investigation of the floor space now occupied by the three buildings which we do own, with a view to determining whether the space might not be economized. There is a disposition on the part of every department to have possession of as much space as they can possibly get, and I have some knowledge, I think, of certain instances where more space is being occupied than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to that. I shall certainly investigate it, if I am a member of the committee.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 1 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.). The hour having arrived at which, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States the two Houses are to assemble in joint session, the Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to listen to an address by the President of the United States. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms and headed by the Vice President and its Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 2 o'clock and 20 min-

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered to the two Houses of Congress in joint session is as GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: The Imperial German Government on the thirty-first of January announced to this Government and to the governments of the other neutral nations that on and after the first day of February, the present month, it would adopt a policy with regard to the use of submarines against all shipping seeking to pass through certain designated areas of the high seas to which it is clearly my duty to call your attention.

Let me remind the Congress that on the eighteenth of April last, in view of the sinking on the twenty-fourth of March of the cross-channel passenger steamer SUSSEX by a German submarine, without summons or warning, and the consequent loss of the lives of several citizens of the United States who were passengers aboard her, this Government addressed a note to the Imperial German Government in which it made the following declaration:

"If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether."

In reply to this declaration the Imperial German Government gave this Government the following assurance:

"The German Government is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German Government believes, now as before, to be in agreement with the Government of the United States.

"The German Government, guided by this idea, notifies the Government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

"But," it added, "neutrals can not expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interest, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality, and the German Government is convinced that the Government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the Government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been vio-

To this the Government of the United States replied on the eighth of May, accepting, of course, the assurances given, but

"The Government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the Imperial German Government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the United States and any other belligerent Government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction. In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it can not for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other Government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint: absolute, not relative.

To this note of the eighth of May the Imperial German Government made no reply.

On the thirty-first of January, the Wednesday of the present week, the German Ambassador handed to the Secretary of State, along with a formal note, a memorandum which contains the following statement:

"The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente-Allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central Powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intentions of the Entente-Allies give back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

"Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the Eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc. All ships met within the zone will be sunk."

I think that you will agree with me that, in view of this declaration, which suddenly and without prior intimation of any kind deliberately withdraws the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of the fourth of May, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honour of the United States but to take the course which, in its note of the eighteenth of April, 1916, it announced that it would take in the event that the German Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare which it was then employing and to which it now purposes again to resort.

I have, therefore, directed the Secretary of State to announce to His Excellency the German Ambassador that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire are severed, and that the American Ambassador at Berlin will immediately be withdrawn; and, in accordance with this decision, to hand to His Excellency his passports.

Notwithstanding this unexpected action of the German Government, this sudden and deeply deplorable renunciation of its assurances, given this Government at one of the most critical moments of tension in the relations of the two governments, I refuse to believe that it is the intention of the German authorities to do in fact what they have warned us they will feel at liberty to do. I can not bring myself to believe that they will indeed pay no regard to the ancient friendship between their people and our own or to the solemn obligations which have been exchanged between them and destroy American ships and take the lives of American citizens in the wilful prosecution of the ruthless naval programme they have announced their intention to adopt. Only actual overt acts on their part can make me believe it even now.

If this inveterate confidence on my part in the sobriety and prudent foresight of their purpose should uphappily prove unfounded; if American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understandings of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the Congress, to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas. I can do nothing less. I take it for granted that all neutral govern-ments will take the same course.

We do not desire any hostile conflict with the Imperial German Government. We are the sincere friends of the German people and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the Government which speaks for them. We shall not believe that they are hostile to us unless and until we are obliged to believe it; and we purpose nothing more than the reasonable defense of the undoubted rights of our people. We wish to serve no selfish ends. We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and in action to the immemorial principles of our people which I sought to express in my address to the Senate only two weeks ago, seek merely to vindicate our right to liberty and justice and an unmolested life. These are the bases of peace, not war. God grant we may not be challenged to defend them by acts of wilful injustice on the part of the Government of Germany!

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill,

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Rent in the District of Columbia," on page 66, line 13, after "$143,689" to insert: "Provided, That a joint committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate, appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker of the House, is hereby constituted, who shall investigate the amount of floor space required by the Department of Agriculture for its various activities in the city of Washington, the annual rental now paid by the department, the land available for the erection of Government-owned buildings to meet the needs of the department, together with the cost of erecting the same, and report to Congress not later than the first Monday in December, 1917," so as to make the clause read:

Rent of buildings, Department of Agriculture: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture, $143,689: Provided, That a joint committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate, appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker of the House, is hereby constituted, who shall investigate the amount of floor space required by the Department of Agriculture for its various activities in the city of Washington, the annual rental now paid by the department, the land available for the erection of Government-owned buildings to meet the needs of the department, together with the cost of erecting the same, and report to Congress not later than the first Monday in December, 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he thinks this proviso is necessary, in view of the fact that another committee has already been appointed for the investigation of the very matter covered by this amendment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me make this suggestion to the Senator: This committee would not in any way interfere with the other, and might be helpful if its attention were devoted to just the one specific work. There is no appropriation for anything. It costs us nothing; and we might be able to aid you in expediting the very work for which your committee is appointed generally. I think it would be helpful rather than

Mr. SMOOT. I should not like to have the two committees make separate investigations and two reports. It seems to me that one committee ought to make a report covering the whole subject matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What progress has the other committee made?

Mr. SMOOT. We have made a great deal of progress. We now have floor space mapped out, and the work is going on every day. The amount of rents paid has been tabulated, of course. The question that is being considered now is as to the space in the buildings occupied by different departments, and who are occupying more space than is absolutely necessary for the employees they have, and who have not enough.

I will say to the Senator that there is some feeling between the heads of the departments as to floor space in many of the buildings. Take the State, War and Navy Building: There is not complete accord there. It is going to take some time to make the investigation, and some time to decide upon where is the best location, and what it is going to cost the Government, and about what the buildings will cost; also, to show whether it would be profitable to us, on the basis of 3 per cent interest per annum, to erect all the buildings necessary.

I wish to say that I have no doubt in my own mind, as far as

I wish to say that I have no doubt in my own mind, as far as the investigations have gone, that when the report is made we are going to get rid of the renting of a great many of these segregated buildings all through the District and have Government buildings erected. They will be fireproof; they will be better arranged; the employees will be better taken care of, and I believe at less expense to the Government of the United

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does not the Senator think it would expedite matters if the Senate sees fit to adopt this amendment and this committee is appointed, when our work will be restricted entirely to an investigation by the Agricultural Committees of the two Houses as to the needs of the Agricultural Department, and, as I suggested before the recess was taken, some progress has already been made looking to the matter of floor space and the proper housing of the Agricultural Department on our own ground?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if the Agricultural Committee of the Senate feel that it is necessary, now that the attention of the committee has been called to the fact that another committee has already been appointed, I shall not object.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it would expedite matters, and I do not see where there would be any conflict; and it would help meet a condition that has come specifically to our attention.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Agricultural Committee has been appropriating now for several years large sums of money for rents. We appropriate this year $126,000 for rents.

Mr. SMOOT. One hundred and forty-three thousand dollars. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One hundred and forty-three thousand dollars for rents—$20,000 more. We simply thought we were not justified in voting that appropriation when we had the ground all around the building, when half that amount would pay the interest on vastly better buildings; and we thought we would like to look into that branch of the question, anyhow. This department is separate from the other departments and it has its land there. We have plenty of land.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if an appropriation were made to-day to build the central building between the two wings that have already been built for the Agricultural Department, there would be sufficient room there to house properly, and in a first-class way, all of the employees of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Our committee felt that we would be glad to look into this matter, too; and of course any committee that is appointed will cooperate with the other committee.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have no desire whatever to interfere in any way with the committee that is now at work securing information along the same lines that we expect to secure under this amend-I was under the impression that this committee of three Members from the Senate and three from the House was to be appointed from the membership of the Agricultural Committees, with the thought of working out some plan that would be proper and beneficial for the Agricultural Department. When that is done I believe it will be well for this committee to report to the larger committee, of which the Senator from Utah speaks, and let you have the information we secure. But the members of our committee feel that something should be done relative to this particular department for the purpose of lowering, as much as possible, the expenses of that department, and that is the reason why this amendment was placed in the bill by the committee. It was adopted unanimously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator in charge of the bill inform the Senate what percentage of these appropriations is paid to employees in the city of Washington? I ask the question because I notice that this is the only appropriation bill which carries lump sums and provides that out of those lump sums there shall be paid not a stated amount but an authorization given to the Secretary of the department or head of the bureau to pay employees in the city of Washington. I notice on the next page:

For farmers' cooperative demonstration work outside of the cotton belt, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $578,240.

In almost all other appropriation bills, I will say to the Senator, all the employees in the District of Columbia are specifically provided for and named in the bill and the rate paid to them, and the lump-sum appropriation is for general expenses attached to the department or work outside the limits of the United States. But I notice all the way through this appropriation bill there is allowed a lump-sum appropriation to employ persons in the District of Columbia. Has the Senator made any investigation into that matter?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know what the relative-per cent of the employees in the city is to those outside. I only know in a general way that very often there is a transfer from the District to field work, that when one becomes thoroughly competent to do the work according to the regulations of the department he is transferred to field work outside the city. I would imagine it would be a very hard matter to arrive at any way of fixing the status of clerks and the salary of employees of the department in this city in relation to those in the field, because it works both ways. I know that in certain cases after they have had field experience they are transferred here, and it is impossible for me to give information even as to the relative number.

Mr. SMOOT. I can plainly see that the number employed in the field can not be provided for specifically; but it does seem to me that we do know what the clerical work in the department here in Washington will be, and we ought to provide that that clerical work shall be done in the District of Columbia, and a specific appropriation made for so many clerks, so many messengers, so many laborers, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suggest to the Senator that the difficulty there would be that in the rapidly expanding work of the department you could not provide any such fixed appropriation for those who are employed here.

Mr. SMOOT. We do it in all the other departments.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the nature of the Agricultural Department perhaps, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] pointed out this morning, is different from practically any other department we have. We are continually adding to the Agricultural Department functions that a few years ago we did not dream of, and in the administration of the different bureaus and departments that we have added to it, it is necessary for them to have, now at least, a lump sum, so that they may transfer employees here to the field or vice

In this connection I wish to say to the Senator, for fear I may be misunderstood, that I am not an advocate of this lump-sum system. It invites an easy road to the expenditure of money that may not be warranted, and I will join the Senator and others in the Senate in trying to have specific appropriations rather than a lump sum, which leaves it to the discretion of some head of a department to use it as he may see fit.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is perfectly right in that, because anyone who has had any experience at all with lump-sum appropriations by our Government knows that the most extravagant use of public funds comes through lump-sum appropriations. The heads of the various departments and bureaus would never think of spending money as they do if it was specifically provided for, but as long as it is in a lump sum, no report being made, it comes easy and goes easy, and there is the most extravagant expenditure of the public money in that way.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator knows as well as I do that it would be a stupendous task now to begin to weed out and fix the salaries of these employees; but it is a matter which calls for our attention, and I think when we come to the preparation of the next appropriation bill we should serve notice on the House that if they do not take up the work the Senate proposes, as far as it is able, to reduce it to a clear understanding of what we are doing.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question relative to the clauses of the bill he has just been discussing. He is, as we all know, certainly well advised on these matters of legislation. I was a little surprised to hear him make the statement that there are included more of these lump-sum appropriations in this appropriation bill than in any other appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that in nearly all the other appropriation bills we cut out such items. The Committee on Appropriations has required that the clerks and employees shall be named specifically, and, whether they are clerks, messengers, stenographers, chief clerks, or under any other designation, the appropriation describes their status and their work. As I said the other day in asking that such a provision be stricken out of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, there is a tendency all the time to get this very wording into the appropriation bills. Then, if the department getting a lump appropriation want 10 clerks, they go and get 10; if they want 20, they go and get 20; and sometimes, if they think they need 30, they will go and get 30. I am speaking now of employees in the District of Columbia. When they are specifically provided for we can say to the head of a department or bureau, "Where are you going to place these employees, and what are they going to do?" but in the case of a lump-sum appropriation the committee can not do that.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator feels that that tendency has been greater in the Agricultural appropriation bill than any other appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any doubt about it at all; and I was very glad to hear the acting chairman say that before the next Agricultural appropriation bill is finally drafted he is going to take up the question and see himself if these employees can not be specifically appropriated for.

Mr. BRADY. We have tried to accomplish the very purpose the Senator suggests. I hope that the Senator in charge of the bill will be able to accomplish something along that line.

Mr. BRYAN. It seems to me that the paragraph under discussion, giving a lump-sum appropriation, appropriates the amount required by law to be spent under the Hatch-Morrill Act in each State for agricultural experiment stations.

Mr. SMOOT. I spoke of the item on page 68 and referred to the item on page 69, "for farmers' cooperative demonstration work outside of the cotton belt."

Mr. BRYAN. That may be open to objection, but the items on pages 67 and 68 are not. I did not know that we had reached the item on page 69.

Mr. SMOOT. I referred to the item on page 69; and not only that, but, I will say to the Senator, all through the bill I have noticed provisions of the same character. I simply wanted to call attention to it, and I am satisfied with the statement made by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. But it does not apply to the items on pages 67

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the appropriation of $10,000 for the experiment station in Alaska is all that is estimated by the Secretary of Agricul-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. JONES. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether this appropriation of $10,000 to be "immediately available for the location, equipment, and maintenance of an agricultural experiment station in the Matanuska Valley" is a sufficient

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Secretary so stated.

Mr. JONES. He thinks that is all that is necessary?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I will say that I am very glad, indeed, to see this provision in the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, under the subhead "States Relations Service," on page 71, line 9, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$39,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the relative utility and economy of agricultural products for food, clothing, and other uses in the home, with special suggestions of plans and methods for the more effective utilization of such products for these purposes, with the cooperation of other bureaus of the department, and to disseminate useful information on this subject, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, one page 71, line 16, after the "expenses," to strike out "$2,976,580" and insert "$2,-972,580," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $2,972,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 17, after the words "States Relations Service," to strike out "$3,111,600" and insert "$3,107,660," so as to make the clause read:

Total for States Relations Service, $3,107,660.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 72, line 20. Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. Line 19 reads, "Seven laborers, messenger boys, or charwomen, at $480 each." Does that mean that the Secretary can employ seven charwomen or seven messenger boys or seven laborers, or does it mean that he can employ seven of each class? Or does it mean if he employs seven charwomen he has no money then for laborers covered by that item?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will say frankly my attention has not been called to that item, because, as I said before, this matter was carefully gone over by the House.

Mr. JONES. I recognize that it is the House text.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator will see that under the language, "seven laborers, messengers boys, or charwomen," it may be that at certain times he will want to employ some laborers and then he may want to employ some messenger boys or charwomen. He is restricted to the total number of seven for the year. He can employ but seven, but he is given a discretion during the year as to whom he may employ. He can not go above seven with this amount appro-

Mr. JONES. Then he might-it is mere supposition-employ seven charwomen one month, seven laborers another month, and seven messenger boys another month.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; as the necessities of the case might require.

Mr. JONES. But is it not true that where they need charwomen they need them all the year? I suppose that there is about the same amount of work all the year around that charwomen are supposed to do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not advised as to that. presume the department fixes it as the necessities require. I think they would have a certain latitude.

Mr. JONES. I think probably this was gone into a little while ago. If it was, I would not ask the Senator a question again, but it strikes me that this bill in connection with employees of this kind is framed a little differently from the other appropriation bills. Now, why is that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know whether the Senator was present when the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] called attention to it. It is framed not so much after the manner of the ordinary statutory roll but has reference to day laborers. You will see a fractional part of a hundred dollars, for instance, four hundred and twenty and eight hundred and forty, as the Senator from Wyoming pointed out. That is because they figured it upon the cost of the day labor that they would employ from time to time, and not as a salary upon the ordinary basis.

Mr. JONES. That is the reason why you put this indefinite provision in here as to the class and character of the employees? Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is the case.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to page 73, line 14.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he can tell me whether the Bureau of Roads has reached any definite conclusion as to what are the best methods of constructing roads in the different sections of the country?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As I understand it, they are now engaged in that very work. The good roads act was only passed last year, but previous to that the department had taken up the work. They are issuing bulletins giving expert advice as to the best method of constructing roads in different parts of the country. For instance, in the case of the sand and clay roads they have developed a plan by which the sand and clay road is perhaps made the most durable in the world by mixing a certain degree of moisture with sand and clay and see ing that the bed is thoroughly drained, and then by coating it with sand and clay. I have had a little experience with that myself. Under the auspices of the department they have issued bulletins of standard sand and clay roads and a standard macadam road, giving advice after experimentation over here at Arlington.

Mr. JONES. Have they reached a point in their experimental road building where they can say to the people in the State of Illinois, for instance, a certain character of road building is the best for your section?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not advised as to that. I think they have experimented to a point where they do not absolutely say this is the best, but that it is the best at this stage of our investigations. I know they have changed something of the constituent elements in the manner of preparing the sand and clay road, but it looks to me very much like there will not be any further improvement, because it stands the wear and tear of very heavy vehicles and also the extraordinary wear and tear of automobiles.

Mr. JONES. So the Senator would think that they have about reached the end of expenditures along that particular line?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think so, I think in a very few years perhaps it will be standardized and scarcely anything more will be required.

Mr. JONES. I understand that this bureau has been experimenting in building roads for a good many years. What I wanted to get at was whether they had gone so far as to be able to determine in this or that section of the country as to what class of road building was best adapted to that section.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Within my own knowledge, to speak affirmatively and speaking in reference to my section, they have, I think, about standardized the sand and clay road.

I agree with the point the Senator is getting at. He wishes to know when the experimentations along lines capable of standardization will stop so that we can for all time rest upon their findings. I think we are approaching that.

SUBMARINE WARFARE.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to tender a resolution? I ask unanimous consent to adopt a resolution. It will not take one minute. There will be no debate and no objection. It is merely to get information.

Mr. SMITH of South, Carolina. I have no objection if it does not call for debate.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not allow any debate if there is objection. It is merely to obtain a document for the information of the Senate. May I have the resolution read at this time and ask unanimous consent that it be adopted?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 349), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State, if not incompatible with public service, transmit to the United States Senate a correct copy of the message and accompanying memoranda from the Imperial Government of Germany advising of the resumption of submarine warfare against the neutral and other countries of date February, 1917.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not want to be technical, but does not the Senator from Illinois think "public interest" would be better than "public service"?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, Mr. President, if the Clerk will be so kind as to substitute the word suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, "public interest." I thank the Senator. I ask that the resolution be changed and I ask for unanimous consent to adopt the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none, and the resolution is agreed to. Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

CONSTRUCTION OF BATTLESHIPS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I think when the resolution is read it will be seen that it is very important.

The resolution (S. Res. 348) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish the Senate a statement showing the present status of the appropriation of $6,000,000 made in the act of August 29, 1916, known as the naval appropriation bill, which authorized him to improve and equip the navy yards at Puget Sound, Philadelphia, Norfolk, New York, Boston, Portsmouth, Charleston, and New Orleans for the construction of ships at such yards, giving amount expended and to be expended at each yard, and the conditions at each of those yards for building the ships heretofore ordered to be constructed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he does not think, in lines 8, 9, and 10, on page 73, the inquiries on the part of the department are too limited? The word "management" is used and the inquiry is to be made in regard to systems of road management. From the Senator's discussion a moment ago I infer that road con-struction is the thing the department has been doing, that it has been investigating methods of road construction.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator will find that the next paragraph reads:

For investigations of the best methods of road making, especially ordinary sand-clay and dirt roads, and the best kinds of road-making materials, and for furnishing expert advice on road building and maintenance.

Very well. Then I should like to inquire of the Senator-and I am obliged to him for calling my attention to that paragraph—what is the inquiry made in regard to road management as provided in lines 8, 9, and 10? To what does that particularly refer?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That refers to upkeep after the road has been constructed. For instance, with the sand-clay road they have found that the use of what they call a split-log drag, which is formed of two pieces of material, either steel or wood, about 8 or 10 inches, set at an angle so that it will scrape the entire road, or at least one side at one time, with the angle so set that as it goes over it scrapes the dirt into the center. They have discovered that if it is done at a certain time, just after a rain, the vehicles coming over it after three or four days, it is all the work that is necessary. It will smooth the surface and make it almost as hard as an asphalt pavement.

Mr. STERLING. I call the attention of the Senator now. to the paragraph in lines 15 and 16 on the same page, in which there is appropriated $51,220. I ask him if that does not relate to and cover the very point he has been discussing?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For conducting field experiments?

Mr. STERLING. "For investigations of the chemical and physical character of road materials." It seems to me that we are rather duplicating appropriations here and that there is no need of both these appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Here is the idea: This plan has been prepared by the department. It will be necessary, perhaps, in order to save time, to read from a statement furnished the committee. I may state that there is different material found in different places with which they are experimenting. They have had great success with some, and this is to continue such experiments. The provision is:

For investigations of the chemical and physical character of road materials,

Now, I will read to the Senator from the memorandum furnished us:

Road-material investigations (p. 71, line 3): The work under this item consists primarily of laboratory investigations, and may be divided into two parts: (1) Routine testing and analyses of road materials, and (2) research work regarding road materials.

Hunting it, finding it, and then testing it out after it is found.

The routine testing and analyses embrace physical tests to determine by impact, abrasion, etc., the hardness, toughness, cementing value, and other qualities of road materials, and also chemical and microscopic analyses to determine their mineral constituents.

The research work covers investigations of the properties, suitability, and applicability of concrete for road and bridge construction; investigations of the properties and uses of the various asphalts, oils, tars, and other binders and dust preventives for road construction, and maintenance; the standardization of methods of testing road materials; and the development and maintenance of the various instruments and appliances for the testing and research work of the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering.

So the Senator will see that though the terminology, used here.

So the Senator will see that, though the terminology used here seems to indicate duplication, upon investigation he will find that they divide themselves very clearly into different classes, which need expert and differentiated attention.

Mr. STERLING. The term "management" on page 73, line 8, is a pretty broad term, I admit; and under the Senator's interpretation of it, if I understood him correctly a while ago, it includes an examination into the materials of road construction. If it includes that, Mr. President, it also includes an examination of the material used in road repair, as I think the Senator

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The best way I can illustrate that is in road construction. I take a piece of paper, if I am an architect, and draw you a plan of a house; but that not building the house; that is merely showing you how to build the house. When I have already given you the plan it is for you to determine what material you will use in filling out the contour or the general physical aspect of the house which I propose that you shall build. If the Senator will take these three items seriatim he will find first:

For inquiries in regard to systems of road management-

That is, how best to keep them up; how are you going to keep up your asphalt roads? How are you going to keep up your sand and clay roads; how are you going to keep up your dirt roads, if you have no sand or clay; where by drainage you have constructed a road and are trying to keep it in proper

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, does not the Senator from South Carolina think that those who built the roads know how to repair them? Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We did not. I know that the split-log drag is a marvel, and I wish the Senator from New Hampshire could see it in operation. Until it was demonstrated, no one knew when there was dampness in the road, if you scraped the road just where the wheels of the vehicles or the hoofs of the animals or the erosion of the water in the incline had cut little canals, that by dragging with the splitlog drag at a certain time when the rain had passed you would need no other work on the road.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the Senator from South Carolina is talking about dirt roads.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am talking about the sand and clay roads that are mentioned here. Suppose they developed the experimentation, let me ask the Senator if he supposes that a resident on a road is going to go out there and experiment as to what is going to keep it up and how to man-

Mr. GALLINGER. I will tell the Senator what I think. think the system which they have in Europe-I am not now speaking of dirt roads-and the system we are adopting in New England is the proper system for our roads. There we have the material along the roadside and are constructing roads costing from $5,000 to $10,000 a mile, and we have men looking after the sections of road and repairing them as soon as they are torn out to any extent.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. With us in the South it may not be necessary to make this investigation, as has been indicated by the Senator from Washington. The present system may prove an absolute success, and perhaps we do not need any further demonstrations or any further lessons as to road management, but I should imagine that out in the West, where they have difficulties with the soil, it might be very important that the Government should appoint men who have the ability, the time, the energy, and the engineering knowledge to experiment and to work with different materials, so as to ascertain if they can discover something with which they can make a per-

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, I am not familiar with the character of roads of which the Senator from South Carolina speaks. The Government, however, has built a very good macadam road between the Potomac River and Arlington, much to my gratification. I always thought Virginia ought to have done it; but the Government has done it. The Government has built that road, but it is no better than the roads which for 10 years we have been building in the North. They can not teach us anything about building macadam roads. I hope they will discontinue that experiment, at least. The trouble is that these men never stop.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I see the Senator has the same object in view that the Senator from Washington had in view; but I want to state to the Senator, from my knowledge of the West, of the Southwest, and of the South, that there is vast room for a splendid work to be done, not at such great expense on the part of the Government as it would be to instruct us how best to accomplish that end.

The Senator must not forget that only last year we passed a good-roads law-a cooperative law-a law which calls on the States to do a certain part and the Government of the United States to do a certain part. It is very essential that none of the money shall be dissipated in useless experiments, and it would not be if we could concentrate it at some one place, where, under the auspices of the Government, a type of road is fixed and then construct that type of road throughout the entire region where it is intended to apply the fund.

Mr. GALLINGER. That doubtless is so. A small fraction of that money has gone to New Hampshire, I am gratified to say. We have a man there employed by the State who will take care of that appropriation and use it just as economically and as successfully as can the experts over in Arlington or in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am happy to tell the Senator from New Hampshire that with the advent of the automobile and its constant improvement, and that improvement in turn calling for good roads, the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from South Carolina stand a better chance to become neighbors. It is a common interest, and I hope it will be as much to the Senator's benefit to have ready transportation down into our section as it will be to us to have ready transportation into his section.

It does not mean how much is appropriated for New Hamp-shire, but how perfect the roads shall be in New Hampshire, coupling it with the next State, and the next State, so that the facilities for transportation will benefit us all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, New Hampshire stands pretty well in that regard, and I am glad to know that there is a revival of interest in South Carolina and in other Southern States with reference to the construction of good roads, for certainly they have not had them in the past.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 5, page 74, the last clause read being as follows:

For investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice; the different kinds of power and appliances, and the development of equipment for farm irrigation; the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not like to criticize any part of this bill, particularly the text as it came from the other body; but there are so many things in the bill that strike me as being semiabsurd, to say the least, that I can not help noticing them. For instance, in the item which has just been read at the top of page 74, we are proposing to appropriate money to determine "the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits." Does that mean we desire to find out whether or not water runs down hill or up hill, or what does it mean?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To what water has the Senator from New Hampshire reference, I inquire, so that I may get the continuity?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I know how water runs in ditches without having a bureau of the Government tell me. The same law that causes it to run in ditches causes it to run in pipe and in conduits.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But this provision has reference to water on arid lands in the West, I presume. I will read what the department has to say with reference to it:

Farm irrigation investigations (page 71, line 14): The work done under this item consists of experiments to ascertain the best methods of controlling water in irrigation; to determine the adaptation of pumping machinery to supplying water for irrigation, including the cost of installation, maintenance, and operation of wells and pumping machinery; to develop the best types of appliances and equipment for irrigation purposes; to test the accuracy of formulas for the flow of water in conduits of various kinds, and to work out new formulas in order that conduits may be properly designed to carry the water which they are intended to convey; to improve and standardize devices for measuring water for irrigation; and to determine the effect of customs, regulations, and laws upon the economic use of water in irrigation and upon the success of irrigational development.

Mr. GALLINGER. The explanation does not explain; but I have performed my duty in calling attention to the matter. If they can get water for irrigation purposes I imagine they will find a way to run it through the ditches to the lands. I think they will do that without our appropriating money for the pur-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to say in justification of the acting chairman of the committee that this whole matter is absolutely foreign to my section of the country. To get water on the land is not our problem, but our problem is to get it off. So the very antipodes of this would be true in my section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Even that, getting water off irrigated lands, Mr. President, is a proposition that confronts us now, and we have been asked for appropriations for that purpose. First, it is proposed to irrigate the lands, and, then, to get rid of the That is an anomalous fact, but it exists.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand that where they irrigate hillsides the seepage in the valleys produces disastrous effects, and they are trying to find some method to

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I assume that the acting chairman of the committee is familiar with the fact that the best authorities on irrigation in this country and those who have had the most experience with it-an experience that dates back over 300 years-are the Pueblo Indians. The Spaniards, when they came to our country, found the Pueblo Indians with systems of irrigation perfectly adapted to all conditions of agriculture which they had in that climate. They had irrigation systems perhaps a thousand years old, and they had been used so long that the stone conduits had moss on them. They had been constructed hundreds and hundreds of years before the white man I assume, then, that the information regarding this matter will be sought from them and that a Pueblo Indian will be put in charge of the investigation. We can get a Pueblo Indian to do the work for about $25 a month, and we can save large appropriations if we will employ one to take charge of that work. I merely suggest that to the Senator as a matter of

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to in vindication of the acting chairman of the committee, that if the Senator wants to take that attitude, or if he states that to be the fact, in reference to his section of the country, as a mater of course it will have to go as authoritative. I take it for granted, however, that those interested in irrigation out in his section would like to have some other advice, because, if I remember correctly, the Senator from Utah wanted $100,000 or more to bore wells in the ground and to prospect for wells, to see whether or not water could be obtained. Pueblo Indian could furnish that information, too.

Mr. LANE. I think he could furnish it about as well as anyone else, although the Pueblos do not dig wells; but after they secure a supply of water they know perfectly well-no one knows better, as is conceded by everybody, although they live in Arizona, not in Oregon-how to manage it for the irrigation and reclamation of lands. They have been practicing irrigation apparently for hundreds and hundreds of years, and perhaps for thousands of years, with entire success, until the white man came along and got the supply of water in his hands, leaving the Indian without it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, just a word in reply in regard to the great irrigating work being done by the Department of Agriculture. I take it for granted that they are doing in that department the work intrusted to them as honestly as the work of the other departments is being done.

Mr. LANE. I think, however, that, like the Senator, they have overlooked the experience and success of the Pueblo Indians, and have not gone and consulted the real, true, available source of information; but are experimenting now to find out what the Indians, after thousands of years of experiment, already have ascertained.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That may be true; but, be that as it may, the point I am making for the committee is that if it is the opinion of the United States Senate that the Agricultural Department is a fraud, that it is absolutely squandering millions of dollars a year, then the thing to do is not to come here and make the point that we are ridiculous-for that makes us ridiculous, as we are the ones who furnish the money-but let us abolish the whole business.

I do say, however, in reference to road building and to the different activities of the department in my section, that they have been worth every cent that they have cost us.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in regard to irrigation, I think that is exactly the condition. They are making us ridiculous, and if the Senator will offer a motion to strike this item out, I will gladly support it; ineed, I think we would not lose much if we cut the whole bill out, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion of the subject of drainage and good roads, I want to make an observation or two. I think if the provisions of the bill were somewhat modified so as to drain out one of the bureaucrats in the department it would be doing a good service to the country. It came to my knowledge probably a year ago that the head of the Good Roads Bureau provided specifications for bids for culverts. There are manufacturers of culverts in my State and also in Alabama. Those manufacturers make what is called a nestable culvert. They had a patent upon it, but the specifications were so framed that no bids would be received on a patented culvert. As a result, the department was deprived of getting the better class of culverts, and we have this anomalous condition: The Congress of the United States voting large sums of money for the maintenance of a Patent Office for the encouragement of invention and a bureaucrat in the Agricul-tural Department discouraging invention by saying, "I will tural Department discouraging invention by saying, "I will receive no bids on any patented culvert." The manufacturers who brought this information to me were not asking favors. They simply wanted to have the specifications so changed that bids could be presented either on patented or unpatented culverts, and they ought to have had that privilege, but this bureaucrat said " no.'

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he thinks it would be better to abolish the Agricultural Department or discharge the man who acts in that manner?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I have the very highest regard for the Agricultural Department generally, but I would not like to express in public what I think about the head of that bureau.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Agricultural Department ought to be abolished if it is not doing good work certainly was not inspired by any expression of mine. I think the Agricultural Department is doing very great work, but the difficulty in that department, as in every other department, is that a bureau starts on a small scale and grows more rapidly than anything else in on a smart scale that grows more rapidly than anything else in nature. After a while it becomes unwieldy and reaches out for more and more appropriations, and, in my judgment, becomes, in some instances, harmful rather than helpful. The very instance that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] has suggested is in point, and I feel sure that the time will come when there will be a careful inquiry into all these things.

In connection with the matter of road building I wish to say that there are five or six different items, each covering pretty nearly the same ground, the only difference being in the amount of the appropriation in each case. We are appropriating money for purposes for which every intelligent man in the country knows it is entirely useless to appropriate. The Agriculture Department may tell a farmer something about the soil, but it can not tell an intelligent farmer how to do the ordinary things that farmers have been doing since the days of Abraham, and yet we are making appropriations for such purposes all along the line.

I should like to see the time come, although I probably never will see it, when there will be a careful investigation into these matters by somebody to ascertain how much of the work is duplicated, and whether or not we are making profligate expenditures, so that, without any reference to any personal feeling or the charge that we are assailing the department itself, we may try to reach more sane and sensible conclusions than we seem in very many instances able to reach now

There are a great many things in this bill that might have been criticized. The Senator from South Carolina is not responsible for them at all. The bill comes to us from another body, I think, very crudely framed. Now, let me call attention to just one little item, on page 74, in line 5, reading:

The duty, apportionment, and measurement of irrigation water.

For heaven's sake, what is the "duty of irrigation water"? Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That refers to the charges that are made when the dams are being constructed and leaks occur.

Mr. GALLINGER. That means a charge, does it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I so understand.
Mr. GALLINGER. Well, "duty" is a very unfortunate word.
Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN in the chair), Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. BRADY. Before leaving that subject I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what he understands the words "duty of irrigation water" to mean.

Mr. GALLINGER. I give it up.

Mr. BRADY. The duty of water is one of the most important things that the farmer has to decide in an irrigation

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, will the Senator explain what it means?

Mr. BRADY. I will be glad to do so. 'The "duty of water" refers to the amount of water required to irrigate a particular piece of land in a manner that will produce the best crops, and the very best work that has been done by the irrigationists in the Government employ has been to assist us in demonstrating what the duty of water really is. In my State in the early days, before it was determined accurately, we used to figure that 1 cubic inch of water flowing continually was sufficient to irrigate 1 acre of land, and we so provided in the law. perience, however, have demonstrated to us that we were en-tirely wrong, and that we could not determine by law what the duty of water is, but that we must determine it by experimentation. The result has been that to-day we are measuring water under the laws of our State by the cubic foot, instead of by the continuous flow of cubic inches, and are now determining how many cubic feet of water are required per acre properly to irrigate an acre of land. It is something that means a great deal to the western people. One acre of land may be irrigated with 1 cubic foot of water; another acre may require 2 cubic feet of water, and another acre may require 3 cubic feet of water.

Under the great Carey projects our land board, consisting of the chief executive of the State, State engineer, our secretary of state, our attorney general, and the superintendent of public instruction, five of the elective officers of the State, determine what the duty of water is for a particular piece of land. In one instance they have placed it at 1 foot per acre covering several thousand acres of land, where millions of dollars have been invested in reclamation projects; in another instance they have placed it at 2 feet per acre, and in other instances it has been discovered that it required almost 3 feet per acre. The question now that the people of that western country are trying to decide is whether or not, when there is required a duty of water greater than 3 feet per acre, it pays at all to irrigate that land.

These are questions that must be solved; they must not be treated lightly. I know full well the Senator from New Hampshire does not mean to do so, and certainly will not when he understands the real situation. While to an eastern man, who has had no experience in irrigation, the expression may seem strange and absurd, to a western man, to a farmer on irrigated land, living there, striving to build a home by the assistance of the Government, it means everything in the world; and I hope that Senators in discussing this matter may realize that the duty of water means very much to the man who irrigates land in the West.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRADY. Certainly.
Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to add that the "duty of water," as it is understood in the West, means the amount of water essential to the irrigation of an acre of land. It has a technical meaning that is very familiar to the people of the West. However, I quite agree with the criticism which the Senator from New Hampshire makes regarding the appropriation itself. The "duty of water" is ascertained and understood by the men who use it-

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. THOMAS. By the farmers out in Idaho and Colorado and other States who by actual experience know what it is; but this entire section, like others to which I may refer before this bill is finally voted upon, is designed to appropriate a lot of money to ascertain things that we know a great deal about already, and that the inhabitants of the West can ascertain much better than a paid corps of employees, however intelligent and earnest they may be, sent out there from other sections of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senators from Idaho and Colorado have given me the information I wanted. It might have been answered in a single phrase that the word "duty" is a technical word understood by certain men who are engaged in this work; and while I think it is an unfortunate word, and that they might have found a better word than that, still I yield to the superior knowledge of Senators who have had experience in these matters.

I still think, however, to repeat what perhaps I ought not to, that this Bureau of Road Making, or whatever it is called, is growing very rapidly, and that it is going to reach a point before a great while when it will have to be halted in some way. The duplication of work, on page 73, is to me rather startling. Of course, Senators can differentiate and can use technical phrases to make it appear that the work is not duplicated, but, as a matter of fact, it is. They inquire in regard to systems of road management; then they investigate the best methods of road making; then they conduct field experiments in various methods of road construction. Perhaps there are technical meanings of the words "making" and "construction" that I do not under-stand. So it runs along through the bill, and when we get through this one bureau accumulates $300,000 or thereabouts for the work in which they are engaged. While they may be doing great work for some sections of the country, the work they are doing has very little interest or advantage to other sections of the country.

However, if they can by any process or any ingenuity devise methods that will improve the roads in some sections of this country, I shall be delighted. I tried once or twice a little while ago to get to Mount Vernon in a vehicle, and did not succeed very well. I can get to Alexandria now, at the expense of the Government; and I know that in other sections of the country a man takes his life in his hands if he tries to go anywhere, especially in the rainy season.

I am in favor of giving reasonable appropriations from the Government to encourage this enterprise, but I really do not believe that we need in the city of Washington a great corps of clerks and assistants and experts to teach the people of this country how to build roads. That is my judgment.

I notice in one of these items an appropriation for "assistants and labor." I suppose the assistants do not work. I could not and labor. I suppose the assistants do not work. I could not interpret it in any other way.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair).

Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRADY. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, while he is discussing the items on page 73, which items he feels are duplications?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, I think they are all duplications. Mr. BRADY. Well, let me read the paragraph commencing on line 8, page 73, where it says:

For inquiries in regard to systems of road management throughout the United States, and for giving expert advice on this subject, $41,040.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the Senator understand by the words "road management" in that sense?

Mr. BRADY. My understanding is that they mean to investigate under what method the roads have been placed in the best condition; whether it is under the management of the precincts, or under the management of the road districts, or under the management of the State administration.

I am in hearty accord with the Senator from New Hampshire along any line that will reduce the expenses of this Government, and especially the extravagance in employing a large number of unnecessary clerks; but in a large undertaking like this I believe we should give these things very careful and fair consideration. Not referring in any sense to the Senator from New Hampshire-who, I feel, always desires to be fair with us western men-I must say that every time the Agricultural bill comes before the Senate and every time it is discussed it seems to me that some Senators take the view of it that we are trying to take away something from this Government. I do not believe that such is the case. I believe that the Agricultural Department and the Agricultural Committees of both the House and Senate have used every effort to hold down these expenses just as much as possible under existing conditions.

Referring to the specific items to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, we have recently appropriated something like $75,000,000 for the construction of roads in these United States, to be duplicated by the States, making in all an expenditure of $150,000,000 for that purpose. It is a great undertaking. Does any Senator here presume that if an association of business men were going to invest $150,000,000 along some line in which they had never invested that amount before, they would not make inquiries in regard to systems of management throughout the United States, and secure expert advice on the subject? Do the Senators believe that those men investing $150,000,000 would not try to make investigations of the best methods of construction along the lines in which they were investing their money; would not attempt to make investigations along the line of conducting field experiments in methods of construction of properties similar to those in which they were going to invest their money?

It is a sane business proposition. We are investing $150,000,000, and we are spending by these appropriations $41,000, $141,000, $51,000, and $60,000 in making experiments and investigations so as to enable us to know how that money will be spent economically.

As has been said on the floor here to-day, there may be some small inconsistencies; but the purpose of the men who framed this bill, the purpose of the Agricultural Department, has been to secure the greatest good for the greatest number. The farmers of this country are entitled to just exactly as much consideration as the investors of this country, the bankers, or the corporations of this country. I am not one of those who try to belittle other undertakings of business men of this Nation. I believe that they should all have an equal chance, and the farmer of America, if I understand his purposes—and I think I do wants only an even chance. He does not want any advantage over any other citizen, organization, or corporation. mittee has approved these small appropriations for experimental and demonstration purposes. I do not want to feel as though our efforts are not appreciated when in my simple way I tried to impress upon the Senate the facts that I believe that the farmers of this country are entitled to more consideration than they are receiving at our hands. I believe this appropriation is fair and just, and that these sections of the bill should be enacted

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. I do not know to whom the Senator refers. I certainly never have sneered at the Senator from Idaho. I think he is one of the most valuable Members of the Senate, and when he speaks on a subject such as he has just addressed himself to he speaks with a certain degree of authority that we all respect. I want the Senator to know that I had no purpose of belittling him in any way or of criticizing him in any way.

Mr. BRADY. I certainly made the statement in my remarks that I did not refer to the Senator from New Hampshire,

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked a question of the Senator from South Carolina as to what the word "management" meant, and he gave me a definition, and then I asked the Senator from Idaho and he gave me an entirely different definition. content, however, with the information I received. It has not enlightened me at all; but they did the best they could, and I am satisfied with it.

Mr. BRADY. I am sorry, indeed, if I have not enlightened the Senator in any way. I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that my immediate remarks were not at all in reference to him, and I think if he will read my remarks he will see that I plainly stated so in making them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. BRADY. I have found him voting on many occasions for things to upbuild and help the West that have been beneficial in many ways

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRADY. I do. Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to assure the Senator from Idaho that while I differ with him as regards the importance and need of this appropriation, I certainly had no intention of reflecting either upon his judgment or upon his standing here as a Senator. The Senator is one of the most useful members of this body, and has been so long connected with great enterprises having for their object the reclamation of western lands and benefit to western people that his judgment is entitled to the highest respect. So if I said anything that even sounded like a reflection upon the Senator's view of the matter, I am

Mr. BRADY. I did not think the Senator from Colorado reflected upon me in any manner whatever.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER, Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota? Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I was very much interested in the Senator's discussion and in his definition of the word "management" as used here on line 8. Just as has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire, the definition given by the Senator from Idaho is altogether different from the definition given by the Senator from South Carolina. I myself asked the Senator from South Carolina in regard to the word "management," and his construction of that word would embrace the very things set forth in the next two paragraphs of the bill. Therefore, I thought I was justified in insisting that there was some duplication here, and that there was not any need of all these three appropriations.

I appreciate the force of the Senator's definition of the word "management." It seems to me he gives a reasonable construction to and interpretation of that word as here used, and that it refers to the management of the roads by precinct, county, or State authority, and not to material that enters into the repair or construction.

Mr. BRADY. And to determine which has been most successful.

Mr. STERLING. The idea is to give the Federal authority some supervision over that matter, so as to ascertain which is the best management, probably.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator is quite correct in his statement as to what my thought was in expressing my views; but take the four paragraphs here. If you will read them carefully, you will see that the first refers to management, the second to investigations, the third to physical character, and the fourth to experiments and methods. It seems to me that those are the four things that any association of business men would investigate before investing their money; and that is the reason why I feel that we should consider all four of them as a whole.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BRADY. I do. Mr. STERLING. I just want to say to the Senator from Idaho that the only question I have in regard to the item embraced in lines 11 to 15, or either of the other two items, is as to whether each one does not provide for work and for supervision that should be done by the local or State authorities themselves, and whether it is not a needless expense upon the part of the Government.

Now, I have not fully made up my mind in that regard. is a question whether or not the communities themselves, the counties or the States in which these improvements are to be made, are not in the end better off when they themselves and the men within the States or the counties take the initiative and think out some of these problems for themselves rather than to always rely upon the General Government to do it allnot only to furnish the information, but, as in many cases, actually do the work.

Mr. BRADY. I think the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota are very pertinent, indeed; and that is just exactly the reason why I think these investigations should be made. We will investigate, with this small appropriation, road management; we will make other investigations of the methods; we will make other investigations of the physical character; and we will make other investigations in the line of field experiments in regard to the different methods that the States have undertaken and tried. And then we will decide just how far we shall go in assisting those States in carrying on this work.

I agree with the Senator that it is the duty of these States to take the initiative. We have passed the law, however; we have appropriated $75,000,000; we have asked the States to contribute their part; and now I feel that it is only fair and right and just to the States and to ourselves and to the taxpayers and to the public that we should make a thorough and complete investigation before expending any more money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 5, page 75.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering," on page 75, line 14, after the word "experiments," to strike out "$16,000" and insert "$12,600," so as to make the clause read:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigations and experiments, $12,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 23, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$606,240" and insert "$602,840," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $602,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 24, after the words Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering," to strike out $701,600" and insert "$698,200," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, $698,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead of "Bureau of Markets," on page 77, line 18, after "$184,740," to insert "of which sum $40,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits and vegetables, $184,740, of which sum $40,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 12, on page 78, the last paragraph read being as follows: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to gather from stockmen, live-stock associations, State live-stock and agricultural boards, common carriers, stockyards, commission firms, live-stock exchanges, slaughtering and meat-packing companies, and others information relative to the number of different classes and grades of marketable live stock, especially cattle, hogs, and sheep in the principal live-stock feeding districts and growing sections; prices, receipts, and shipments of the different classes and grades of cattle, hogs, and sheep at live-stock market centers; prices of meats and meat food products and the amounts of such products in storage; to compile and publish such information at such frequent intervals as most effectively to guide producers, consumers, and distributors in the sale and purchase of live stock, meats, and other animal products; and to gather and publish any related information pertaining to marketing and distribution of live stock, meats, and animal by-products, the sum of $66,800.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the committee to a class of work that it seems to me could be done by this department better than any other department of the Government, and to a class of work that ought to be done, in my judgment, by some of the departments.

In looking through the items of appropriation I observe, on page 77, an appropriation of $289,000 for the purpose of acquiring, and acquainting people with, useful information on sub-jects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm products. The next item is an appropriation of $184,000 to acquaint them with market prices of fruits and vegetables. The next item is an appropriation of $66,000 to enable the Secretary to gather information as to the different classes and grades of live stock, etc. Then we reach an item that has been stricken out of the House bill. Perhaps it is stricken out because it is thought that the work to be done is very largely that of investigating the manipulation of markets. Then, following that, is a provision for the expenditure of $48,000 to investigate the condition of cotton. The next item is for the purpose of enabling the Secretary to make studies of cooperation among the farmers, and it appropriates $30,000. Then we come to an item at the bottom of page 79 appropriating $106,000 for the purpose of investigating the handling, grading, and transportation of grain. Still further on we come to several items to enforce certain acts of Congress, one being the cotton-futures act, for which $98,000 is appropriated; then, to enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of the grain-standards act, the considerable sum of $519,000 is appropriated.

Mr. President, in every part of the country farmers are engaged in marketing fruits and vegetables which are shipped to the great commercial centers. A great proportion of these shipments are made to commission merchants. When a shipment is made to a commission merchant by a farmer living thousands of miles away, very frequently the report comes back to him that the fruits or vegetables were received in bad condition. The farmer has no means of knowing whether that statement is correct or not. Many of them believe, whether they are justified in that belief or not, that advantage is taken of their inability to question the accuracy of the statement. Even if the statement is correct, Mr. President, the particular shipment involved may be small in amount, and may not justify the bringing of a suit to collect against the transportation company whose delay in delivery caused the fruits or vegetables to be in a decayed con-

If this department which has undertaken to fix the standards and marketing of grain could in some way place agents at the great cities to which the fruits and vegetables are shipped and from which they are distributed to the smaller markets, I do not hesitate to say that I believe the benefit would equal any benefit conferred by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President-Mr. GRONNA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Florida that the $50,000 which has been stricken out would be used for that purpose?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I will say to the Senator that I have not that impression; neither do I see any provision in the bill that would enable the department to do the thing I have in mind.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will permit me just a little

Mr. GRONNA. I was simply going to say to the Senator that I am heartily in favor of putting something into the bill to protect the shippers, because I have had some experience in that line and know something about it; and as one of the members of the committee, I shall be very glad to cooperate with the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. It has occurred to me, Mr. President, that perhaps in carrying out the various activities here provided for there would be located in these large cities agents of the Department of Agriculture who could be of assistance in remedying the situation I have attempted to bring to the attention of the Senate. For example, if it could be made the duty of the consignee of fruits or vegetables, in case he intended to claim that they had arrived in bad order, to report to an agent of the Bureau of Markets and get his certificate upon the fact, and then if we could provide that that certificate should be prima facie evidence of the truth, it would enable the farmer back in the State from which the goods came to bring suit. But as things are now, if he could bring a suit and prove his case it would cost him a prohibitive amount to gather up the evidence; and, moreover, there would be great difficulty in the first place in ever ascertaining whether or not the statement made to him was correct.

From what I have learned on this subject I believe it is true that the farmers throughout the country are imposed upon by many commission merchants. The temptation is very great for a man of irresponsible character to set up a commission I do not mean to say that that obtains as a rule, because there are commission merchants who have been long established and who have held the confidence of shippers from my State, I know, for half a century, but new concerns spring up and they get business. They will promise before the shipping season comes on that they will take the truck. The farmer agrees to ship it to him and he is unable to collect. The fruit or vegetables leave the point of shipment in good condition and when they arrive at the market it is claimed that they are in had condition.

I mention this not with any idea that it can be taken care of upon this bill, because it would have to be in the nature of general legislation, but I wish to call the attention of the committee to it and I hope they will call the attention of the department to it, so that something along this line may be done. I am not familiar enough with the bureau of markets to know whether they have such men in great cities like New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not take the Senator off the floor. I will say to him that the director of the bureau of markets has been studying this question and has during the past year undertaken to experiment in an effort to work along the line the Senator suggests at two cities. Of course, he has not funds enough under this appropriation to carry it into practical operation. He has said to me that it ought to be done, and if it was done at about 25 cities in the United States that would cover the present demand of the producers of foodstuffs that are of a perishable character. I feel sure that by the time another bill comes around the test will have been made sufficiently for the Department of Agriculture to give us a definite suggestion on the subject.

Mr. BRYAN. I am very glad to have that statement from the Senator from Georgia. I do not see anything very difficult in the department having in those cities agents, when the goods are claimed to be in a bad condition, to inspect them and give are claimed to be in a bad condition, to inspect them and give a certificate, and let that certificate be prima facie evidence of the truth of the statement made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state that this matter was brought to the attention of the department who have under investigation the question brought out by the Senator from Florida. They are heartily in accord on the identical point he has been emphasizing. I will read into the Record just what the department says in reference to the amendment which was offered on the floor of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Which amendment is the Senator speaking about?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On page 78, beginning with line 13, the Secretary of Agriculture says:

This item was inserted on the floor of the House. It seems to me that it is defective in two particulars. The appropriation is too small to make possible a satisfactory inquiry over so important and wide a field. It does not give the department the power it would need to make a conclusive inquiry—that is, to compel the production of the necessary facts.

I am on record to the effect that such an investigation had better be made by the Federal Trade Commission. It appears that the Federal Trade Commission's power to investigate may be limited to corporations doing an interstate business with a view to discover whether the antitrust laws are violated.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not have special reference to the language stricken out, I will say to the Senator; but on the general situa-tion under the heading of Bureau of Markets, in considering these various items, I thought it worth while to call the attention of the committee to it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Without reading further, I wish to make a statement. The committee went over this very field. The Secretary seemed to be of opinion that the Trade Commission could take care of it from their point of view, but that it would require a larger appropriation and a more comprehensive and a more thoroughly worked-out system would be justified, but not one in this crude and imperfect way. I hope that in conference we may be able to find some way to meet the very urgent necessity indicated by the Senator from Florida.

I wish to ask the Senator a question Mr. TOWNSEND. before he takes his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What argument does the Senator offer for striking out lines 13 to 19, relative to food products, which does not apply to the next item?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was just about to read further what the Secretary of Agriculture had to say. Without reading it into the Record I will state that the Secretary of Agriculture informed the committee that he thought this could be taken care of by the Trade Commission, who were to look into any fraud practiced by shippers.

Mr. TOWNSEND, Why could not that duty be also conferred upon the Trade Commission relative to cotton. I see that the next item is an appropriation of $48,000, among other things, for developing the market of cotton.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think that has anything to do with this item; it is not in the same class of business, for the reason that it has no reference to any fraudulent act or a perishable crop. The point the Senator from Florida makes is that certain truck is shipped and the reply is that it was received in bad order. The paragraph to which the Senator now refers is as to what is the best method of marketing cotton, whether collectively or individually, or at what points. Cotton is totally indestructible if kept away from fire and weather. is not in the same class as the shipments complained of by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I realize that, but it is an appropriation of $48,000 for that purpose, whereas this other provision which has in view a most desirable object and which, as the Senator from Georgia suggests, the $50,000 could be used in certain places to make a demonstration as to possible fraud or injustice practiced upon the farmer, and it might be useful in enlightening

the rest of the country

I understand that this appropriation of $50,000 did not comprehend the investigation of the subject for the whole United States, but it did comprehend the idea of making an investigation to determine whether in any place these frauds were being practiced, and if that demonstration were once made it would be very easy for Congress then to proceed to act upon the matter in an intelligent manner.

The Senator misunderstood me. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have the floor through the courtesy of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield, Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not make myself clear if the Senator gained the impression that these tests were being made in matters that are covered by the provision we struck out. understand its real object was to conduct investigations to determine the extent, manner, and methods of any manipulation of the markets or control of the visible supply of foodstuffs by individuals, groups, associations, combinations, or corporations. I think this provision placed in the bill upon the floor had in view placing upon the Department of Agriculture the duty of going out and investigating the combinations that are supposed to have been made to control the price of foodstuffs, especially of wheat and meats. The Department of Agriculture advised us that this investigation of illegal combinations to interfere with the handling of food products seemed to be already covered by the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, and that the Department of Agriculture had no authority to compel the production of books, to subpœna witnesses, and to conduct the investigation in a way that would bring results.

The Secretary suggested that if we undertook to put this class of investigation upon the department we ought also to give him power and authority by which he could conduct it, and he sent us a bill to that effect. Upon examination it was per fectly plain to us that the bill was general legislation and that one objection would stop it. There was, as I recall it, one objection in the committee, and we concluded that we need not undertake it.

The class of work to which I was referring is entirely different work. It is the stationing of an expert in a city to watch and advise as to the real condition of perishable products that come into the city and make some investigations, not with the power of action but just for information, as to the extent to which the rights of the farmers were disregarded in the treatment of their perishable products in the city.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I certainly would not wish to advocate the incorporation of any provision in the bill which would be a vain thing or which would cover ground that was prepared by another commission. I had thought, however, that this had in mind some very important matters which should be investigated. We have been talking about the high cost of living. We have had various speculations indulged as to what that cause is. It has seemed to me for some months that the Department of Agriculture having agents throughout the United States coming into contact with the farmer and his market might be able to make some suggestions that would be of real service; but if the Trade Commission has taken this up, I would not, of course, vote for an additional appropriation, because it would be simply a waste of money if the subject was covered

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not claim that it is being properly covered. I do not think it is; but the Secretary of Agriculture said, "You must give me some power to subpœna witnesses and to produce books and to force the production of testimony or else you put a responsibility upon me with my hands tied." He said, "If you do that; if you give me the authority and the power, please, also authorize me to act in cooperation with the Federal Trade Commission that we may not duplicate our work." Some of us were disposed to support an amendment which would have amounted to general legislation in its power as we thought it ought to be done, but we became satisfied that it would go off on a single objection, and that objection would

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator believe that a point of order would be made against an amendment to the provision inserted by the House for the purpose of making that provision effective? It would not be a new provision. It appropriates money to make an investigation. The Senate provision would simply be an amendment to make it effective so that the department could make the investigation and make it of value.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The reason stated in the House, I think, why they did not give fuller power was that the trend of the House was to avoid anything in the shape of general legislation, and we concluded that the amendment sent us by the Secretary of Agriculture could not be used. If the Senator has such an amendment and it is not objected to, I will vote for it.

will not object to it.

be made to it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I took some part in the debate when this provision was considered in committee. I understood from what explanation was made to me that the provision suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture was simply for the purpose of giving the Department of Agriculture or the Secretary of Agriculture the same power that the Trade Commission now has. If an amendment is offered on this floor giving the Secretary of Agriculture the power asked for by the Senator from Florida to investigate the marketing of food products and perishable goods, I certainly shall not object to it. I think it would be very wholesome legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think what the Senator from Florida asked for really has any relation to the provision on page 78 that we struck out. The Senator from Florida was considering simply agents in the cities to watch the treatment of perishable goods sent in by farmers. The provision we struck out proposed to place upon the Secretary of Agriculture the duty of making investigations into trade combinations and trade monopolies, not with reference to perishable goods but with reference especially, as we viewed it, to meat and to grain, and so forth, in the great distributing centers. He said, "I can not do that unless you give me additional power," and he sent us a bill quite elaborately prepared to that end. We recognized the fact that the Trade Commission has that authority now, although we did not claim that it was performing it.

Mr. GRONNA. That is exactly the way I understood it; but I simply wanted to express my sentiment that the suggestion of the Senator from Florida appeals to me, and if there is any way in which we can insert a provision in the Agricultural appro-priation bill, either now or in the next bill, I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. BRYAN. I am glad that so many members of the committee feel that way about it. It occurs to me perhaps if the amendment striking out the language in the House is agreed to that would throw the matter into conference, and it may be that after consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture a provision of that kind could be reported back from the conference committee. It is not a very difficult thing, it seems to me, to provide for. I would not have one of these agents in any of the cities go to the trouble to investigate all the shipments, because that would be an insurmountable task, but we could provide that upon the claim by the consignee of the perishable goods that they were in bad order he must notify the agent if we had one there and get a certificate from him; otherwise the goods would be considered as arriving in good order.

I have no doubt that with this amendment agreed to, the conference committee can, after consultation with the Secretary, report something of value. He knows what agents he has already in the cities and how much burden it would be to undertake this work, whether we should have to employ new people or people already in the employ of the Government could give it their attention.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator having charge of the bill explained the reason for the insertion of this clause in the bill by the House. It seemed to me, when my attention was first attracted to it, to constitute perhaps the most important feature of the bill, since its apparent purpose was to investigate and make some provision against what is generally known as the high cost of living. I welcomed the appearance of this clause when the bill was sent over from the other House as the beginning of a proper method of dealing with the subject, but I think we have gone at it wrong end to. We are proposing to elevate the salaries of the employees of the Government for the purpose of meeting the advances in the cost of living, and by so doing we are proposing to place a premium on that practice which has made the request for an increase of salaries necessary. I am satisfied that if we proceed along that line of legislation, those receiving the increased wage will derive no great benefit from it, because those who control food products can elevate their prices much more rapidly than can the Government increase the salaries of its employees. In such a race the inequality is apparent. Therefore, by the process which is now being experimented with in these supply bills, instead of doing away with the evil, we are only feeding it.

So I was anxious to ascertain why the Senate committee had determined to make this excision. I think the explanation that has been made is quite satisfactory. At the same time, I regret that the proposed amendment of the Department of Agriculture was not incorporated in the bill, notwithstanding the danger that it would encounter if a point of order should be made against it, because, Mr. President, of all the important things before this Congress, certainly none is more important than that some effort should be made to restrict, if not to do away entirely with, the enormous and unreasonable and extortionate rise in the prices of the necessities of life.

Of course, the rise consequent upon the vast influx of gold in the United States is perfectly understandable and perfectly natural and perhaps unavoidable, but where groups of men, associating themselves together, not only are enabled to take advantage of this normal influence upon prices, but can also advance them beyond all reason and to the point of extortion, certainly this Government owes it as a duty to the public to ascertain whether or not it has the power; and if it has, then to exert that power in the shape of legislation for the purpose of doing away with this intolerable evil.

I noticed only a day or two ago in one of the local newspapers an announcement of the advance of 5 cents per pound in the price of meats. There is no occasion for it except the opportunity and the power to extort that additional sum from the masses of the people, and unless the Government can ascertain some remedy for this evil we must not be surprised if the people shall take the law into their own hands, because when monopoly goes to the point of cornering food supplies, in times of peace particularly, and placing its own price upon products to the con-suming public, either the Government must interfere to prevent it or the people must not be blamed if they take the law into their own hands.

Some time ago we read the accounts of a great egg monopoly in Chicago, which was being investigated. Soon afterwards we were informed that the investigation disclosed that those engaged in the business of cornering eggs and demanding an exorbitant price for them were violating no law. Certainly that must have referred to statute law, because there was a violation of moral law and a violation of the old common law against regrating and engrossing, which every lawyer will at once recognize. Then came the announcement that the principal head of the Egg Trust was decidedly boastful in his assertion, not only of the vast amount of money that he had made through this manipulation, but of the fact that he had done it with impunity. If the next morning I had seen in the Chicago newspapers that the long-suffering public of that great city had gone at night to that man's house, taken him out of his bed, and hanged him to a lamppost, I should have read it, I confess, with a great deal of quiet satisfaction, because it is enough for a man to commit an act of that kind without boasting of it and announcing to the world the impotence of the Government under which he lives to prevent that sort of exaction.

It will come to that, Mr. President, and, if it does and when it does, I think I voice a common sentiment when I say that no man will express surprise, and very few will express much regret, unless, of course, we can in the meantime set abroad some agencies which will at least tend to produce the desired

Of course, I can very readily understand that a widespread condition of this sort can not be very well overcome by a modest appropriation of $50,000 to be expended in the mere making of an investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. GALLINGER. It has been impressed upon my mind that prices are, without any reason, being arbitrarily increased all along the line. The Senator from Colorado calls attention to the fact that the announcement was made that the increase in the price of meats, I believe, would be 5 cents a pound.

Mr. THOMAS. A few days ago there was some such statement in the newspapers, as I was told.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the Senator from Colorado received the same letter that I did not long ago from the Swift Co. I am not acquainted with the gentlemen who are running that great company; but I was quite surprised in reading that letter—assuming that they told the truth—to learn that they were getting a profit of but one-fourth of a cent a pound on live cattle and one-quarter of a cent a pound on the meat when it was prepared for market. That shows conclusively, assuming that it is correct, that these prices are largely imposed upon the consuming public by the middle man and by the retailer. For that reason, I think it will be a very difficult matter to regulate; and yet it ought to be regulated, if it can possibly be done.

I simply wanted to put that into the RECORD as it has come to me from that great firm. Of course, I have no way of deter-mining whether or not it is absolutely accurate; but I state simply the plain fact as it was communicated to me.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire for reminding me of that circumstance. I received a similar letter from the same firm, and I read it with some degree of surprise. Of course, I am not prepared to say that the statement is not correct; yet it is true that the packers are flourishing as they never before flourished, and their vast operations are constantly increasing. So we must take the statement in connection with the very evident fact that their prosperity is unbounded and perhaps unusual even for such great concerns. There is no doubt, however, Mr. President, that very much of this exorbitance in the prices of the necessities of life is due to the middle man, because the middle man is also combining with, and not only combining with but entering into relations with the wholesaler, which are so drastic that no outsider can purchase by wholesale unless he belongs to the middlemen's association.

We all know that some time ago a practice existed-and I presume the practice still exists—among some commission merchants of reporting goods sent to them to be sold upon commission as badly damaged and in poor condition, in consequence of which the consignor receives a very small amount for his consignment, while at the same time the goods were sold and disposed of, I might say, almost as a custom in some sections of the country a few years ago, at most excellent prices, and be-cause of the fact that they were in good condition and not subject to the report which the consignor received; in other words, the middleman, on the one hand, representing to the owner of the commodities that his goods were not in good condition and settling with him for a small price, while, on the other hand, selling to the consumer at the ordinary price and putting the difference in his pocket. That is one illustration of the manner in which the combination of the middlemen works.

I was about to say when the Senator from New Hampshire interrupted that I hope the Trade Commission is carrying on investigations that are going to lead to something. I have the best of feeling toward the Trade Commission. I was not impressed when the act creating that commission was passed that it would be productive of much benefit, and I have not had occasion since then to change my mind very materially, but it certainly has the authority, if it will exercise it, to carry on investigations along some lines in regard to the necessities of life that would be sufficient at least to attract the attention of Congress to the difficulty in such way as to enable them to legislate swiftly and intelligently concerning it, for it is perhaps the greatest of all our duties now, if we can do so, to bring down the price of the necessities of life, so that the man of ordinary wage and of ordinary salary can live decently and support his family. Therefore, I was surprised when I saw the excision of this part of the bill, and I am glad that a very satisfactory explanation has been made of the reasons for it.

now pending?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is.

Mr. BRYAN. In lieu of that amendment I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Myers in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In lieu of the portion proposed to be stricken out insert the following—

Mr. BRYAN. Strike out the words in the House fext and in lieu insert—the committee amendment simply strikes out the House text.

The Secretary. Strike out lines 13 to 19, on page 79, in the following words:

To make investigation relating to the production, transportation, storage, preparation, marketing, manufacture, and distribution of agricultural food products, including the extent, manner, and methods of any manipulation of the markets or control of the visible supply of such food products or any of them by any individuals, groups, associations, combinations, or corporations, $50,000.

And insert

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify to shippers the condition as to soundness of fruits and vegetables when received at markets under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, $25,000: Provided, That the certificates issued by the authorized agents of the department shall be received in all courts as prima facte evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think that amendment is proper, and the committee has no objection to it.

I think it will cover the ground.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan] will be agreed to. I was rather surprised when I read the lines here to see that they were stricken out by the committee. It seemed to me they covered a very important phase of our commercial life, and I felt that the committee must have had some very overpowering reason for striking them out. I am glad that the amendment has been proposed by the Senator from Florida, and I hope that it will be adopted, because it seems to me that it will assure putting the whole matter in conference, and I have no doubt that then the conferees will be able to work out something, if this amendment does not, that will take care of a situation that needs looking after.

I merely want to add that in my section of the country, which is a fruit-growing and vegetable-producing section, I have heard many times of instances where farmers have consigned their fruits or their vegetables to market and the report has come back that the commodities were in bad condition, and in some circumstances a bill for freight was sent to them. They have no means of ascertaining the truth or falsity of such representations; and it seems to me we can not do anything better for the interests of the farmers and producers of the country than to get some plan worked out along the line of the suggestion of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am very desirous of getting over the committee amendments, and, as I presume Senators are now familiar with the House text, I will ask the Secretary to read from now on the committee amendments, so that we may consider and get through with them.

Mr. JONES. I understand that when the Secretary gets

Mr. JONES. I understand that when the Secretary gets through reading the bill and the committee amendments the Senator is going to close the work for to-day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I have to do that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 78, line 23, after the word "cotton," to strike out "$53,000" and insert "$48,000," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating, demonstrating, and promoting the use of standards for the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton, and for investigating the ginning, grading, stapling, baling, marketing, compressing, and tare of cotton, $48,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 20, after "$106,590," to insert: "Provided, That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to install a small experimental flour mill and other apparatus, and chemical and baking laboratories, for the purpose of aiding him in establishing standards of quality and condition of wheat and other grains, as required by the act of Congress approved August 11, 1916, known as the United States grain standards act," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the handling, grading, and transportation of grain, including the grain sorghums, for the purpose of fixing definite grades thereof, $166,590: Provided, That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to install a small experimental flour mill and other apparatus, and chemical and baking laboratories, for the purpose of alding him in establishing standards of quality and condition of wheat and other grains, as required by the act of Congress approved August 11, 1916, known as the United States grain standards act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this amendment came from the department?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] is the author of this amendment and can explain it fully.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is rather a startling proposition that the Government is going to establish a little flour mill and chemical and baking laboratories; but we are drifting along that line pretty rapidly, taking out of the hands of private enterprise and private initiative the affairs of the public, and passing them over to the paternal care of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator that no such proposition was made to the committee, but this amendment, as the Senator from North Dakota will explain, was simply to provide a means for testing the quality of certain grain that might be deceptive in looks, and thus aid in grading wheat and testing its bread-making qualities.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the department could find somewhere an old flour mill already built, and if they will come to my section of the country I will accommodate them; but perhaps we have got to go into the building of a flour mill and enter into competition with Corby Bros. Possibly that is so.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that my physical condition to-day is such that I may not be able to explain this item satisfactorily to the Senate. I desire to say, however, that I believe, after I have made the explanation, there will be no opposition to it.

There has been provided in the Agricultural College of North Dakota a small flour mill. I say a "flour mill," but it is a very simple affair. We only have to go back a century or two to find that a flour mill was a rounded stone and the implements used were simple and inexpensive. How much it would cost the Department of Agriculture to install this mill in quarters which they already own I do not know; but I do know that it cost very little to the agricultural college at Fargo.

I have here before me a paper published in my State giving results of experiments which have been made in testing wheat of different weights. Everybody knows that this year in the United States, in the spring-wheat belt, we had what we call a poor crop. We had excessive heat and the kernels were shriveled up so that the wheat was exceedingly light, weighing all the way from 40 to 50 pounds a bushel instead of 60 pounds a bushel.

Now, the question is, How is the Department of Agriculture to grade this wheat and do justice to the producer and to the consumer?

I have here this report—and it is an official report—issued by the food commissioner of our State; and while I will not take the time of the Senate to go into it as fully as I should like to, I want to say that this little mill located in the agricultural college took 600 samples of wheat and ground them into flour. The report gives the laboratory numbers of some of them. Some of this wheat weighed 39 pounds to the bushel, some 46 pounds to the bushel, other specimens 47, 41½, 49½, 49½, 52½, and 38, showing all the different weights. The price of that wheat was based upon its weight, and this report shows that there was a very slight difference in the real value of a bushel of wheat by weight. The difference in the market price, however, on all these samples, on an average, was 85 cents per bushel.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The difference in price?

Mr. GRONNA. The difference in price in the selling market and the milling price was 85 cents a bushel. That was the average, and it ran as high as $1.03 per bushel.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator does not mean the difference?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I mean the difference in the price per bushel. The Senator knows that wheat this year is abnormally high. In Minneapolis and in Duluth there has been paid for wheat above $2 per bushel. The farmers received for that wheat all the way from 75 cents to 90 cents per bushel. You understand that the farmers had to give 60 pounds to the bushel, although the wheat required to make a bushel weighed all the way between 39 and 52 pounds.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I shall be glad to.
Mr. GALLINGER. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that when wheat is quoted at $2 per bushel in the markets of the United States the farmer gets only about 75 cents a bushel for it?

Mr. GRONNA. I say that for some of this light, shrunken wheat the farmers received as low a price as 75 cents per bushel, and I sold some for that price myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator further-and I dislike exceedingly to disturb him or to delay the consideration

Mr. GRONNA. No; I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. That wheat, of course, would not be quoted for $2 per bushel in any market, would it?

Mr. GRONNA. No. The quotations are based upon No. 1 hard, No. 1 northern, No. 2 northern, and so on.
Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I supposed.

Mr. GRONNA. But I want to show the Senator the real value of this wheat. The wheat that weighed 39 pounds to the bushel had a milling value of $1.88. The wheat weighing 46 pounds had a milling value of $1.96, and the wheat that weighed 47 pounds had a milling value of $2.01. That was at the mill, of course. So, Mr. President, it simply goes to show the enormous profit that is made by somebody and the sacrifice that is being made by the producer; and it certainly does not help the con-sumer. The consumer pays the price based upon the high quality of wheat, and not upon the low quality of wheat.

This has been made an issue in my State. More than 45,000 farmers resolved themselves into a league called the Nonpartisan League. They are publishing a paper, which is their own, called the Nonpartisan Leader. They are publishing to-day a daily paper called the Courier News. They have established the first paper with their own funds. They have bought this daily paper with their own money. They have built, with their own money, a terminal elevator located at St. Paul, holding 1,000,000 bushels of grain and costing $500,000.

Mr. President, it is a serious proposition with us. We raised. in 1915, in North Dakota, 155,000,000 bushels of wheat. Make a reduction of 10 cents per bushel and see what that amounts to. In the United States we produced that very same year more than a billion bushels. At 1 cent a bushel that amounts to $10,000,000; at 10 cents it is ten times that much, or $100,000,000, which is sacrificed by the producer and which does not help the consumer.

Mr. President, I know of no other way to remedy this condition than to appropriate money to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make milling tests—and this is the proper place for it, in order to carry out the standard grain-grades act-to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to install a little flouring mill somewhere in the Department of Agriculture, which will not cost very much; to establish a baking laboratory; to establish a chemical laboratory; and to fix the standards which we authorized in the grain-standards act a year ago. This, I say, is the only way in which the Secretary of Agriculture can do justice to the producers and to the consumers; and I sincerely hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very much interested in this matter, because the explanation puts some little reason in it, whereas it seemed to me to be without reason upon reading it. I should like to ask, however, if such a test is made at Fargo of the wheat which happens to come there, whether that would be a sufficient guide to establish the bread value of wheat raised in Michigan or Indiana or any other State outside of that particular wheat belt in the Northwest?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I will say to the Senator that it will apply in the same way to all. Of course, in years when we have a crop of heavy wheat it may not be of so much value; but every year we have some shrunken wheat, we have some late-sown grain in every State, I take it—I know we have in our State and of course that makes a lower quality. Now, it is not only the mill at Fargo that has ground this particular wheat.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know the Senator is an expert authority on that subject, and that is the reason why I asked the question. Mr. GRONNA. It will be applied to the winter wheat, of course, the same as it is to the spring wheat.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What I can not quite understand, and what the Senator probably can make clear to me, is how this test would be of any value except in regard to the particular wheat

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator, of course, knows that under the grain-grading act the Secretary of Agriculture now issues licenses to all inspectors.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. It is really under the supervision of the Federal Government. Now, if in any market-we will say in Detroit, Mich .- some farmer complains of the grade, all that he has to do is to ask the inspector to send to Washington a sample large enough so that it can be ground into flour sufficient to make a loaf of bread.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Where is this mill to be located?

Mr. GRONNA. Right here in the city of Washington, in the Agricultural Department. I take it that they have room enough It only requires a small, inexpensive mill,

Mr. TOWNSEND. So as I understand it, then, the Senator's idea is that these various samples of wheat, where the owner or shipper desires a test, are to be sent to this mill?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir. Mr. TOWNSEND, And thus they will get a judgment on that particular class of wheat?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; this appropriation is merely for the purpose of conducting research work, of testing the grain, so that the Secretary of Agriculture will be enabled to fix a standard that will do justice, as I said a moment ago, both to the producer and to the consumer. That is the idea.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.
Mr. GALLINGER. The very thing that troubled the Senator from Michigan troubles me. I could not quite see how the establishment of a mill in one State could be utilized to determine the quality of the grain or of the bread in a distant State.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not to be established in my State at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.
Mr. GRONNA. It is to be established here in the city of Washington, or wherever the Secretary deems best-perhaps up in New Hampshire; I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.
Mr. GRONNA. Wherever the Secretary thinks best.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it ought to be here, and I think we ought to specify that in the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. I was satisfied to leave that to the judgment of the Secretary. Undoubtedly it would be established here, I am quite sure that it would be.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be here if we have a mill, I think.

Mr. GRONNA. I have some tables here, Mr. President. would take too much time to go into them in detail, and I do not wish to delay the Senate unduly. I ask unanimous consent that this full report may be printed in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be cone. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NOTHER BROADSIDE FROM LADD-FOOD COMMISSIONER ISSUES NEW OFFICIAL BULLETIN ON LIGHT-WEIGHT WHEAT GROUND AT MINNESOTA COMMERCIAL MILL.

SOTA COMMERCIAL MILL.

Dr. E. F. Ladd, North Dakota pure-food commissioner and president of the agricultural college, has issued another broadside in regard to the 1916 crop of light-weight wheat. The new bulletin, out last week, tells of the milling of rust-hit, light-weight wheat at the now famous Maine Roller Mill at Phelps, Minn. It is an official report, with official tests and figures, confirming the unofficial investigations of the non-partisan newspaper which had a series of articles on this and other custom Minnesota mills which have proved that the so-called poorer grades of wheat, especially that bought by elevators and mills since last year, make in most instances as good, and sometimes better, bread than heavier wheat, though the farmers are forced to part with it for a song.

r a song. Dr. Ladd's latest bulletin follows:

THE MAINE MILL.

[By Dr. E. F. Ladd, State food commissioner.]

There has been a feeling that the tests made upon the experimental mill at the agricultural college might not represent the results which are obtained in the commercial milling of wheat. For the purpose of gathering information on this point, and to determine to what extent there might be a variation in results in the commercial mill from those secured in the experimental mill at the college, it has seemed best to gather some data. We were informed that at Phelps, Minn. (Underwood post office), was located the Maine Roller Mills, with W. E. Thomas as proprietor, from whom much valuable information might be gathered. On writing for information, the following letter was re-

MILLER OF MAINE WRITES TO LADD.

PHELPS (UNDERWOOD POST OFFICE), MINN., November 27, 1916.

Prof. E. F. LADD, President North Dakota Agricultural College.

President North Dakota Agricultural College.

Dear Sir: Replying to your inquiry of the 21st instant, regarding value of light-weight wheat and amount and quality of flour it will produce, will say that I am grinding for the farmers, running night and day, on wheat which tests from 35 pounds to 53 or 54 pounds to the bushel, and it is surprising what an amount of flour some of the light-weight wheat is turning out. Wheat that tests 37 pounds per bushel, perfectly clean and ready for milling, is turning out 25 pounds flour per bushel. Some wheat testing 38 pounds in the dirt is making 28 to 30 pounds, and it is good flour, too; it is strong and rises quick and makes light, nice bread, but it is a trifle more yellow than flour made from the best grades of wheat.

I am grinding for cash and asking the farmers to bring me 30-bushel grists and am making them flour out of their own wheat as nearly as possible. I charge them 15 cents a bushel for grinding and I give them back their screenings and all the flour the wheat will make, and bran and shorts enough to make up 58 pounds for every 60 they bring here.

The wheat is cleaned through six different cleaning machines before it is ground, and from three of these machines the dust is blown out of the mill, so I am sure there is from 1½ pounds to 2 pounds waste in cleaning and grinding.

The farmers are all well pleased with this way of grinding and are getting more flour from their wheat than they expected to get. Some of them wonder where it all comes from. They are coming 30 to 35 miles from all directions, and some of them waiting for their grists three or four days. We are swamped with wheat, and lots of it is piled up on the ground outside of the mill. The farmers are finding out that this low-grade wheat will make flour, and lots of it.

Yours, respectfully,

W. E. Thomas.

Investigators sent to obtain facts.

Having received the foregoing it was deemed desirable to have a personal inspection made and more complete data gathered. Therefore Thomas Sanderson and W. C. Palmer were requested to make the investigation. They report that they found farmers coming with grists from 30 to 35 miles from all directions; some coming through towns and villages in which are located up-to-date commercial mills. The wheat came faster than could be ground and there were accumulated outside of the mill at least 1,000 sacks of wheat.

In reply to requests for information, Mr. Thomas stated:

"My customers all know now that I want, if possible, a grist of at least 30 bushels. Of course, I get some that are smaller, but I like them to run not less than 30 bushels, if possible. Each farmer's grist is taken in and weighed, and then run over six different cleaning machines, the screenings taken out of the wheat, weighed, and returned to the farmer. The clean wheat is run through the mill and we return to the farmer all the flour from his grist and feed enough to make 58 pounds for every bushel of wheat he has after deducting the weight of screenings from the gross weight for grinding, and I find the farmers are all well satisfied."

The mill is run by water power and has a capacity of 85 barrels of flour in 24 hours when working on good wheat. The building is three stories above the basement, heated with hot water.

GRIST-BOOK DATA SHOW THE RESULTS.

GRIST-BOOK DATA SHOW THE RESULTS.

The following data were taken from the grist book at the mill office and is a copy of about 2½ pages of the same. The first 19 entries were taken from work done the first part of October when the bran and shorts were weighed separately. The balance of the data was taken just prior to and during the time Messrs. Sanderson and Palmer were at the mill. Mr. Carl Shole, who had a grist at the mill and got the results of the last grist as shown in Table I, informed us that the best offer he could get on the market for his wheat was $1.50 per bushel when No. 1 northern was selling at $1.81 per bushel. This would give him a market value of $1.37 for his wheat based on values shown in the table below, or a gross profit of 68 cents per bushel. On this grist of 31 bushels and 10 pounds this would be $21.19 less 15 cents per bushel for grinding, leaving $16.51 and a profit over value of wheat of 38.66 per cent. The average of these 49 grists, as shown by the table and based on local values quoted in Fergus Falls December 2, 1916, would be a gross profit of $7 cents per bushel; and on the average grist of 29 bushels and 23 pounds would be $25.56 less 15 cents per bushel for grinding, leaving $21.15, a profit over value of wheat of 65.44 per cent.

MARKET VALUES AT FERGUS FALLS DECEMBER 2, 1916.

As quoted to Messrs. Sanderson and Palmer at one of the commercial mills, were as follows:

Patent flour, $5.15 per sack of 98 pounds; straight flour, $5.05 per sack of 98 pounds—very little going out; low grade, $2.50 to $3 per sack of 98 pounds; bran, $30 per ton; shorts, $32 per ton—mixed feed $31 per ton; No. 1 wheat, $1.68 per bushel; no grade, test weight, 40 pounds, 96 cents per bushel.

The values used in the deductions in the following tables are the same as above, except the straight flour, which we assume to be worth $5 per 100 pounds, low grade $2.50, screenings 75 cents per 100 pounds, and as the average test weight of the samples on which this data was obtainable was 45 pounds we have assumed the wheat to be worth $1.10 per bushel.

Of the data in the following table, No. I, the first 10 columns were taken from. Mr. W. E. Thomas's grist book, the next 6 columns are the percentages of the different mill products of each lot of wheat, and the last column the value of the mill products from a bushel based on the percentage of products as shown and at the market values above quoted.

In Table II will be found the milling and baking results of five different grists that were milled while Messrs. Sanderson and Palmer were at the mill. These represent a fair average of the wheat coming to the mill.

Having secured a sample of the flour and a sample of the wheat from each of these five grists they were given the following laboratory num-

In compiling the data for these samples the percentage of low-grade flour is added to the percentage of straight flour and the sum is used as total flour in the data from the Phelps mill, and it is assumed to be worth $5 per 100 pounds. And in the data for the samples milled in the experimental mill the percentage of bran and shorts are added together, using the sum as total feed and assuming it to be worth $1.55 per 100 pounds.

The baking results as shown are for the straight flour without the low grade added for the Phelps mill, and as will be observed by the percentage of flour obtained, the amount represented by the baking results as shown are for this total flour for the experimental mill.

COMMERCIAL MILLS GET BETTER SHOWING,

COMMERCIAL MILLS GET EETTER SHOWING.

To compare actual results as shown by the figures from the Phelps mill with the work done in a commercial mill would hardly be a fair comparison, because the commercial miller has a much better chance to make a good clean-up than a mill running under the conditions existing in this one. In the commercial mill the wheat is all blended, and the stream of wheat coming on the rolls is kept as nearly alike as is possible to do for days or even weeks at a time, giving the miller a chance to make determinations and know exactly what he is doing in the matter of quantity as well as quality of products obtained, whereas a mill doing a gristing business may have fairly good wheat for a while and other grists may go to the other extreme. The matter of adjusting the mill to suit the two extremes in this crop is almost a physical impossibility and get the best results possible from each grist. If this mill was doing an exchange business and could keep the amount of wheat ahead which they had piled up in sacks with a chance to blend so as to make an even run of wheat on the mill it would be possible to make a better clean-up and a more satisfactory flour to all of their customers. This method, however, would not be as fair to the individual farmer.

All of the farmers who came to the mill while there were interviewed. Many of them were having wheat ground every year; two had the second grist in this year; others had tried their flour at home; and they were all satisfied with the results of their business transactions at the mill, also with the bread obtained from the flour at home; and they were all satisfied with the results of their business transactions at the mill, also with the bread obtained from the flour at home; and they were all satisfied with the results of their business transactions at the mill, also with the bread obtained from the flour at home; These statements seem to be conclusively proven by the figu ard straight flour and only one of those milled at Phelps scores below a standard patent.

The average market value of this wheat is $1.10 per bushel; the average value of the mill products from a bushel milled here is $2.13, or a gross gain of $1.03 per bushel; and the average value of the mill products from a bushel as milled at Phelps is $1.95, or a gross gain of $5 cents per bushel.

The amount of wheat milled during the 24 hours spent in the vicinity of the Phelps mill was 319 bushels 3 pounds, gross weight, from which the farmers received the following mill products:

GET GOOD BREAD FROM THIS FLOUR.

From the data already given it would seem that the results at the commercial grist mill do not differ materially from the data secured at the experimental mill. The higher percentage of total flour, being due to a better cleaning up in the experimental mill at the end of each cut-off than in the case of the commercial grist mill.

From the cut illustrating the loaves of bread it is clearly evident that the flour produced at both the commercial and the experimental mills is capable of producing a good loaf of bread. The upper row in the cut shows the bread produced from flour made at the experimental mill, while the lower row is from that produced at the commercial mill at Phelps, Minn. At the extreme left in each case the loaf of bread is made from the standard flour of the crop of 1909, and does not show any advantages over the bread produced from some of the other flours of the commercial mill or of the experimental mill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has elucidated this matter and put it in a form that really modifies the amendment, so far as my views are concerned.

Mr. GRONNA. I am glad of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall feel constrained, however, to vote against the amendment, because I do not like putting these matters in the hands of the Government. But my vote will not count for much. I have no doubt the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want the Senator from New Hampshire to be satisfied. I fear that I have not fully explained it. This is simply for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to make tests. It is for research work. The committee has no idea that any flour will be manufactured for any other purpose than to make these tests.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has the Senator any objection to inserting, after the word "laboratory," the words "in the city of Washington"?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I have no objection whatever.
Mr. GALLINGER. I offer that amendment, then.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 6, after the words "Bureau of Markets," to strike out "$20,105" and insert "$15,105," so as to make the clause read:

For general administrative expenses in connection with the lines of investigation, experiment, and demonstration conducted in the Bureau of Markets, $15,105.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 7, after the word expenses," to strike out "$844,395" and insert "$784,395," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $784,395.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 6, to insert:

Hereafter, in the performance of the duties required of the Department of Agriculture by the sections of this act relating to the Bureau of Markets, the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and compel the production of books and

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply wish to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that it seems to me that it would be better to use the word "provisions" instead of the word "sections" in that amendment. There are no sections, as we generally know them, in the bill. It is all one section.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will give me his attention, the most that I have been able to do in connection with this bill is to criticize a little language. The first part of this amendment reads:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the existence of the pink boll worm of cotton.

Does not the Senator think it would be better language to say "pink cotton-boll worm"?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. How does it read here?

have not noticed the language.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Pink boll worm of cotton."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is its color. The worm is pink.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand: but would it not be better

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We want to designate it.
There are different kinds. This is the one that is likely to come here from Mexico, and it is pink.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand. I do not propose to change the color. However, if the Senator is satisfied with it, all right. Now, does not the Senator think that in line 16, where it says "and to prevent the establishment of such insect," it would be better to say "the introduction and spread"?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This is an amendment suggested by the department, and they used the terms that I suppose were satisfactory to them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. If it came from the depart-

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection, although I think what I have suggested would be the better language. However, I shall not urge it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina a little further about this "pink boll worm of cotton." This is a new pest, is it, that has appeared?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; a new one that has appeared in Mexico, as the weevil did.

Mr. GALLINGER. The weevil destroys a portion of the cotton and this worm attacks the boll?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it is a misnomer to call it a boll weevil. It really destroys the little shape in which the flower appears before it blooms. This worm attacks the boll

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I have read somewhere that this worm attacks the boll itself.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which the weevil does not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Wm. Elza WILLIAMS].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes additional to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the principal objection, the only objection, in fact, that has thus far been urged in this debate against this bill making an appropriation of $351,000,000 for our Naval Establishment is found in the argument advanced by members of the committee and others opposed to the bill, that the construction authorized by the bill can not completed in time for use in case of immediate hostilities, unless such hostilities should be protracted over a long period of time, and therefore authorizes a useless and unnecessary expenditure of public funds. The reasons assigned in support of this objection lie in the fact that we are already behind in naval construction, that contracts heretofore let have not been fulfilled according to specifications and time limit, and that contracts for the capital ships authorized in the last naval appropriation bill have not yet been let and their construction undertaken. It may be, it no doubt is, pertinent to inquire the reasons for the delay complained of. Some gentlemen place the blame in one place and some in another. The distinguished and important member of the committee, my esteemed colleague [Mr. BRITTEN], who, if not numerically, is intellectually the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, blames the Secretary of the Navy, while the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] frankly confesses that both parties are equally at fault, and that Republican administrations and Democratic administrations have been alike derelict and in default in providing those agencies and means of defense seemingly so necessary at this moment. If the cause has not been avoidable, if the contingency ought to have been and with reasonable foresight and precaution could have been foreseen and provided for, then no doubt the gentleman from Massachusetts is right in locating the blame not only in the present but relating it back to former administrations, and I much prefer to accept his version of the case rather than the irresponsible, whimsical, and garrulous vaporings of my distinguished colleague. The gentleman from Illinois, who imagines that there is a peculiar significance in the name, some kind of relation between his name and the Navy, fails to comprehend why no one takes him seriously, and has seen fit to severely criticize the present Secretary of the Navy and attach to him all blame for conditions, which the gentleman from Massachusetts says have existed for 20 years, and which everyone but the gentleman from Illinois knows are beyond the control of the Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the fact is that it has been impossible to let contracts for the construction of much of the work authorized in the last naval appropriation bill within the limits fixed by Congress, because of the fact that it has been impossible to secure skilled labor in sufficient numbers and because of excessive and exorbitant prices of materials entering into naval construction. To these reasons may be added the attempted extortion by sordid, selfish, unnatural, and unpatriotic manufacturers in our own country, who have taken advantage of market conditions, both of labor and materials growing out of the European war, and who would satiate their rapacious spirit of greed and avarice by giving preference to foreign orders for war munitions, and who by a system of commercial brigandage would imperil the existence of their own Government in the hour of emergency. This is clearly illustrated in the recent contract let by the Secretary of the Navy for armor-piercing shells to an English firm of manufacturers, who, notwithstanding the fact that the English manufacturers of war munitions are taxed to the utmost for home supply, underbid the American munition factories $200 per shell, while at the same time our domestic plants were filling foreign orders in competition with the English manufacturer in his own market. The gentleman from Massachusetts points a remedy, and says we should commandeer the American steel plants and shipyards and compel them to accept Government contracts for the manufacture of munitions, naval supplies, and ships in preference to all other orders, foreign or domestic, at a reasonable profit. This may be done in time of war, but I question the constitutional power of the President to exercise confiscatory powers of this character in time of peace. The Secretary of the Navy has not had the power of fixing the prices, reserving a reasonable profit to the manufacturer, nor the power to compel the steel plants and private shipyards to enter into contracts and undertake the fulfillment of orders for munitions, shipbuilding, and the like, and in consequence without fault of his has been unable to let contracts within the authority conferred upon him by Congress

Gentlemen may disclaim partisan motive for their charges, but the criticism indulged and the motive therefor are too illy disguised to deceive any one. I served during the Sixty-third Congress on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it was my privilege to become well acquainted with Secretary Daniels, and feel assured that I am within the limit of candor and truth when I say he has been actuated in every step by the highest ideals and the loftiest motives, and that he has discharged the arduous duties of his office with a zeal, fidelity, integrity, and ability equal to that of any former incumbent of that great office.

[Applause.]

The fact that we are delayed in naval construction by reason of conditions beyond our control is not a sufficient argument, to my mind, that would justify us in calling a halt and throwing up our hands in the face of the gravest danger and most imminent peril that has confronted us as a Nation since the close of the Civil War. [Applause.] No man knows what a day will bring forth. Our President has taken the justified and humane position that the high seas shall be kept open to the commerce of the world, and that merchant ships shall not be sunk without notice and opportunity to the passengers and crews to escape and reach a place of safety, except under certain conditions within the limitations of international law, and that the innovation of submarine warfare can not create an exception to nor change and avoid existing law, without the consent of all nations affected. The greatest military power on earth conceded our contention nine months ago, and gave promise that our interpretation of international law would thereafter be observed. That same power has within a few days notified the President that it will not longer observe its promise, but that, now equipped with an immense flotilla of submarines, it intends to go forth with relentless fury and prey upon the commerce of the earth. Not only that, it has undertaken, with an arrogance and defiance unparalleled in the world's history, to prescribe for us and dictate the conditions under which American commerce may be borne to the markets of Europe, to the very width of the stripe and the tone of the colors that shall herald the coming of a merchant vessel flying the American flag. The President, in an ultimatum last April, said that unless the method theretofore employed in submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels should be immediately abandoned, "the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations" with the offending nation. As much as I deprecate war, so abhorrent and appalling, I can see no way, in view of the present attitude of Germany, that we could have avoided the severance of diplomatic relations, with all the fateful consequences that will inevitably follow, and I, in common with this House and the American people, indorse and approve the course the President has this day pursued in breaking with Germany.

What is our duty under conditions of this kind in the face of danger involving the honor and imperiling the existence of our country? Certainly my answer will find no response in a do-nothing policy. This is not the time to hesitate and pause. There is but one course open to us, and that is to provide for immediate and future contingencies, and trust to the ingenuity, skill, and patriotism of the American people to find a way to speed construction.

If war comes, the President will find a way under the Constitution without action on the part of Congress to advance and hasten the construction of all work heretofore authorized and that may be authorized in this bill and by any emergency legislation that may be called for, and, to my mind, it is no good argument against this bill to urge the delay which has heretofore unavoidably occurred; and I am sure no good purpose can be attained by criticism of the character which has been indulged by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway]. Such action does not commend to me the patriotism and the Americanism of those who would criticize the administration at a time when the statements and attitude of Members of the American Congress antagonizing the administration will afford so much comfort to the enemy abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to an editorial appearing in the Chicago Tribune of date February 1, which seemed to me to deserve some consideration or attention in connection with this bill. That paper has been one of the loudest and most rampant publications in America in favor of the most extensive—in fact, almost unlimited—war preparation, and with its large circulation and prestige has exercised no little influence on the mind of the public in favor of preparedness. The editorial to which I refer reads as follows:

EXCESS PROFITS AND EXCESS BRASS.

Congress has been compelled by public sentiment to appropriate large amounts of money to enlarge the Navy. It ardently desires also to scatter post offices and Federal courthouses throughout the villages of the South. Combined, the sums make it necessary to bring more money into the Federal Treasury from taxes. Chairman Clauma Kitchin, of the Ways and Means Committee, is the man who must devise the means for getting the money.

The proposal which pleases him the most is the tax on excess profits of corporations. It pleases him because it will be borne entirely by the North.

North.

"You can tell your people," he argued to the southern Democrats who have shown themselves eager for pork, "that practically all of this tax will go north of the Mason and Dixon line. The preparedness agitation has its hotbed in such cities as New York."

It is highly satisfactory in Mr. Kirchin's enlightened philosophy to build post offices and dredge rivers in the South with money taken principally from other sections of the country, but when such a local issue as national defense comes up the North should be made to pay the bills.

The South is willing to contribute somewhat to the erection of its own post offices, but national defense is so extravagant that the southern Democracy does not want to contribute to it. If the North is crazy enough to want a Navy, the North ought to pay for it.

Mr. Kitchin not only admits that this proposed excess-profits tax discriminates in favor of the South, but he rejoices in the discrimination. It tickles him silly to think of penalizing patriotism. "Excess-profits taxes," he said in ecstatic manner, "will fall chiefly on those who have been clamoring for preparedness."

The proposed excess-profits tax is discriminatory in other ways than geographical. Large profits of partnerships are not to be taxed; large profits in individual enterprise, like farming, are not to be taxed. There is already one tax on incomes, and it is to be increased. Owners of stock in corporate enterprises are to be taxed a second time. Profits in other forms of industry are to be left untouched.

Mr. Kitchin and his pacifist southern friends are good spenders, but they want to spend other people's money.

It appears to me, when a gentleman of known probity and

It appears to me, when a gentleman of known probity and integrity, such as the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has stated that the language attrib-uted to him in this editorial was never spoken by him, that a great newspaper, whose influence and success in a large measure necessarily depends upon its reliability as a purveyor of political information would hesitate before editorially sanctioning or giving credence to a statement which every Democratic Member present at the caucus on the revenue bill knows to be false. I was present and heard what was said, and say to the membership of this House that Mr. Kitchin never said that "practically all of this tax will go north of the Mason and Dixon's line." In response to my request, Mr. KITCHIN has furnished me with a statement in which he says:

I said in caucus, as every man present knows, in answer to intimations that the larger portion of the tax would be collected north, that most of the appropriations, perhaps aine-tenths, for which the tax would be levied would be expended in the North, and properly so, because these States were better prepared to build ships, make munitions of war, etc. I never mentioned the Mason and Dixon's line, never uttered in the caucus or elsewhere any sentiment akin to that attributed to me.

The Tribune could find no legitimate argument, either against the revenue bill which was rendered necessary by the preparedness program advocated by it nor against the present Navy bill, which carries with it an appropriation of $351,000,000; but is so blindly partisan and so bent on prejudicing the minds of its readers against the administration and a Democratic Congress that unjustifiably and with manifest purpose to deceive and mislead editorially puts words in the mouth of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee which it knows are at least controverted and, in fact, denied by the man whose integrity the Tribune would hardly dare question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Whether or not it would be true if Mr. Kitchin had said that a large part of the revenue would be collected in the North.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I presume that if the tax was collected in proportion to the population and wealth of the country and the interests to be protected the bulk of it would be paid in the North. Everybody knows that our preparedness program and the expenditure or authorization of nearly a billion five hundred million dollars during this administration for the Army and Navy has rendered a new revenue bill necessary, and that the comparatively meager appropriations for rivers and harbors and public buildings, a mere drop in the bucket, contribute practically nothing to the condition of the Treasury, which requires either the issuance of bonds or taxation in addition to that heretofore authorized and provided for.

The public-buildings bill, which recently passed the House, and may not pass the Senate, carries with it an appropriation of but $32,000,000, and the rivers and harbors bill $38,000,000, and are the only public-buildings and rivers and harbors bills passed during this entire administration which carry appropriations for new projects, and represent but one twenty-sixth part of the total appropriations during this administration for the combined purposes of public buildings, river improvement, and the Army and Navy. In view of these figures, it is absurd to say that "combined the sums make it necessary to bring more money into the Federal Treasury from taxes." The viciousness of the editorial referred to, after all, does not consist so much in the misleading and deceptive assumption of fact, as in its patent effort to array section against section, solely for partisan purposes. In the first place, the same Democratic Congress, constituted with the same committees and chairmanships that voted appropriations for rivers and harbors and public buildings, is the same Congress that has furnished the country with the great preparedness program so essential to meet the alarming conditions with which we stand face to face, and it does seem strange indeed that a newspaper which has placed so much stress and importance on the question of preparedness can not be big enough and broad enough to accord a meed of praise to the Congress which has carried out the preparedness program which it advocates, and can not for the moment abstain from partisan sectional flings and insinuations. As to the publicbuildings bill, the fact is that there is equally as large a percentage of the authorization provided for in the North as in the South, and as large a proportion of questionable enter-prises, where the population and receipts of the office would not seem to justify the appropriation. As to the rivers and harbors bill, necessarily a larger proportion is expended in the South than in the North, because there the rivers of the great Central West, comprising three-fourths of the United States, converge and discharge their waters, and improvement of navigation in that section is as necessary to the North as it is to that section farther south, through whose lines of river transportation the products of the farm and factory of the North must find cheap transportation and outlet to the markets of the world.

Mr. Chairman, these observations are only incidental and have consumed more of my time than I intended. I favor this bill in its entirety. I would favor it if war were not imminent; and when I realize that we have severed diplomatic relations with the great German nation, I can not understand the theory on which any patriotic citizen can oppose it. The wires at this moment are burdened with the intelligence being carried to the remotest corners of the world that the United States has this day broken with Germany and awaits only an overt act, which God forbid, when a declaration of war may become necessary. Under these conditions and at this time, as one of the Representatives of the third greatest State in this Union, I feel it my duty to promote this bill and to sustain the President in every effort he may make to maintain the honor and the integrity of our Nation and the glory of its flag. [Applause.]
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] desires to yield some of his time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reckon that I might be called a belligerent pacifist. I am ready to fight those of this country who want to drive us into war.

Without any thought of what the future is going to say about me, without any political ambition and with but one concern, and that the future welfare of a hundred million people and the future of this Republic, with independence and liberty to her citizenship, I say to you I would not go to war and plunge a hundred million people into the consuming horrors of this unprecedented war because Germany threatens to violate our lawful right to navigate a 20-mile zone around the British

As certain as we live the submarine is going to revolutionize the present system of warfare and make it necessary to rewrite international law which was formulated prior to its advent as a potent and controlling factor in sea warfare, and therefore not recognized in present law. Under present law a nation to maintain a blockade must be able to enforce it by control of the surface of the sea. Submarines can not, out of their very nature, effectively operate against commerce under such restrictions Are nations going to abandon this most effective sea weapon, or will the regulations be modified to meet this new development? In my judgment the law will be modified so as to grant the fullest use to this most powerful factor in sea warfare.

Not with my vote nor my action in this House will we jump into war because these old standards of international law are not adhered to, and the whole thing of stopping neutral ships is not followed out in accordance with international law as adhered to under other conditions. The submarine is the only sea weapon Germany has that she can use in her present condition, and if she complies with recognized law she can not effectively use that. She claims she is fighting for her very existence. I am not willing to involve this country in an unprecedented world war because she in a death grapple incidentally injures us in violation of that law. We are told by proponents of this bill that an emergency confronts us. I pointed out a year ago that there could not be a single battleship nor battle cruiser built that would meet any emergency if we were confronted by an emergency. We are told now that there is a new emergency confronting us. I ask you to answer if what I stated a year ago was not then true and is not to-day the truth? Not a single ship provided for under that program is now ready for action. ask you again if it is not a fact that the nearest approach that we have to any of the things provided for under that program is a contract for submarines, made in December last, that will deliver us the first one in 22 months, and a submarine per month after that? Does that meet any emergency? Is not your program that you passed at the last session of Congress, which bellicose statesmen demanded as a preparation to meet an emergency. an unqualified fraud?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.
Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman from Texas is speaking of a five-year program. It was a three-year program that we adopted at the last session of Congress.

Mr. CALLAWAY. A five-year program was the one you first wanted to adopt.

Mr. BROWNING. I did not want to adopt any five-year program.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Make it a three-year program. It does not change the thing one particle. It is the same proposition. These warriors, acting under that three-year program, submit a bill that will cost, according to the estimates of the department, $392,000,000. The committee trimmed it down, by deferring some of the appropriations, to $354,000,000, and in that included appropriations for additional battleships of $55,000,000 that the minority report wants to cut out. We have not even a contract for any of the battle cruisers provided for in the last year's bill, and no prospect of a contract for battle cruisers in the future should we adopt this bill. We have a contract, executed in December last, for the battleships, and they are to be constructed within 48 to 52 months.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman state now or during his speech what war craft have been finished during the last 12

Mr. CALLAWAY. I could not name the different things that have been finished within the year; but nothing has been finished provided for in the three-year program that was demanded by the warriors. We ought to be reasonable men. Not an item in the program nor within this bill can possibly be constructed in time to meet the emergency they tell us now exists. Then why make this appropriation further than to carry out the items already begun and contracted for?

There is not a man in this House who knows anything about the evidence before our committee nor the conditions in this country who will deny that if war comes we can get the emergency equipment needed. Did not the Bethlehem Steel Co. tell our committee last year, and we submitted that to this House, that so far as ordnance is concerned they can turn it out as fast as we want it? One gentleman on the committee asked the question, Suppose we should get into war and the demand should be a war demand? The president of that company answered that it made no difference what the demand was, "You need have no fear that the American manufacturer can meet the demand." Asked about submarines, the Bathlet Asked about submarines, the Bethlehem Steel Co. said, when they were asked how many submarines they could turn out and how fast, that they could turn them out without limit.

Mr. KEARNS. How fast?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Without limit. The submarine is the war craft that is now being used. The submarine is the war craft that is doing the business. Suppose we are dragged into this. Let us be sensible. The allied nations to-day have unqualified control of the surface of the sea. All of the surface fleet that Germany has is bottled up. She is in exactly the same position so far as the surface craft is concerned as though she had none. The only thing she has on the high seas is her submarines. Can we add anything to an absolute and unqualified control of the surface of the sea should we engage in this war on the side of the allies? Not a single thing.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CALLAWAY. Wait until I get through with this statement and then I will yield. We can not add anything to the unqualified control of the surface of the seas. Then why talk about building surface craft to meet an emergency that we say now exists that possibly will involve us in a war on the side of the allies against Germany? There is no reason for it, nor can the three-year program add anything to that equipment. At present prices we have to pay from 50 to 100 per cent more than we would have to pay under normal conditions, and if the war goes on we can and will commandeer yards and use them for public business. Then why not hold on to see what the demand is and shift our building to meet the emergency under war conditions and not pass this bill that does not provide for any emergency and which could not furnish anything should we become involved? I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman has stated that in the hearings before his committee the Bethlehem Steel Co. representative had made a statement that that company could get out submarines as fast as the United States would want them at any time. How soon could they get out one submarine if we were to order it to-day? How long would it be before they would have that submarine ready?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Edison said we could have it ready in

Mr. KEARNS. And the Bethlehem Steel Co. can manufacture a submarine from beginning to end in 15 days?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Well, this is what the Bethlehem Steel Co. said in reply to the question:

The program as outlined in No. 1 could be more than doubled, or 4 battleships or battle cruisers, to be delivered in 38 months; 8 scout cruisers, to be delivered in 32 months; 16 destroyers, to be delivered in 24 months; 20 auxiliary vessels, to be delivered in 24 months; submarines in unlimited numbers.

Mr. KEARNS. Well, how soon could they turn out these unlimited numbers for the Government?

Mr. CALLAWAY. They did not say how soon but they gave the months for the others. I suppose they meant from that statement they could turn them out according to the types already designed as fast as you need them; that is what they say.

Mr. KEARNS. It certainly takes some time to build a submarine?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Oh, yes; it takes some time to build a submarine and it takes some time to build a 3-inch shell, but they say they can furnish all we want as quick as we want them.

Mr. KEARNS. Of course it does, and I was trying to get at the facts.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I suppose it takes some time to build a Ford automobile. I suppose the Bethlehem Steel figured they would do like Mr. Edison says, give one part of it to this concern and another part to another concern and another to another and then assemble them all together and you can build the submarines as fast as you want them.

Mr. KEARNS. I am asking for facts, I want information.

Suppose we ordered 50 submarines and want them to-day, how long would it be before we could get them?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman has yielded to me. How long would it be before we could get those 50 submarines delivered to the Government?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Edison says as quick as you want to.

Mr. KEARNS. We would want them in five minutes—no—Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield at that point? Did not the president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. state that after they had made a contract to build submarines to deliver to France or Great Britain-I have forgotten whichin 10 months, that after the contract was let the time for delivery to Great Britain was 10 months?

Mr. HENSLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the contract was for delivery in England within 10 months, and it would take only 5 months, as I understand it, to complete the submarines.

Mr. KEARNS. How many were there? Mr. HENSLEY. They contracted for 20, and they were ready to deliver 10.

Mr. KEARNS. How long did it take to build the 20 submarines?

marines?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.
Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CALLAWAY. I will.
Mr. KELLEY. In answer to the query of the gentleman, as I remember the testimony, Mr. Grace said that it would take a certain number of months to deliver the first—six or seven months—and after that they could turn out a certain number every week; I have forgotten the number.

Mr. CALLAWAY. That was for developing the type and starting at that time. Now, in regard to this contract, I want to show in what a predicament we would be, so far as appropriations in this bill are concerned, should we pass it.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. CALLAWAY. Just as soon as I get through with this statement. Material is twice as high, or from 25 per cent to 200 per cent higher now than under ordinary conditions, and the different concerns in making their contracts give themselves the benefit of present prices and time to deliver. They have given benefit of present prices and time to deliver. They have given themselves from 22 months for submarines to 4 years for battle-ships. Suppose we really got into trouble. We do not want these things in 22 months, we do not want battleships in three or four years, but we want them now.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. So we are bound up in contracts if we proceed under the terms of this bill or under the program of amount appropriated in this bill up at present prices for ships to be delivered possibly after every need for them has passed. Now I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLINE. What I wanted to inquire was this: Has the Government decided upon any specific type of submarine that we ought to go and construct?

Mr. CALLAWAY. The Government decided a year ago on the Schley type seagoing and a small 450-ton coast submarine. This year they have reversed themselves and adopted a type different from that of a year ago. This bill provides for wholly a new type of 850 tons that we have never had in this country.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes, sir.
Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from Texas how soon we would be able to complete a battleship under this program if we had to wait until our own armor-plate plant is ready?

Mr. CALLAWAY. We can complete a battleship, though we wait to construct our armor-plate plant, long before it is worth a dime. The battleship is a fraud.

Notwithstanding what naval officers may say or how loath they may be to give up magnificent floating palaces that provide all the comforts and conveniences of modern life for the submarine that is uninhabitable and only a work ship, the foreign war shows that the battleship is worthless.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CALLAWAY. I will.
Mr. PLATT. As a defense against the battleships and cruisers, has not the submarine in this war been proved a

It has been used against merchant ships.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I asked all the naval officers who appeared before our committee what a battleship would do in face of a submarine, and they said it would run in a zigzag course. I asked, "Can a battleship or cruiser fight a submarine?" "No." asked, "Can a battleship or cruiser fight a submarine?" "No."
"What can she do in the presence of a submarine or in submarine territory?" The reply was, "She could run in a zigzag course." There is your battleship. Naval officers tell us that submarines have not accomplished anything in the foreign war, but when confronted with the facts as to what occurred at the Dardanelles they are confounded. I will quote AshmeadBartlett, famous English war correspondent, on what occurred at the Dardanelles. The British effected a landing on April 25 at the Dardanelles. The British effected a landing on April 25,

Up to May 20 an immense fleet of predreadnaught battleships was able to lie off the coast and render the expeditionary army immense moral support by protecting its flanks and encouraging the troops, who love to hear the great shells whistling over their heads. On May 13 the Goliath was sunk in the straits during the night by torpedo attack. On May 20 the first submarine was sighted. The entire fleet had to weigh anchor and steer about to avoid giving a sitting shot.

And now we come to these superdreadnaughts that my friend from Illnois [Mr. Foss] told you were the fighting strength of the Navy. Dreadnaught! The dread nothing. Watch what they did at the Dardanelles:

The more valuable battleships, like the Queen Elizabeth, the Agamemnon, and the Lord Nelson (they are among the finest ships affoat) faded away toward the west and were not seen again. On May 25 the Vengeance was narrowly missed by a torpedo and the battleship Triumph was sunk. On May 27 the battleship Majestic was also sunk. On the following day there was not a single battleship off the Gallipoli coast. All had been obliged to fly to protected harbors for safety.

And the statement was that when the last battleship was sunk the smoke from stacks of the light surface craft, there to guard against submarine attack, which steamed toward the stricken vessel to rescue the drowning, obscured the sun, and they never knew from what source the shot came that turned her belly to the sun. I asked Secretary Daniels, when he was before our committee, why the German battleships and the battle cruisers had not been destroyed by submarines, and he said they were locked up in the Kiel Canal.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman must admit that the British send out destroyers and cruisers to hunt submarines with success right along.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will not admit such a thing, because if they had any success, why are we confronted with the Germans surrounding Great Britain in a cordon of submarines and defying the world to send supplies to them?

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true that the British have captured and destroyed from 100 to 150 German submarines?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I do not know whether it is or not. Mr. CALLAWAY. I do not know whether it is or not.
Mr. PLATT. That is what our Navy Department says.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Possibly they stated that for military rea-or four years, but we want them now.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. So we are bound up in contracts if we proceed under the terms of this bill or under the program of last year, and instead of facilitating matters it would tie the reports sometimes for military reasons, and you can not rely on We asked him what evidence he had, and he said, "The way they went down, that the stern and prow stuck out of the water after the middle had gone under, showing that she was blown in two in the middle, and nothing could have blown her in two in the middle but a submarine torpedo.

The trouble is that we are too everlastingly ignorant and credulous. Let us look at these things as they appear and reason them out like honest, capable men, and then call in our honest judgment and not be so helplessly dependent on interested experts and the public press. In Congress we are dominated by the press. I do not care anything about the newspaper reports. I am as unconcerned about what the newspapers say as I am of what posterity may say. What I want is a Government that insures liberty of thought and action, and does not grind the faces of the people for a lot of folderol and flummery.

Listen! Here is how we are dominated. Let me quote from Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois, member of the Ways and Means Committee. Talk about economy:

Mr. RAINEY. We are face to face with the proposition of lowering the income exemption to $1,000, and even if you do that also you will not raise this enormous sum of money. You can not progress here by proceeding along the line of least resistence. You can not conceal your head in the sand and flounder around here helplessly listening to the demands of 500,000 Government employees who want their salaries

Mr. Sims. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. Rainey. Yes, sir.
Mr. Sims. I fully agree with what the gentleman says, but is it not a fact that the estimates for military and naval expenditures this year are $300,000,000 more than they were last year?
Mr. Rainey. That is exactly true.
Mr. Sims. and all the world talking peace and permanent peace.
Mr. Rainey. And when we discuss lowering those expenditures for the Army and Navy from every metropolitan paper in this country comes the charge that we are guilty of treason against this Government. You can not lower those estimates.

Because the metropolitan press says that we are guilty of treason against this Government? Let me tell you something. This was written out and handed me by a man in a position to know. He would not allow his name disclosed unless he be brought before a proper tribunal, with power to summon witnesses, and put them on oath and follow the investigation to a conclusion, because he feared he would be fired from his job and he knew he would be hounded to death by newspapers.

and he knew he would be hounded to death by newspapers.

In March, 1915, the J. P. Morgan interests, the steel, shipbuilding, and powder interests, and their subsidiary organizations, got together 12 men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the most influential newspapers in the United States and sufficient number of them to control generally the policy of the daily press of the United States.

These 12 men worked the problem out by selecting 179 newspapers, and then began, by an elimination process, to retain only those necessary for the purpose of controlling the general policy of the daily press throughout the country. They found it was only necessary to purchase the control of 25 of the greatest papers. The 25 papers were agreed upon; emissaries were sent to purchase the policy, national and international, of these papers; an agreement was reached; the policy of the papers was bought, to be paid for by the month; an editor was furnished for each paper to properly supervise and editinformation regarding the questions of preparedness, militarism, financial policies, and other things of national and international nature considered vital to the interests of the purchasers.

This contract is in existence at the present time, and it accounts for the news columns of the daily press of the country being filled with all sorts of preparedness arguments and misrepresentations as to the present condition of the United States Army and Navy, and the possibility and probability of the United States being attacked by foreign foes.

This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposi-sibility and probability of the United States below.

This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposition to the wishes of the interests served. The effectiveness of this scheme has been conclusively demonstrated by the character of stuff carried in the daily press throughout the country since March, 1915. They have resorted to anything necessary to commercialize public sentiment and sandbag the National Congress into making extravagant and wasteful appropriations for the Army and Navy under the false pretense that it was necessary. Their stock argument is that it is "patriotism." They are playing on every prejudice and passion of the American people.

And here we have it.

What does Mr. RAINEY say when we talk about cutting down the military appropriations which are responsible for our deficit? "You can not do it, because the metropolitan press would denounce every one of us as traitors."

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I quite approve of a great many of the things the gentleman has said; but, speaking of capital ships, is not the large difference between the navies of Great Britain and of Germany the predominance of capital ships in the British Navy, and as a result have we not the open ports of Great Britain and the closed ports of Germany?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I can not understand, if we have the open ports of Great Britain, why we are raising such a howl at this time because Germany has closed them. We are confronted with this proposition where, according to the gentleman from Nebraska, the ports of Great Britain are open, and held open by the predominant fleets of the allies, which outnumber the ships of Germany three to one and so far as effectiveness is concerned, they are a thousand times the superior of Germany's fleet, and yet we are thinking of jumping into the war ourselves to open English ports. The allies' fleets have unqualified command of the surface of the sea, to which we could not add one iota by the addition of our entire fleet.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.
Mr. BURNETT. Is it not true that the same metropolitan press are the ones that are always howling "pork barrel" against the public buildings bill and the river and harbor bill?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes; but their preparedness "pork" is pork by the hogshead instead of by the barrel. They delude the public. They how at a little thing and favor the big. I am against river and harbor pork and all other kinds of pork. But all these other kinds of pork we are talking about are a mere bagatelle as compared with this. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I have but one minute, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it true that if our merchant ships are accompanied by a destroyer they would be able to make these ports in safety?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I have just stated that the British forces were accompanied by all the kinds of ships in the Dardanelles campaign, and yet all those ships left there when a German submarine appeared and began to sink battleships. A destroyer is as powerless in the presence of a submarine as is a battleship itself. Through a periscope not broader than your hand the submarine can ascertain the position of a battleship without the battleship being aware of its presence. Do you not remember one submarine sank three British battleships, and they went down without knowing where the shots came from?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The thing that I am interested in with respect to this bill and the thing that the minority is trying to cut out, that is beyond question of no benefit at all, is the additional authorization of capital ships that we can not possibly get in time for use in any emergency; an authorization that would tie up our money so that even if an emergency comes we could not use it for other things; an authorization that would give the department the right to make contracts at the enormous advance over even the prices that we have at the present time. I believe we ought to save that money to use in an emergency, should an emergency come.

If we get into war with Germany on the side of the allies at this time, what can we do? We can not send a man to that country, and our fleet will not be worth anything to them. They outnumber Germany now three to one. They have Germany bottled up. They have absolute control of the surface of the seas. You can not add anything to complete control.

We can furnish money; then why divert our money to the manufacturers who have grown rich already beyond the dreams of avarice, supplying materials and munitions to the belligerents at four prices?

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. How many ships have we had contracts for under the present authorization?

Mr. CALLAWAY. The battleships have been contracted for and the battle cruisers have not been contracted for.

Mr. CLINE. Have some of the types been reversed?

Mr. CALLAWAY. We have not a single submarine of the type which this bill provides.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The House is interested in the gentleman's statement that if we are drawn into the European war a single American soldier will not be sent to Europe. I would like to know why the gentleman makes that statement.

Mr. CALLAWAY. For the same reason I make the statement that our surface craft would be worth nothing to them. The allies together now have all the men they can concentrate on the lines, and what more do they want? They also have all the surface craft that they need to completely control the surface of the sea. What more do they want?

Mr. FESS. It is irreconcilable to me that we shall be drawn into the war and not be called upon to send-

Mr. CALLAWAY. I hope it is irreconcilable to everybody, and that we will not be drawn in. [Applause.] I can not conceive of America rushing into a war over the character of fighting that Germany is going to engage in against the allies, not us, in a little zone of 20 miles surrounding the isles of Great Britain. I can not see why our children should have a debt imposed upon them that they will not be able to shake off in two generations, because of the character of warfare Germany is going to carry on against the allies in a little zone of 20 miles around Great Britain. I can not see sufficient cause for involving 100,000,000 American lives and their future because of the character of warfare Germany is going to conduct against the allies in a little scope of 20 miles around the isles of Great Britain.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.
Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I just want to read from the hearings a statement of Admiral Badger bearing out the position of the gentleman.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I hope the gentleman will read it quickly. Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. This is what I wish to read:

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a fact that the mines, submarines, and aircraft prevented the great fleet controlled by the allies from invading the shores of the enemy?

Admiral Baders. I think it has had a very considerable effect, not forgetting the fortifications.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Has it not been the main thing?

Admiral BADGER. Yes; I should say it has been the main thing.

[Applause,]

By unanimous consent, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois, Mr. Stephens of Nebraska, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Gallivan, Mr. Tague, and Mr. Connelly were given leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR], a member of the Naval Affairs Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of great astonishment to me that at this time, with a great crisis confronting us, men on this floor should advocate a retarding of the movement for preparedness, so essential to the protection of the rights of this great country. A little more than 100 years ago similar sentiments were expressed on this floor, and for that reason we were compelled to submit to all kinds of imposition and forced to tolerate conditions similar to those which exist to-day, because we were not equipped to contend for our rights. That is the condition in which this great country is to-day.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FARR. Let me proceed a little while.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FARR. We are no better prepared than we were in 1812, and relatively, on close analysis, we are less prepared than we were in those days. The men who at that time opposed the plan to have this country prepared to defend its people, its rights, and its property carried with them to their graves a tremendous responsibility, because in all our history if one thing stands out more than another it is the sacrifices that we were compelled to make on account of our unprepared condition. The War of 1812, as well as several of the wars which followed that tragedy, ought to have been averted. And experts tell us that while we might not have prevented the Civil War, it should have been closed in six months if we had been prepared to blockade the ports of the South. That may not be true, but what a blessed thing it would have been had we been able to stop that awful war in six months, thereby escaping the rancorous, bitter feeling, the great loss of life, and destruction of property that occurred after the first six months of that dreadful contest. Now, we are just where we were in 1812, and right on this spot we are as vulnerable, or more so, than we were at that time. Experts frankly tell us that it will not be difficult for an enemy to invade Washington and get into Baltimore, New York, and Boston. We have 119 unfortified places on our Atlantic coast where the enemy could invade us easily. That seems so ridiculous as to be almost preposterous, but the facts will confirm the truth of these statements.

The great admiral who has so recently passed to his reward pleaded with his country almost with his last breath to get into a state of preparedness, and had we carried out his urgent recommendations and those of his associates on the General Board, by 1921 we would have had 48 battleships, of which 40 would now be equipped for service. To-day we have only 12 ready for action. Every expert tells us that if we go out with our 12 battleships without battle cruisers, of which we have none, we will be in the position of a man fighting with his eyes blindfolded. This Nation would have no eyes for its Navy with which to locate its enemy. The situation to-day is just what it was a year ago. Great Britain has twice the naval strength of Germany, and Germany with Austria, and, I believe, without Austria is transported. without Austria, is twice as strong as we are. If we had carried out the injunction of Admiral Dewey and his colleagues there would be no trouble confronting us to-day. We would not be compelled to meet this crisis. There would have been no attempt to hold up our commerce and to kill our people, as has been done.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Not just now. When Admiral Dewey at Manila Bay said, "Gridley, you may fire when ready," Gridley was ready and fired, and we know the result. The Spanish Navy was not ready, and our Navy, in a better state of preparation, had an easy victory.

Every expert who has appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs concedes that the submarine is a dangerous enemy—a sneaking, dangerous, menacing craft, but not one says there is any possibility of its displacing the great battle-ships. If a cordon of submarines extended along the entire Atlantic coast the enemy could invade our shores unless we had sufficient battleships to act in cooperation with the submarines. We have 3,000 miles of coast line on the Atlantic and some 3,000 more on the Pacific

What is the situation on the Pacific? Admiral Winslow—and no one will question his integrity, his sincerity, or his patriotism—stated to us without hesitancy that one modern ship would be able to destroy the entire Pacific fleet. That is true to-day.

What has the Navy of Great Britain done, and to what extent has the submarine interfered with her fleet? How has Great Britain transported nearly 5,000,000 soldiers to different ports in this great war field with the loss of hardly a transport? How could she have done it unless the big ship was more powerful than the submarine? How could she cross the English Channel as many times as she has with all of the troops, with the millions and millions of tons of munitions of war, with the millions of tons of foodstuffs, unless she had absolute control of the situation there? Great Britain's powerful fleet has been her salvation and that of her allies. Without it she would have been crushed.

There are people who believe that when we have completed the present program of 10 battleships and 6 battle cruisers, which will require about five years to build, we shall be second in the world's navy. Let us not deceive ourselves. We are poor fourth to-day, no change between now and last year; indeed, I think, if anything, we have lost ground—that France, notwithstanding she is engaged in war, has built more ships than we have; that Germany has increased her fleet very largely, and we know that Great Britain has. At the best we shall be third.

Germany has wonderful building facilities. She can construct at one time, or have in construction at one time, 25 dreadnaughts, and that will not interfere with her building a great many of the smaller ships.

England has facilities practically as great as Germany.

What now concerns us more than anything else is the construction of ships that we have authorized.

There is trouble somewhere. I am not going to say an un-kind word against anybody. I am not in harmony with all the talk against Secretary Daniels. I think Mr. Daniels is an earnest, honest, patriotic man. [Applause.] He has done many good things for the Navy and is a sincere advocate of preparedness, but there is a weakness somewhere in the system. The apparent friction between the Secretary and the private shipbuilders is unfortunate and to be deplored. Therein seems to be the cause of delay in construction of the needed

Neither do I concur in this attack on our munition makers or our shipbuilders. I regard it as contemptible. If we have war, we can not succeed without them. I can not conceive of a man with normal characteristics who would want to-day to plunge us into war in order to make money. I can not conceive that any such human being as that is in existence, and I do not believe there is. I believe these shipbuilders and munition makers are just as patriotic as people in other vocations. I think they want to serve this Government, but there is a difference of opinion between the Secretary of the Navy and the shipbuilders. There is a state of unfriendliness, a friction, that should not prevail. It is the duty of the Navy Department and the shipbuilders, particularly in this time of stress, to harmonize their differences so that we may go on with the construction of this program. The country needs the ships.

There appeared before the committee Mr. Ferguson, representing the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., which has built many ships for the Government. He said, "The Secretary, Mr. Daniels, and I are personally good friends. But," he continued, "if I could see that Mr. Daniels would consider the shipbuilding people in a friendly sense, we at Newport News by this time would have had the ways ready for the beginning of the construc-tion of a battle cruiser." That was his frank statement to our committee. That was a vital point, and I shall quote from the hearings to emphasize it:

Mr. FARR. Did I correctly understand you to say that if the Navy Department were just friendly toward the shipbuilding interests, your company would be now ready to begin the construction of a battle cruiser?

Cruiser?

Mr. Ferguson. I meant friendly in the business sense. They are very friendly in a personal sense.

Mr. Farr. Yes; but the sense that concerns us is the business sense.

Mr. Ferguson. Yes. If we had felt that the attitude of the Navy Department toward us was favorable in a business sense, and that we could get contracts from them, we would have put in the ways to take a battle cruiser. At least, I would have so recommended.

We have felt, whether we are right or wrong, that the Navy Department would not give us work which it itself could do; and, as I understand, that has been the attitude of Congress. Now, that does not encourage you to extend your plant.

Mr. Farr. And regardless of the price at which you are willing to do the work?

Mr. FARR. And regardless of the pirce at which you the work?

Mr. FERGUSON. If price becomes the criterion, we are entitled to fair treatment. Congress can get facts as to costs in navy yards. I think that it is not fair to presume to do a thing for a reason when that reason is not the true and complete reason.

That is the situation, and I want to say that there seems to be the obstacle in the way of building more expeditiously.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Did he not also say that they had 72 per cent of the yards in Government contracts?

Mr. FARR. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. And another one of the yards has also the same amount-72 per cent-taken up with Government con-

Mr. FARR. Yes. Mr. Chairman, great difficulties confront us as regards the construction of the battle cruiser. I can not imagine anything more wonderful in mechanism than this battle cruiser. It is the greatest ship ever conceived. It has 180,000 horsepower, and it will go through the water at the rate of 40 miles an hour. It used to take 40 days to cross the ocean, and this ship would go over in 4 days or thereabouts. These shipbuilders are in doubt concerning this proposed greyhound of the ocean. They frankly admit that there are many experiments connected with it. They are not ready on the instant to make contracts for it, and there has been a growing congestion in the yards. The price of material has advanced and the cost of labor greatly increased. I met a delegation of my constituents in Philadelphia on my way here on Sunday night, working at Eddystone, unskilled men, men who were taught to do something with munitions, and yet who were getting higher pay than the skilled men in our navy yards. Those conditions confront the shipbuilders. Because they do exist is no warrant to make the charge of unpatriotism against them or attempting to take advantage of our Government. They have just so much money for their business. They have to consider things as they are, and if it costs them more to do this work they must get more money for what they do.
Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Has the Navy Department gotten out plans and specifications for this battle cruiser as yet?

Mr. FARR. I think they are practically ready, and I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Browning] to speak as to that.

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Have they been submitted to the private shipbuilders?

Mr. FARR. I think they have been submitted. There is a difference as to the amount of money.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, they have called for bids on four of them. Mr. FOSS. Have any bids been submitted up to this time?

Mr. FARR. I think bids have been submitted, prices have been submitted, and propositions made that these yards are willing to go right on with the building of these ships.

Mr. FOSS. What is the trouble? Mr. FARR. The friction between the Secretary of the Navy and the private shipbuilders—this apparent unfriendliness that Mr. Ferguson in his sincerity and honest told us prevailed.

Mr. FOSS. It seems to me that at a time like this they ought to all pull together.

Mr. FARR. I want to say to the gentleman that is the statement I want to press upon this House. There ought to be no friction at this time; that it is our duty not only to back the President with our sentiment but to give him the means to protect our country, and we have not got them to-day.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] that the bids are only in a tentative condition. They have not made an out-and-out bid.

It is upon the percentage plan.

Mr. FARR. The proposition which the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., which is a subsidiary of the Bethlehem Steel Co., made was this: That if the amount asked by the ship company was not satisfactory they would produce their books and provide full information as to cost to the Federal Trade Commission and build the ships for the sum determined by that commission. The obstacle in the way is the friction between the department and the private interests. Let them get together and build the ships, and let them start battle cruisers, without which we would be absolutely helpless as against any reasonably formidable navy.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand that one of the difficulties is the time that the contractors require to build these battle cruisers, running into a large number of years. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether, in view of an emergency which might arise, they could not expedite that a

Mr. FARR. It is difficult with present congestion in work to expedite it, but I believe, however, it can be done.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. England has built that type of ship in one year.

Mr. FARR. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; she has.

Mr. FARR. England has put down a ship—that is, constructed a ship from the laying of the keel—I do not know how much work preliminary to the laying of the keel is necessary, and I would ask Mr. Browning as to that-

Mr. BROWNING. They can make arrangements for the material and have it on hand when the keel is laid so that they can go right on with the work, but no battle cruiser can be constructed in two years.

Mr. FARR. How long does it take to prepare for the laying of the keel?

Mr. BROWNING. It would not take very long for that.

Mr. FARR. A few months?

Mr. BROWNING. A few months.

Mr. FARR. I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that England is building battleships in two years and two months from the laying of the keel to the first commission. That was before the outbreak of the war.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I mean battle cruisers.

Mr. FARR. The battle cruisers we contemplate are so much larger, more powerful and speedy than the ordizary battle cruisers that builders say there is much that is experimental connected with their construction. The battle cruiser of the existing size, I believe, can be built as quickly as a battleship.

There are many clouds hanging over us. This Mexican situation is not settled, and if it were not for this great war in Europe foreign interests would have intervened before this.

When this war is closed unless peace comes to Mexico we must look for trouble there. Then look across the Pacific Ocean to Japan. The differences between us and Japan with respect to what California did have not been settled, and never so long as the Japanese character continues as it is to-day will they forgive this country for discriminating against their citizenship. I do not believe that Japan wants to fight this country and I know we do not want to fight Japan, but there are human elements that we can not dominate or determine.

The foreign view of the Monroe doctrine is that it is a question of might and not of right, and more and more as the South American Republics and the Central American countries develop in business opportunities will the question of the Monroe doctrine be an acute one. I realize we are spending a lot of money for the Navy, and sometimes it is a question of how we shall get this money, but we have either got to go on and build a fleet powerful enough to protect our interests or else stop building. Unless we have a fleet that is strong enough to protect us it is a useless fleet. If we are to have a navy, it must be strong enough to protect our country, strong enough to deter an enemy from attacking us, and strong enough if they do attack us to win. Any other kind of a navy is a worthless navy, and every dollar spent on a navy that will not be suffi-ciently strong to defend and protect us is a dollar wrongfully and uselessly spent. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in my own time I would like to say this: That if I were to be consulted alone I would have this committee rise and pass this bill unanimously to-day before the President of the United States reaches this House. [Applause.] But, inasmuch as I am but one Member of it and can not control the order of the House, I will ask the House to listen to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] for five minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the newspaper that I hold in my hand carries a headline that is ominous. Severing diplomatic relations with a great country is not tantamount to war, but may lead to it. The hour has passed for us to speculate upon what is to come. We are neither militarists, militants, nor pacifists. We ought not to be partial to one or to the other, but certainly we ought all to be strictly American this hour. [Applause.] I do not believe it is the best policy now to discuss unduly what we ought to do. I think the hour of debate ought to be past. If I had the right, which I have not, I would move that we pass this bill immediately. [Applause.] Differences of opinion on detail count for nothing, but whether we are going to say to the world at this time that nothing will deter us for one moment from standing solidly behind the President at this hour of crisis is all important. [Applause.] Nothing that would question that decision ought to come from this Chamber at this time. I hope, speaking as a Member who is not inclined to be free from criticism of those in authority, but always independent in my criticism when I think it justified, I hope that there will fall from the lips of no man here such criticism that might be regarded by the powers of Europe as unfriendly to the situation that the President now is placed in. I therefore simply speak my own convictions that we ought with one voice, without a dissenting vote, pass this bill immediately, calling upon the country, too, that every skilled laborer and every private shipyard employing them should be utilized to the fullest extent to put the United States immediately in a position of defense. [Applause.]
Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened to the gentleman with much interest. I am not particularly familiar with the details of this bill, which carries money into the hundreds of millions of dollars, most of it to be expended for a building program reaching through the years. I am not quite in harmony with passing What we need now in our present condition, I dare say, is something for immediate defense.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that we had a resolution ready to offer which will authorize the Government to proceed immediately to the construction of the existing program, throwing aside all sorts of other work in the yards so that this program may be completed at once.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. Rumor says that the President is to be here at 2 o'clock—I believe the House has been notified-to ask us to take into consideration what he has to say. I would like to hear what he has to say. I stand second to no man for helping by my vote to provide for the public defense, but let us wait until 2 o'clock. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield me a minute?

Mr. BUTLER. I will be glad to do so, or even a longer time.

I think the House on this occasion will not cut us off.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if anybody is going to take decided or decisive action, the wisest thing is to keep cool. [Ap-And I think what we need just now is to keep cool, wait for what the President has to say to us, and keep cool then [applause]: and whatever we do, do it, and not get excited.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr.

OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it has been asserted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] that he was surprised that anyone should now be willing to delay a building program. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I must say that if to anyone's action delay can be charged, it might be to the gen-tleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR]. Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at present. In the report of the minerity, which I hope you have read, it is clearly shown that you can not hasten the building of the program authorized and appropriated for at the last term, unless heed is given to the suggestions of the Secretary of the Navy, in which he calls attention to the fact that the shipbuilders are now unwilling to construct, or even undertake to construct, your program unless given a time limit of from 48 to 52 months, although the same shipbuilders had assured Congress, before the appropriations were made last August, that they could, yea, were fully prepared to construct these ships within 38 months. The minority have said, and now repeat, that it would be a mistake to appropriate for additional capital ships and scout cruisers until you can provide some method to insure the construction of the seven ships of these same types heretofore appropriated for, and which the Secretary has been unable to have shipbuilding companies contract for, either within the limit of time or amount fixed by Congress

Certainly this Congress will not now consent to give private shipbuilding companies 48 months to build battle cruisers in, when the same companies assured us that they could be built within 38 months, and will not give 42 months to these companies to construct scout cruisers, when they assured us that they could be constructed in 32 months. The same companies stated that the construction of these ships could be hastened and final completion had earlier than the limits just named, and Congress appropriated a bonus of 20 per cent to secure earlier con-The companies now demand the bonus of 20 per cent struction over and above the amounts fixed and appropriated as a fair price for building these ships within 38 and 32 months, respectively, and in addition thereto demand that the time limit shall he fixed at 48 and 42 months, respectively.

Why should we now double the number of these types of ships, although imperatively needed at this time by the fleet, when you find that those who control, or think they control, the building of these ships will use what they know to be your great need simply as an opportunity to demand more time and a larger sum for the building of the ships than we are advised should be given?

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. OLIVER. Not now.

Mr. FARR. I will wait until you are ready.

Mr. OLIVER. We pointed out in the minority report this fact, that if an emergency arises the Government should and would, no doubt, commandeer all shipbuilding yards and build not only the program authorized last year but might add thereto, and in this way construct the entire three-year program in half the time, which private shipbuilding companies now demand exorbitant prices for. Why, since we are agreed as to the immediate need of these ships, should we delay their completion for four years just to meet the unreasonable demands as to time and price demanded by the shipbuilding companies, and which the gentleman seeks to defend?

It is significant that last year you appropriated for each of the capital ships $16,500,000, and for each of the scout cruisers $5,000,000; and in view of the assurance of the shipbuilding companies that they could, by speeding up construction, complete the battle cruisers in less than 38 months and the scout cruisers in less than 32 months, you appropriated for speedy construction 20 per cent additional for each battle cruiser and 20 per cent additional for each scout cruiser.

The Secretary promptly advertised Now, what do we find? for bids on these ships, and the shipbuilders then demanded approximately $20,000,000 for the construction of the battle cruisers and approximately $6,000,000 for the construction of the scout cruisers; and, in addition thereto, 48 months as a time limit to build the battle cruisers and 42 months to build the scout cruisers, and actually urged on the Secretary of the Navy that the contracts should be awarded them, since, although the 20 per cent which they had included in their bid was appropriated as a bonus for speedy construction, yet since they then claimed that the battle cruisers could not possibly be built earlier than 48 months and the scout cruisers earlier than 42 months this, they told the Secretary of the Navy, would meet the requirement of Congress for speedy construction.

There are some whom, it seems, are now willing to give this additional price and this additional time in order to secure contracts from these shipbuilding companies. The minority is opposed to this, because they feel, as pointed out in their report, that the ships can and should be constructed earlier and for less money.

Now, in all fairness I ask, Who is trying to delay the building of ships for the Navy? Read the minority report, and you will find that if you will provide in this bill authority for the President to commandeer the shipbuilding plants and supply plants, so that the Government can take charge of them and see that these ships are built, the purposes of the minority report will have been fully met. [Applause.] The sole motive and purpose of the minority was to insure speedy construction, without yielding long time and large profits to shipbuilders. The report of the minority distinctly points out that they do not dissent from a single appropriation in the proposed building program, except where the Secretary has been unable to let ships of that same type previously appropriated for. Yet the gentleman undertakes to defend the shipbuilding plants under these conditions and to assert that the Secretary of the Navy is unfriendly to "big business."

The Secretary has been a real and loyal friend to the Nation. He has defied the subsidized press. He has defied the paid advertisements of the Bethlehem Co. and has said to Congress and to the committee: "My duty is to the Nation. You have authorized a building program, you have said what you wanted to pay for it and the time within which it should be completed, and so far as it lies within my power I shall not suffer these companies to demand more, either in money or in time." [Applause.] And let me say now you will find that, if an exigency should occur, your Navy to-day is stronger than ever before, and that they can shoot with wonderful accuracy. You will find, further, that it is better organized than ever before, and no matter to what duty you may call it, it will be ready to efficiently answer your call and uphold the proud traditions of your past. [Applause,

Mr. FARR. Now, will the gentleman yield there just for a moment?

Mr. OLIVER. I will.

Mr. FARR. Will not the gentleman admit that in all my talk I have not said one unkind word relative to the Secretary of the Navy? And will he not also say that during all our hearings last year—the extended hearings—I was among the earnest ones contending for the equipping of the Government yards in order to build these ships? Do you not recall that?

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad to say that the gentleman has been a genuine friend to a greater and more efficient Navy, and at no hearing has the gentleman ever intimated that the Secretary was not doing his full duty, and doing it to the best of his ability. But the things I complain of are not what the gentle-man has said or done in the past, but what he in the heat of debate to-day has thoughtlessly, as I think, given expression to, impliedly charging an effort on the part of some to delay this building program and that there was some justification for the claim of shipbuilders that the Secretary of the Navy was unfriendly to big business. Those statements are not in keeping with the past record of the gentleman, so far as my knowledge extends, and that is why I was so surprised that the gentleman should have given utterance to them on the floor to-day.

Mr. FARR. Did I not quote a shipbuilder—Mr. Ferguson, a friend of Mr. Daniels, in a personal sense—and did I not use his testimony that was before us?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; and Mr. Ferguson became friendly only when, after a few questions, if you will read the record, his attention was called to the feeling he was exhibiting in his references to negotiations between the Navy Department and the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., and was asked this question: "You are an ex-naval officer, are you not, and have not always entertained the views now expressed against the Government going into the building of its ships and the improvement of its And if you will read the hearings you will find that he had softened down considerably before saying that his relationships were so very friendly with the Secretary, in response to the questions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause.] Oh, when you make statements let all the facts come out, because no man can get a true idea of the picture unless he knows all the facts and circumstances that attend the taking of it.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman permit me to say that that is the very thing we do want?

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad the gentleman insists that he has always defended the Navy under the present administration.

Mr. FARR. Oh, no; I did not say that. It is not an adequate Navy, and I want one that is adequate.

Mr. OLIVER. It is deserving of anyone's defense, and the day will come when those who are in charge, and whose motives have been impugned by disappointed contractors and by a subsidized press, will be fully vindicated. It will be found in the hour of need that the Navy, which some, for selfish purposes, have sneeringly referred to, fully justifies Admiral Dewey's recent tribute, "that it is now more efficient and better able to meet any emergency than ever before, and its efficiency limitation is one of size only." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I will here insert as a part of my remarks the minority report.

Mr. OLIVER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the fol-

MINORITY REPORT.

MM. OLIVER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following MINORITY REPORT.

[To accompany II. R. 20632.]

The undersigned members of the Committee on Naval Affairs dissent from the report, submitted by the chairman of the committee, in respect to the report, submitted by the chairman of the committee, in respect to attile cruiser, and three scout cruisers, to be built during the state of the committee of the committee, and the Secretary of the Navy, in a letter on this subject to the country are unable or unwilling to complete the program with any assurance of speed in completion, even at prices which the department. The report of the committee at the first session of this Congress pointed out and specially emphasized the Navy's imperative present need?

If there was necessity then for the building of these types, the reasons are now more compelling, since a speech out of the second of t

With the shipyards already overcrowded with Government and private work and all labor available for building ships being now worked to its full capacity, it is a mistake to largely increase the Government contracts to be let out until some promise of real competition by shipbuilding plants can be assured. This competition will be assured:

First, When the European war is concluded (and this is not beyond the pale of reasonable probabilities during the present year).

Second. When our navy yards are equipped to build any type of ships that Congress may order (and this may be accomplished, so the Navy Department advises, with the appropriation carried in this bill for such purpose, in the same limit of time that will be required for private shipbuilding companies to equip their yards for the building of battle cruisers).

building companies to equip their yards for the building of battle cruisers).

It will be noted that we have not dissented from that part of the bill carrying appropriations for additional destroyers, submarines, and other ships, contracts for the construction of which the Navy Department has heretofore been able to secure, and we suggest that if the appropriation for additional capital ships and scout cruisers is postponed until the next Congress meets the Secretary of the Navy can be authorized to prepare the necessary drawings and specifications for said ships, so that hids may be asked for thereon in time for the submission of the same to the first session of the next Congress, which can then make immediate appropriation therefor if advisable.

It may be interesting to call attention to the five-year building program, which the President in his annual message at the first session of this Congress recommended and which the Navy Department then strongly urged. An examination of this five-year program will disclose that if appropriations for additional capital ships and scout cruisers are now postponed until the next Congress meets the building proposals recommended in the five-year program referred to will by this Congress have been substantially compiled with for the fiscal years of 1917 and 1918.

In conclusion, we will state that the bill as reported simply follows have been substantially complied with for the fiscal years of 1917 and 1918.

In conclusion, we will state that the bill as reported simply follows the authorizations provided for in the bill passed about five months ago by this Congress and does not undertake to provide a building program for any emergency. If a real emergency should arise, the Government would at once commandeer all navy yards and would wholly change the building program authorized in the bill passed at the first session of this Congress, and by thus assuming control of all private shipbuilding yards and devoting the same to the building of Government ships the completion of any building program required would be largely hastened, and it would be a serious mistake to have contracts outstanding whereby the Government had impliedly assented to a time limit of 48 months or more on some of its capital ships and 41 or 42 months on its scout cruisers. Even if there should exist in the minds of some ground for apprehending that emergency legislation may be required, this but suggests the wisdom of the recommendations hereinbefore made, so as to prevent committing the Government to contracts that would not be completed within the limit of time required.

WILLIAM B. OLIVER.

WILLIAM B. OLIVER WALTER L. HENSLEY, OSCAR CALLAWAY, JOHN R. CONNELLY, FINLY H. GRAY, FRANK BUCHANAN,

Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining. Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I want to ask this question: If we are confronted with an emergency, one that develops quickly-and it looks as if we are-is it not idle to talk about building the authorizations made in 1916 to meet this emergency? Have we not to complete the work on the old authorizations in order to in any wise deal with the emergency?

Mr. OLIVER. Unquestionably so, and the only way to do it is to give authority to commandeer the steel plants and yards should the emergency arise.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman feels that to continue along the lines of the authorizations of 1916 is really to enfeeble our

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; you may change your whole program, as you suggest, by reason of the conditions that may arise at any

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kel-LEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not say that I could not under any circumstances be induced to make a partisan speech. We all indulge in that here at times. my judgment this is one of the times when there should be no partisanship displayed-a time when we are considering the question of the defense of the whole country.

There has been a good deal said during the course of the debate about the present state of preparedness of the Navy. A good deal has been said about the length of time that it has taken the Government to build the ships authorized by Conand I want to say here that this is practically the only criticism of the Navy under the present management that I have heretofore indulged in, namely, that the department did not quite seem to realize that it could not proceed in troublesome days in the same deliberate manner in which we had proceeded for years before, when there was no cloud in the sky.

It may possibly be recalled by some of you gentlemen that shortly after the President made a trip through the country urging the country to build a greater Navy, particularly, I introduced a resolution in the House calling attention to the fact that at that time we had under construction $185,000,000 worth of ships. I made a statement upon that resolution in which I said it seemed to me that the Navy Department ought to take notice of that fact and bring about, if possible, a more speedy construction. While I have found more or less fault with the department because of the slow progress made, I have not been as critical as some, because I realize that there were some reasons why certain types of ships have taken a long time to construct.

Let us first take up the question of the submarine. It is true that it takes but a few months to build a submarine, and I think that has been one of the real reasons why they have not been built. We have really been experimenting all the time with the submarine, knowing that when the time came, if such a time should ever come when we would need them, that was one of the easiest types of ships to put into the water and would require the shortest length of time of any of the ships of the Navy for construction.

You gentlemen will realize that when we started in with the submarine it was a very small ship of 65 tons displacement, and the steady progress of the submarine has been toward a constantly increasing size, until a session or two ago when we authorized submarines with as high a displacement as 1,100

The reason why we have been trying to get a larger submarine is because the larger you get it the more efficient a weapon of warfare it becomes. In the first place, a small submarine is most uncomfortable for the men in even an ordinary sea. A little craft of 200 or 300 tons displacement, tossed out there on the sea, is like a cork on the waves, and the men become deathly seasick, and after a few days upon a submarine they have to come ashore and rest up for a number of days. Further than that, with a small submarine you can not go very far away from home. You can not take enough provisions. You can not take oil enough for fuel to go far. You can not take the necessary torpedoes for a long cruise. So the Navy Department from the beginning has steadily tried to work up to a larger submarine. Every time the size has been increased the difficulties of construction have been increased. When they got so they could make a 200-ton submarine they said, "Let us try a 300-ton submarine," and when they got the engines for a 300-ton submarine to work efficiently they said, "Now, let us go to 400 tons," and then 500 tons, and now in this bill we are providing for 800 tons and discarding the manufacture of the small ones altogether. Every time we have increased the size of these ships all kinds of engine difficulties have been encountered, and the Government necessarily assisted in this experimental work as far as it could. As I recollect, one submarine company failed utterly and the Government had to take those ships over and complete them. And so, while a number of these submarines have been a long time in construction, the fact that perfected types could be constructed quickly and that the weapon was in its infancy are probably the chief reasons for many delays. That, I think, would have been a perfectly valid excuse until this great war on the other side started, but for the two years and a half that that war has been going on I have been firmly of the belief that we should have com-pleted the best submarine that we knew how to make and get the country ready with as many of them as we possibly could.

But that is neither here nor there. We did not do it. We took the other course, and the question now is what to do in the future?

The same policy has been pursued about the battleships. I have complained particularly about the two battleships that were authorized on the 3d of March, 1915, two years ago, which have not yet even been started. The Secretary of the Navy, undoubtedly exercising the best judgment that he had, awarded the building of those ships to our navy yards, one in New York and one in San Francisco. The reason given for that was that the bids of the private companies were not within the limit of cost. It has been stated that had certain elements of expense which the Secretary of the Navy had a right to exclude, been excluded, they might have been awarded to private yards. But be that as it may, one of them was awarded to the Mare Island yard and one to the New York yard. At the Mare Island yard there was at that time no equipment for building such a ship, and Congress was not in session. We adjourned on the 4th of March, and there was no way for the Secretary of the Navy to get an authorization until Congress convened again in December.

When Congress did convene, a resolution was introduced by the distinguished chairman, Mr. PADGETT, and passed through the House, to fix up the Mare Island Navy Yard, which was done. The ship could not be started in the New York yard until a ship already under construction there was launched and out of the way. That ship has not yet been launched, so that the keel of the ship awarded to the New York yard has not yet been laid

Mr. PADGETT. There were no bids submitted by private contractors for either one of those ships within the limit of cost, and the navy yards proposed to build them within the limit of cost, and that forced them into the navy yards.

Mr. KELLEY. I think I made that statement. Perhaps the chairman of the committee was not listening to me all the time. I stated that the bids were not within the limit of cost, but I was under the impression that there were certain charges, such as paying for the expense of the trial trips, which the Secretary of the Navy had a right to exclude if he wanted to do so, which would have brought the bids within the limit of cost. I may not be quite accurate as to that. But be that as it may, looking backward over the situation, we can realize that it was rather expensive to defer the building of those ships.

Mr. BROWNING. If the gentleman will allow me, what he says could have been eliminated, is correct.

Mr. KELLEY. You will understand that the award of these two ships to the navy yards was not upon a guaranty of completion at the price named, but merely upon an estimate by the yards. Since that time, of course, the price of material has increased 30 or 40 per cent, so that the chances are that when we come to buy the material and count the cost which the Government will have to pay for these two ships to be built in the New York yard and the Mare Island yard, we will lose something like a million dollars on each ship because of the rise in the price of material.

But be that as it may, the question whether we lost or whether we gained in the matter of price, under the present circumstances, is not of great consequence, because the fact remains that two great ships, carrying each twelve 14-inch guns, firing shells weighing 1,400 pounds each, and with gun power enough to hurl those projectiles nine miles and put them through 14 inches of steel at that distance—two great ships of that kind authorized two years ago have not yet been started.

Mr. MADDEN. Was not their range 18 miles?

Mr. KELLEY. I want to be moderate in stating the dis-Now, those were the two ships which have been delayed, and I have stated the reason for the delay.

Mr. FOSS. What ships are those?

Mr. KELLEY. The California and the Tennessee.

Mr. FOSS. Have they not been started yet?

Mr. KELLEY. No; except, of course, some of the material has been purchased and is ready for the ship.

Mr. FOSS. Why were they not contracted for at the time? Mr. KELLEY. I think I stated just before my friend from Illinois came in that the Mare Island yard was not equipped to construct ships when ordered there. The New York yard had the New Mexico on the ways, and this new ship could not be laid down in the New York yard until the New Mexcio was

Mr. FOSS. Could not they be built by private contract? Mr. KELLEY. Bids were received, but they were not quite within the limit of cost. But, as I stated a moment ago, the Secretary of the Navy had the power to eliminate certain charges, such as a charge for the trial trip, and if he had, it would have brought the bids within the limit of cost, and they would have been awarded to a private shippard and three-fourths finished by this time. Ships of the same general type that were authorized by Congress many months later are now 50 or 60 per cent completed.

Mr. PADGETT. If he had waived those charges they would have had to come out of other appropriations.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; but I understand in more recent contracts they have adopted that course, or at least they are contemplating that course in awards to be made.

Mr. PADGETT. Not in awards. The shipbuilders are trying to get the department to do it in the case of battle cruisers, but the department has declined.

Mr. KELLEY. What we have gained by that course we have lost ten times over by the rapid rise in the cost of material. I am not blaming the Secretary of the Navy for not having the gift of prophecy to see the rise in the cost of material or labor but am simply stating a fact.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Congress at the last session ratified what was done in relation to building the ship in the Mare Island yard by appropriating $500,000 to equip the yard.

Mr. KELLEY. I am only stating the facts and explaining how the delay of two years has come about in the construction of these two great dreadnaughts which ought to be at this time almost fully completed.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is discussing the delay in the construction of authorized vessels. That same question has been discussed on the floor in the last day or two. May I ask the gentleman if he intends to offer any cure therefor?

Mr. KELLEY. I do; I will discuss that in a moment.
Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KELLEY. I will.
Mr. WINGO. How many capital ships that are not yet completed and how many of these authorized ships under contract have been let? In other words, what is the total number of capital ships authorized and not completed, and how many have not been started?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman will find all of that in the hearings

Mr. KELLEY. Then I will not take the time to answer the gentleman from Arkansas now.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KELLEY. Yes.
Mr. SAUNDERS. I want to get some information as to the details of construction or authorizations made by this House. I understand the gentleman refers to two ships authorized two years ago.

Mr. KELLEY. Just two years ago.

Mr. SAUNDERS. After the authorization is made, what in the due course of things is the next thing to do looking to the ultimate construction?

Mr. KELLEY. After the authorization the plans are prepared.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Are these plans of a nature that calls for careful work?

Mr. KELLEY. I will say that three ships authorized by the House six months later than the two ships I speak of are half completed

Mr. SAUNDERS. The same type of ship?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; but better and bigger ships. Mr. SAUNDERS. What is the explanation of the delay in these two particular ships?

Mr. KELLEY. I have explained that three times already, but to satisfy the gentleman, who has come in since I started to speak, I will state it again. I do not know as I ought to take the time to explain it again, but the gentleman from Virginia is interested in this matter and I will go over it once more.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wanted information on this point. There are of necessity certain preliminaries that have to take place. I want to know if there was any negligent delay in this matter.

Mr. KELLEY. No; the situation is this: The Secretary advertised for bids and those bids came in. They were outside of the limit of cost. So the Secretary accepted an estimate from the Mare Island Navy Yard and also an estimate from the New York yard. The Mare Island yard was not equipped to build this type of ship, and we had to build ways and get extra machinery. Congress was not in session, as I recollect, and so it had to go over until Congress did convene in order to fix up the ward to build the philar. fix up the yard to build the ships.

In the New York yard there was another ship previously on the ways, and we could not construct this ship until the other was launched, and that has not been launched yet. So the two

Now, the bids, as I say, were outside the limit of cost. There are certain charges that the Secretary of the Navy has the right to waive if he desires. One of these is the charge for conducting the trial trip; another, the cost of insuring the ship during the progress of construction. All of these are optional with the Secretary, and he might have waived them and awarded the contracts to private yards. Had he done so he would have lost a few thousand dollars, but he would have saved a million dollars on the cost of the raw material for each ship. I am not blaming the Secretary for not having the foresight to have seen that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What I wanted to ask was whether there was anything in good administration that the Secretary ought to have done with reference to the facts of the situation as understood that he did not do.

Mr. KELLEY. I am blaming the Secretary only because we were living in a time of war. If we had been living in a time of peace it would have been all right to postpone the work as

Mr. CANNON. When all this was taking place the Secretary knew that the world was then on fire and the sparks might explode in this country at any time.

Mr. KELLEY. That is the proposition. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois has stated my objection that at that time when we ought to have been putting our house in order, when even the President was insisting that conditions were dangerous, and shortly after made a trip through the country in which he said it had been very hard for him to keep the country out of war, and from the further fact that he was elected at the last election because he had kept the country out of war, the Secretary should not have delayed the building of these two great dreadnaughts for two years.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am not trying to get into that sort of thing. I am trying to develop the facts.

Mr. KELLEY. I will ask the gentleman not to take too much of my time.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have not taken much of the gentleman's time. I want to ascertain if there was anything that the Secretary in good administration ought to have done which he did not do, and what that was. That is all that I wanted to deter-

Mr. KELLEY. I am telling the gentleman that, in my judgment, under these conditions, with the world on fire as it was

Mr. SAUNDERS. That he had authority

Mr. KELLEY. I would have let the contract to a private contractor instead of letting it to a yard which could not be gotten ready for six months, even after Congress had convened to appropriate the money.

Mr. SAUNDERS. In other words, that he had the authority to have done something-

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; he had.

Mr. SAUNDERS. And if he had exercised that authority in the course of good administration, these ships would be more advanced than they are now?

Mr. KELLEY. These ships would have been two-thirds done.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is all I want to develop.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I know that the gentleman wants to be entirely fair in presenting all of the facts connected with those ships, and in reply to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], I am sure the gentleman from Michigan will state that part of the delay was occasioned by an inquiry on the part of the Engineering Department into the question of how the ships could be made immune from torpedo attack.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, yes.
Mr. OLIVER. And that report was filed with the committee, and that inquiry did lead to very material changes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wanted to get those facts.

Mr. KELLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the inquiry business has been carried too far, in times like this, and that instead of making so much inquiry we ought to build something that we know we can build. Now, in reference to the delay in the construction of new work.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, would it suit the convenience of the gentleman from Michigan to suspend his argument at this point and let the committee rise, so that the House may stand in recess until about 5 minutes of 2 o'clock?

Mr. KELLEY. I am entirely willing to yield for that pur-

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I intend to ask unanimous consent before we go back into the committee that the gentle-man may have a few minutes of additional time. He has been interrupted a great deal.

Mr. PADGETT. That can not be done in the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I intend to do that in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has only three minutes remaining.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to try to get some more time when we are in the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I will defer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20632 and had come to no resolution thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. The CPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker appoints the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] to preside over the House to-morrow.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for

The SPEAKER. On the part of the House the Chair appoints Messrs, Kitchin, Fitzgerald, Flood, Mann, and Cooper of Wisconsin as a committee to wait on the President and escort him into the House. The Vice President will make the aunouncement for the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Vice President appoints Senators Kern, Stone, Simmons, Gallinger, and Wadsworth.

At 2 o'clock and 1 minute p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representa-tives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Sixty-fourth Congress, I present the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and gentle-men of the Congress, the Imperial German Government on the thirty-first of January announced to this Government and to the governments of the other neutral nations that on and after the first day of February, the present month, it would adopt a policy with regard to the use of submarines against all shipping seeking to pass through certain designated areas of the high seas to which it is clearly my duty to call your attention.

Let me remind the Congress that on the eighteenth of April last, in view of the sinking on the twenty-fourth of March of the cross-channel passenger steamer SUSSEX by a German submarine, without summons or warning, and the consequent loss of the lives of several citizens of the United States who were passengers aboard her, this Government addressed a note to the Imperial German Government in which it made the following declaration:

"If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether."

In reply to this declaration the Imperial German Government

gave this Government the following assurance:

"The German Government is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German Government believes, now as before, to be in agreement with the Government of the United States.

The German Government, guided by this idea, notifies the Government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

"But," it added, "neutrals can not expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interest, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality, and the German Government is convinced that the Government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the Government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been vio-Inted.

"The Government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the Imperial German Government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the United States and other than the course of the United States and other than the course of the United States and other than the course of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and other than the state of the United States and the state ment of the United States and any other belligerent Government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction. In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it can not for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other Government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint; absolute, not relative.'

To this note of the eighth of May the Imperial German Government made no reply.

On the thirty-first of January, the Wednesday of the present week, the German Ambassador handed to the Secretary of State, along with a formal note, a memorandum which contains the following statement:

"The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente-Allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central Powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intentions of the Entente-Allies give back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserves in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the Eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc.

All ships met within the zone will be sunk.' I think that you will agree with me that, in view of this declaration, which suddenly and without prior intimation of any kind deliberately withdraws the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of the fourth of May, 1916, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honour of the United States but to take the course which, in its note of the eighteenth of April, 1916, it announced that it would take in the event that the German Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare which it was then employing and to which it now purposes again to resort.

I have, therefore, directed the Secretary of State to an nounce to His Excellency the German Ambassador that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire are severed [applause] and that the American Ambassador at Berlin will immediately be withdrawn; and, in accordance with this decision, to hand to His Excellency his

Notwithstanding this unexpected action of the German Gov ernment, this sudden and deeply deplorable renunciation of its assurances, given this Government at one of the most critical moments of tension in the relations of the two governments, I refuse to believe that it is the intention of the German authorities to do in fact what they have warned us they will feel at liberty to do. I cannot bring myself to believe that they will indeed pay no regard to the ancient friendship between their people and our own or to the solemn obligations which have been exchanged between them and destroy American ships and take the lives of American citizens in the wilful prosecution of the ruthless naval programme they have announced their intention to adopt. Only actual overt acts on their part can make me believe it even now. [Applause.]

If this inveterate confidence on my part in the sobriety and prudent foresight of their purpose should unhappily prove unfounded; if American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understandings of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the Congress, to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas. [Applause.] I can do nothing less. I take it for granted that all neutral governments will take the same course.

We do not desire any hostile conflict with the Imperial German Government. We are the sincere friends of the German people and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the Government which speaks for them. We shall not believe that they are hostile to us unless and until we are obliged to believe it; and we purpose nothing more than the reasonable defense of the undoubted rights of our people. We wish to serve no selfish ends. We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and in action to the immemorial principles of our people which I sought to express in my address to the Senate only two weeks ago, - seek merely to vindicate our right to liberty and justice and an unmolested life. These are the bases of peace, not war. God grant we may not be challenged to defend them by acts of wilful injustice on the part of the Government of Germany! [Applause.]

At 2 o'clock and 16 minutes the President retired from the Hall of the House.

Thereupon the Vice President and Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber,

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the title of which the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have we remaining on this side, if any?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has one minute remaining.

Mr. BUTLER. And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Keller] has how much remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the only minute that is remaining. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow, the Chair desires to state the gentleman from Michigan had three minutes remaining when the committee rose.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Michigan begins, I understood the Chair to announce that he had Michigan begins, I understood the chair to discuss three minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. He has three minutes remaining.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] has one minute which he proposes to yield to the gentleman from Michigan, as he informed me, and I have 52 minutes remaining, and I was going to yield 12 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has one minute remaining, which he yields to the gentleman from Michigan.

minute remaining, which he yields to the gentleman from Michigan, and the gentleman from Tennessee yields 12 minutes additional, and the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, before the House went into recess I was discussing the delays in the construction of the Navy in the past, and now I want to discuss the question of the construction of the ships heretofore authorized that are not now begun or contracted for. In the bill we passed in August we authorized the construction of four dreadnaughts and four battle cruisers.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield for me to ask him a

Mr. KELLEY. I have only 16 minutes.

Mr. CRISP. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman. I would like to know if under existing conditions, when we should all be careful of what we say and do, if the gentleman would not be willing for the chairman of the committee to ask unanimous consent that the bill be read through without discussion, reported to the House, and passed by unanimous consent. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will relieve the gentleman from Michigan from answering the question; I should object.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying in the last bill, we authorized the construction of four dreadnaughts and four battle cruisers. Contracts have already been awarded for the construction of the four dreadnaughts, but as yet no contracts have been awarded for the four battle cruisers. son why no contracts have been awarded for the battle cruisers is that the bids ran about $2,000,000 in excess of the amount authorized in the bill last August. Under those circumstances it was impossible, of course, for the Secretary of the Navy to let a contract for those ships. Now, in the bill which was passed in August we realized that it would be pretty difficult both for the Government and the shipbuilders to ascertain what would be a fair price for ships of this character, as they were entirely a new type of ship, especially at a time when the prices of labor and materials were constantly rising. Business men naturally hesitate about going into a $20,000,000 contract, or thereabouts, covering a period of three or four years, when the price of labor and materials is steadily advancing. So we put in the bill at that time a provision that if it were advisable and the circumstances at the time warranted it the Secretary of the Navy might enter into a contract for these ships upon a percentage plan—that is, the Government to pay for the cost of the labor and material and a contract property of the cost of the labor and material and a contract property of the cost of the labor and material and a contract property of the cost of the labor and material and a contract property of the cost of the labor and material and a contract property of the cost of the labor and t and material and a certain percentage for overhead and profit on top of that. This is the only kind of a bid that any of the shipbuilders of the country desired to make, and it seemed, in the judgment of the department and in the judgment of the shipbuilders, that under all the circumstances it was a reasonable sort of contract to make at a time when nobody could tell what the price of labor or materials might be month by month. As I say, the estimate of cost is higher than that provided in the bill, and so this bill provides for increasing the authorization from sixteen and a half million dollars for machinery and hull to $19,000,000. Now, of course, if the contracts are awarded on that basis, as the construction of the ships proceeds, if the price of labor or material falls, then Congress will get the benefit of such decline in price, and so it is thought that with this authorization of $19,000,000 there will be no difficulty, probably, in arranging for the contracts of all the ships of this type which were authorized in the last bill.

But the time for construction which these shipbuilders place finally after much canvassing of the situation between themselves and the Government, is 46 months at the best. This introduces a further element of delay which was not contemplated by Congress when the authorization was made and which under all the circumstances of the situation to-day, it seems to me should not be permitted if there is any way to avoid it. Now, this bill makes an appropriation for three more dreadnaughts and one more battle cruiser. There will be no difficulty in making contracts for these ships probably on the same basis as the others. But the time question, as is proposed by the present authorization, is 44 to 46 months. Now, the reason which they give for not being able to complete these ships any sooner than 46 months is the fact that they claim it is absolutely impossible to get the labor with which to do the work; that it is not a question of material, or question of extending the facilities, because they are willing to extend them and have them all ready by the time the material is ready, but that it is absolutely impossible to increase the number of shifts because the entire shipbuilding skill of the country is already employed. Much of it, of course, employed upon private contracts for American citizens and for citizens of foreign countries.

And so we come squarely up to this proposition, it seems to me: This Government is entitled to have such protection as we here, representing the American people, deem it wise that we should provide. But it is utter folly for us, it seems to me, under the conditions now confronting the country, to make contracts that will run over 46 months before the ships are ready.

Now, the Secretary of the Navy himself has suggested a remedy in the form of some proposed legislation, and I will read the Secretary's proposition:

Draft of proposed provision for insertion in the naval appropriation bill giving the Navy Department authority to require private manu-facturers to give preference to Government work.

In all cases where contracts have been made or orders placed for ships, or munitions, or material entering into the construction of ships or the making of munitions, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered, when in his judgment the exigencies of the public service demand it, to require the contractor or the individual company, association, or corporation with which such order may have been placed to give preference to the fulfillment thereof and precedence of the work over all other work except for the Government.

Now, gentlemen, if we are going to have these ships, there is only one way to get them. There is not labor enough of this character in the United States to complete the work for private individuals now in these yards and also complete the work for the Government inside of a period of 46 months. therefore, it seems to me, in justice to the people of the country at large, we ought to take steps in this bill to see to it that the protection of the American people is attended to first before other work is carried on. Now, as I take it, there is no other course open. I know of no other possible way. Forty-four to forty-six months is too long a time, but if we withdraw the men from private contracts and put them onto these Government contracts and perhaps temporarily suspend the eight-hour provision, so that the men might work 10 hours instead of 8-and I am only suggesting that—we could shorten the time of construction of these ships from 46 months to somewhere about 20 months. And that perhaps might even be shortened. rate, it seems to me, whatever the future may have in store for this great people, we ought not to take any chances by deferring the needed and necessary work for this Government for anything like 44 months. [Applause.]
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. I can not yield just now.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has made a minority report, a gentleman for whom I have the very highest esteem and who has rendered great service to this House in the Committee on Naval Affairs. His objection to this appropriation for ships is not because he does not desire that the ships shall be built, but that they are being deferred too long. And, while he is in company on the minority report with some members of the committee who perhaps would not build any ships at all, I want to say for the distinguished gentleman from Alabama that I believe if this provision, or some such provision, is inserted in the bill as would insure the speedy construction of these ships, he will withdraw his support from those making the minority report.

Mr. OLIVER. And I think I can state that is true of every member who signed the minority report.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield at that point? would like to get it straight in the Record as to why there is a delay. Is it due to the refusal of the private shipowners to do the work for the Government?

Mr. KELLEY. No; they can not get the men to do it. They are willing to do the work without any question, willing to go ahead and make the necessary improvements to get their yards ready, so as not to delay the construction of the ships, but the shortage of men, owing to the great amount of work in the private yards of the country, makes it impossible to do this work in any shorter period of time. And that is why the Government of the United States, exercising its sovereign authority, is entitled to go into these yards and ask that the Government . business be given precedence.

Now, it seems to me, if we are going to be sure as a people, that the rights of our citizens are to be protected everywhere in the world, when they are where they have a right to be, and when they are behaving themselves. And I want to say that the nation that does not protect its citizens on land or on sea, under these circumstances, is apt to wake up too late to find that, on the other hand, it has lost the protection of its citizens.

plause.] This matter of protection is not a one-sided proposition. the American people should ever get it into their heads that they were to be called upon when the Government was in danger, but that the Government would not respond in like degree when the citizen was in danger, the beginning of the decline of patriotism and love of country would be at hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is an hour for reflection and serious consideration, and I desire to address myself to the best intelligence and patriotism and wisdom of the Members of the House.

It has been my practice as well as my belief in the years gone by that there should be no partisanship in the Navy or in the legislation for the Navy. It has been my conviction that parti-sanship should stop at the water's edge, if not before, and I believe that under the circumstances and conditions in which we find ourselves at this time that sentiment will find a cordial reception and expression from every Member of the House.

In the discussion that has taken place there are two matters that have been presented to which I desire to call attention: One of them, that was presented in one phase, but which during the discussion has been very much modified and mollified, was that there should be a postponement of the construction of the battleships and the battle cruisers and the scout cruisers proposed in the pending appropriation bill. That may be an unimportant matter as to which Members may disagree, but to me it is a very important question. In the last session of the Congress this House by a very large majority, free from partisanship, in which both sides joined, adopted a three-year program to build a definite number of battleships, battle cruisers, submarines, torepod-boat destroyers, and other auxiliary ships not necessary to enumerate in detail, and in the bill last year we made appropriation for the immediate construction of a certain number of these vessels of various types. We are now approaching the question of appropriating for the second year's portion of the three-year program.

Let me sum up in a few words. In the last session of Congress by solemn enactment of law we declared in favor of and provided for a definite program of construction. hands to the plow. I do not propose to look back. We made a covenant with the people, and I regard that covenant with the people of this country with the same sincerity and solemnity as I regard a covenant with my God. [Applause.] Gentlemen, this is not the hour to hesitate. In this hour "he who hesitates is lost, and he who doubts is damned." [Applause.]

Again, my friends, I shall take no further notice of that, because I do not believe there is any serious purpose or intention on the part of the membership of this House not to carry out in the utmost good faith the program that was determined upon at the last session of the Congress.

Now, another question has been raised, and that was a very severe criticism of the administration of the Navy Department. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten], a member of the committee, deemed it proper, in very caustic language and by a demeanor that indicated an intense feeling, to subject, or attempt to subject, the Secretary of the Navy to a very severe arraignment and criticism with reference to the construction of ships, and I deem it well to call attention to some of the matters with reference to that. The gentleman from Illinois called attention to the submarines. Let me invite your attention for a moment, if you please, to some matters in that respect. You will bear in mind, as was so well explained by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley], who has just taken his seat, that the submarine has been and is now in a state of development and transition. He stated that the first submarine was of about 200 tons' surface displacement. He overstated it. They were about 65 feet long and of about 65 tons' displacement, as I now remember. They were very small. Construction of a number of them was authorized June 7, 1900. The contracts were signed August 25, 1900. The contract date of completion was April 25, eight months. The contracts provided for the completion of these little 65-foot 65-ton submarines in eight months. And yet, as a matter of fact, they were not completed, one of them, until June 24, 1903, and the earliest one on January 9, 1903; in other words, more than two years after the time of expected completion.

Why? Because there developed difficulties—things that were never contemplated. Complications arose, so that in respect of these small submarines that they contracted to deliver in eight months they were two years and eight months in delivering them.

Several years ago, when Admiral Cone, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, was before our committee during the administration as chairman of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], the question was asked, "What about the engines in the submarine?" They were telling us of the troubles and the difficulties, and I asked, "How many parts or pieces are there in one of these engines?" And he said, "Between 1,400 and 1,500 different pieces." Later on, by reason of improvements and developments, they had reduced them down to 700 or 800 pieces.

You see at once in this an illustration of some of the troubles that have been encountered. We have not yet been able to get satisfactory storage facilities or batteries for the electricity. Only a few months ago experimenting with the Edison battery in a submarine there was an explosion that killed 5 or 6 work-men and injured 8 or 10 or 12 additional workmen, rest on what we had. The duty of the administration to the people of this country was to progress and secure the very best that could be had in the study and development of the submarine construction, as well as in the batteries, in the engines, and in the hull and machinery. I could take up, if you please, the history of this and show you that it has been one continued development in all the types. As they have progressed from a better to a better and still better submarine they have experienced difficulties. My friends, bear in mind also when you read in the newspapers about foreign accomplishments, that they are advertising their exceptional successes, and that in this country we are advertising our failures.

You can take the same thing with reference to destroyers and the same with reference to the building of battleships. back in the other days, when the battleships were of a displacement of from 12,000 to 16,000 tons or up to about 20,000 tons displacement, they were from six to seven years in constructing them, though they were much simpler. And you could take the various other types. I am mentioning this not for the purpose of invidious comparison, but to show you that this administration and the preceding administrations have had their same difficulties, and it has always been to me a matter of confort that, as chairman of this committee during the latter two years of the administration of President Taft, when there was a Republican Secretary of the Navy, I realized and appreciated the difficulties under which we were laboring in these matters, and I attempted to lend him a helping hand, and not to go after him in bickering and in violent denunciation and criticism. [Applause.] The department had its difficulties and its troubles, and upon several occasions the former Secretary of the Navy saw fit to express to me his thanks and his appreciation of the way in which I had labored and cooperated with

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman knows my great feeling for him, but I have been on that committee, and the gentleman may know that we had differences with Secretary Meyer when he was there

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly. I did not agree with his policy in many respects. Many of his policies I did not agree with. I have not seen fit to agree with all the policies of the present Secretary. And yet, as a matter of fact, while I have differed with him upon many of his policies, while I saw fit to criticize some of his acts, I always saw fit to do so upon the merits of the matter.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes,
Mr. TOWNER. I think we will all agree that no matter what may have been done in the past, we ought to do everything we can to expedite the work now.

Mr. PADGETT. Exactly.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to ask the gentleman this question. It has been stated to me that there is a feeling in the Government, by those who are immediately in charge of the work in the Government yards, that they will not operate more than one shift of workmen a day. That is, they discourage it. They do not attempt to operate more than one shift a day. What can the gentleman say to the House with regard to that? Is there anything in that?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me read you something that bears on that question. And that brings us to the question of labor.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me make this further inquiry, so that the gentleman can give attention to that if he will, because I think in the minds of most Members of the House that is the most important proposition now.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman knows I made the inquiry to ascertain the fact about it, because I think it is vastly important that we should do everything we can to expedite the work.

Mr. PADGETT. Just exactly so.
Mr. TOWNER. I made that inquiry with regard to Government plants. It is stated with regard to private plants that in the past private plants have always put the Government work at a disadvantage, because whenever a more paying contract was made they wanted to be able to take workmen away from the Government work, and have done so continuously. What is the fact in regard to that? I do not limit the criticism to this administration. I want it to apply to any administration. If we can remedy those conditions we ought to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall take that up very fully a little ter. It has also been said that the present administration was These troubles have been well spoken of by the gentleman lacking in business adaptation and business success, and that from Michigan [Mr. Kelley]. We have not been content to it was making no progress and accomplishing nothing for the Navy. I want to call your attention, if you please, to a fact or two. I am reading from a table sent down by the General Board of the Navy. The Delaware was the first ship constructed that is now recognized as a dreadnaught, and it is taken as the basis, and represents a fighting value or efficiency of 100. Those that have been constructed since show you whether there is development, whether there is progress and efficiency in the work of the department. Take for instance the Arizona. It represents a fighting efficiency of 230.84. The New Mexico represents 267.83. The Mississippi and Idaho the same. They are sister ships, authorized at the same time. The Tennessee and California represent a fighting value or efficiency of 273, as against 100 for the Delaware, which is taken for the standard. Last year we authorized four battleships to be known as the Colorado, Maryland, Washington, and West Virginia. Each of these represents a fighting value or efficiency of 286.

In the bill now pending we are providing for three battleships of larger tonnage and larger guns, and they represent a fighting efficiency of 380 as compared with 100, the standard of the first dreadnaught, or nearly four times its fighting efficiency.

The same may be said of the submarines and the torpedo boats. Why, you hear gentlemen speak of our torpedo boats. I will read to you in a moment what Capt. Sims said about torpedo boats. First, I want to call your attention to another matter, as to whether there has been any increase in efficiency. Take the increase in officers. Under Mr. Roosevelt's administra-tion, in the last four years of it, there were appointed to the Naval Academy 978. In the four years of Taft's administration, 945; under Wilson, 1,473 in three years.

Take the enlistments. Under Mr. Roosevelt in 1905 we had authorized 37,000 men. In 1908 the number was raised to 44,500.

In 1909, under Mr. Taft, it was still the same. In 1912, under Mr. Taft, the authorization was raised to 51,500. Under Mr. Wilson it has been raised to 78,200, with an additional emergency provision for still more.

Take the pavy-yard increase in the number of men working, On June 1, 1913, there were 16,898 men working in the navy yards. In 1916 there were 24,383. Take the daily pay. In 1912 the daily pay was $46,027.35. In 1916 it was $73,091.12. Comparison of pay showing daily pay: In 1912 it was $2,723, and in 1916, $2,997.

Take the enlisted men promoted. Warrant officers appointed ensigns: Under Roosevelt 10, under Taft 3, and under Wilson 17. Mr. LONGWORTH. Before the gentleman leaves that, can he state what is the present actual shortage in enlisted men? Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we have at the present time to-day enlisted men 53,441, and in addition we have 1,309 assigned to the Naval Militia, not a part of the Naval Militia but training and developing, making 54,750 in enlisted personnel, exclusive of prisoners Mr. LONGWORTH. Out of the total authorization of how many?

Mr. PADGETT. Seventy-eight thousand two hundred.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman tell what the gain in the past year has been?

Mr. PADGETT. I can give you the gain for the last three months. In the bill that we passed on the 29th of August last we made an increase in benefits for enlisted men, and that had to be advertised over the country and gotten out to the people. In November we had a net gain of 384 over the discharges. In December we had a gain of 573, and in January we had a net gain of 1,344.

I have a monthly statement of the increases or decreases only as far back as 1913, but beyond that the records do not show.

In November, 1913, the net gain was 1,623. In 1914, November 102. In November, 1915, it was a loss of 14, and in 1916 it was a gain of 384. In December, 1913, there was a net gain In 1914 there was a net gain of 39. In 1915 there was a net loss of 151. In December, 1916, there was a net gain of 573. In January, 1914, there was a net gain of 798, and in 1915 there was a net gain of 375. In January, 1916, there was a net gain of 576, and in January, 1917, there was a net gain

Mr. LONGWORTH. One more question. How near does the present authorization bring the Navy to the full fighting strength?

Mr. PADGETT. If the authorization was full, it would take care of all the ships that we have ready and in commission. It would not take care of those not completed. We have a number of ships that are not completed. The present authorization will take care of all the ships completed.

Mr. TOWNER. Before the gentleman leaves that point, the principal question I would like to have discussed is why the Government yards can not work more than one shift a day.

Other yards are working two and three shifts a day. There is hardly a munition factory but what is working two or three shifts. Our emergency is just as great as theirs, and why can not the Government yards work more than one shift?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government is working but one shift a day for the reason that shipbuilding yards in this country can only work one shift a day. The gentleman is in error in saying that private yards are working more than one shift a They can hardly get the labor for one shift a day. The labor question is the trouble. I want to say to the gentleman that there has been a great deal of criticism of the Government and the private shipbuilders. I want to be entirely fair to both. I do not want to stand here and improperly criticize either one of them. Both of them are up against the same difficulties and the same trouble. Let me give you some statements. We had shipbuilders before us, and we went into this matter very fully with them. We had Mr. Powell, president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., and he said

It seems to me, in looking over the testimony that the committee has heard for the last two days, that very little stress has been laid on what is really the one big important topic, and that is that the carrying out of this program does not depend on facilities; it depends on labor.

Again, he said:

The important factor that controls the building of these ships at the present time is the skilled iron-working trades, and until we can boost up our production along those lines, the production of ships can not be increased. It does not make a bit of difference whether this committee gives the Secretary of the Navy all the money there is in the Treasury to put into the building of ships, ways and shops in Government yards; you are not going to get your ships built any faster than the supply of skilled labor in the metal-working trades is built up.

Mr. Roberts. Do you know whether or not the other private yards have had the same difficulty in getting their labor?

Mr. POWELL, I know that some of them have; yes. This is not a local question; it is a national question to-day.

Mr. SABATH. When was the report made of the shortage of labor?

Mr. PADGETT. This that I am reading from is January 15, 1917, in the hearings before the committee. And, then, here is Mr. Mull, from the Cramp shipbuilding yards. Speaking of the troubles they have, he says:

In the last year we hired 8,407 men to gain 1,916.
Mr. ROBERTS, It is about like the enlistments in the Army and Navy?
Mr. Mull. A little worse.

Then Mr. Knox says:

Then Mr. Knox says:

Mr. Browning. I think the difficulty is further back than that. I will give you my personal opinion now. I do not believe that it is possible for this program to be completed, either by the private builders or by the Government yards, in the length of time that the Navy Department or the Government or your committee hope to get it, for, the reason that the labor does not exist. I think it makes very little difference whether you appropriate six million or twelve million or eighteen million or any number of millions of dollars more. There is only just so much shipbuilding labor in this country, as I see it, and that labor can only build those ships in a certain length of time. You can not make this shipbuilding labor in time to finish this program in the few months that you hope.

Furthermore, Mr. Snyder, vice president of the Bethlehem Corporation, stated:

It should be understood that labor competent to do work of this kind must be especially trained. Shipbuilding construction on a large scale is new in this country, and the necessary men already trained to do such work are simply not to be found. Some 61 per cent of the steel workers in our Fore River plant, for instance, have been with the company less than one year, and in order to do the work now in hand we have found it necessary to organize systematic forces of instruction, which are now being conducted at all our plants in an effort to develop skilled workmen.

I am simply calling your attention to what we have run up against. Again, I refer to statement of Mr. Snyder, the vice president of one of the companies, speaking of the fact that this labor has to be educated, has to be trained; and Mr. Powell stated to the committee that they had established schools and were, at their own expense, training and educating and developing the labor to expedite shipbuilding. These private yards are up against that. The Navy Department offi-cials say that they are up against that also. There has sprung up in this country a number of commercial shipbuilding yards that have started up overnight since the beginning of this war, and they are taking commercial ships only. They do not take Government work at all; they do not ask for it; they do not Those concerns are offering such large prices that bid for it. Those concerns are offering such large prices that they are taking the labor from these yards that do Government work and putting that labor into private commercial industry. One of them, Mr. Powell, said that at a certain date—I have forgotten the date, but it is in the hearings—their company had 5,000 employees on their pay roll, and that, notwithstanding all of their efforts, they had been cut down to 3,000.

Just here I wish to read what Capt. Sims stated about torpedo boats in the Skagerrack battle in reply to comments of Mr.

Mr. OLIVER. What was the effect of the torpedo attack?
Capt. Sims. The effect of the torpedo fire was more or less disappointing. We would have expected it to be more effective than it was. The torpedo destroyers they have there are not as powerful as ours. Their boats are sometimes fitted with 3 or 4 torpedo tubes, while we have from 6 to 12 tubes. Our newest destroyers have 4 triple tubes, or 12 altogether. Many of them are less able boats than ours are; but they were not driven home the way we would have expected when opportunities occurred like that.

I new yield to the groutlemen from Misseuvi

I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a year ago I propounded some questions to the gentleman from Tennessee PADGETT] and also to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], and I never did get very much information from either. What I asked then and what I ask now is how does it happen that other nations can construct battleships so much more quickly than we can?

Mr. PADGETT. We have the list there showing the time, and if the gentleman will examine that he will find that there is not a very great difference between our country and England in time of peace.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What about war times?

Mr. PADGETT. In war times they commandeer and force the labor into the shipyards.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the least time in which England ever builds a battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is about two years and two months. I think that is the best time they have ever made, from the laying of the keel until the boat is in commission.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have been going on here for the last two or three years voting large amounts of money to build battleships. If we can not get them when we need them, what is the sense of voting the money?

Mr. PADGETT. We are building just as fast as we can.
England is an old shipbuilding country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But we have been building ships in this country for 125 or 130 years.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, but in a very limited way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can not a navy yard that can construct a merchant ship build a battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. But the navy yards do not construct commercial ships. We have had only one navy yard in this country up to last year that attempted to build battleships.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have plenty of money, and there is no trouble of getting it if we have not got it; and what is the reason they do not put all of these navy yards or building establishments to constructing battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because there is not one of them that is fitted up for it. It takes millions of dollars to fit a navy yard for building a battleship, and in the bill last August we carried an appropriation of $6,000,000 to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to equip certain yards, and he is going ahead with it. In this very bill we are submitting an additional appropriation of $12,000,000 to enable him to do it, but that does not relieve the labor situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I was trying to get at is whether we can not go on and build these battleships that we have authorized. We must have such be seen as the size of t have authorized.

ave authorized. We must have eight or ten of them authorized. Mr. PADGETT. There are five in course of construction, and then there are four that were authorized in August last,

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The way we are dawdling along we are liable to get these battleships constructed about three or four or five years after we need them.

Mr. PADGETT. I hope it will not be as bad as that: but the Navy Department is doing the best it can with the labor in the Bear in mind this, and we must not overlook it: England is a country of large capacity for building ships. It is a great industry there. They build ships for all the world. We have not even been building for ourselves, except our naval ships. England has a large population, millions of people, who are engaged in the shipbuilding industry as laborers. not got them; we have not trained them; we have not developed them. Since this war came on there has sprung up this great demand for ships, and, as I said, yards have sprung up all over the country for the building of ships, and they are paying tre-mendous prices for the labor. One of the gentlemen stated that they were paying ordinary workmen $6.50 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed in the House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS,

The Secretary of the Navy shall send to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session a complete schedule or list showing the amount of money of all pay and for all allowances for each grade of officers in the Navy, including retired officers, and for all officers included in this act and for all enlisted men so included.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to ask me any more questions?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I do not want to ask any more questions.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The preparedness movement in which we have been engaged, I assume, is a recognition of the fact that there is need of ships, pretty nearly as much as if we were at war. Has anything been done to counteract the movement of transferring men from Government yards to private yards?

Mr. PADGETT. They are bidding against each other. private yards are trying to get all of the men they can, but the navy yards have been holding their forces pretty well.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes; but the gentleman mentioned one case where 2,000 men were lost.

Mr. PADGETT. They went to private yards. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. From Government yards?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; they went from a private yard to another private yard. For instance, the Fore River Co.; the president of that company, Mr. Powell, stated that he had 5,000 men on his pay roll working, and that when these other yards had sprung up over the country they had no nucleus and they needed men to come in there, and they are paying extraordinary wages, and that they have taken away from the old-established yards that are building Government work, as these new works that are bidding for commercial work had two or three times the profits they could get out of Government work.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Are these men who are being transferred from private yard to private yard qualified to do the work in Government yards?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Now, is the necessity so great that there should be some method of commandeering their services?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, that is the question the gentleman is prepared to answer as well as I am.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I thought the committee might have given that question consideration.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say here it is my purpose, and I have here an amendment which I will read for information and as a tentative draft. This is an amendment suggested by the Secretary, with this change: That instead of authorizing the Secretary of the Navy the authority is given to the President of the United States.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. I will.
Mr. GARNER. If I understood the gentleman's statement correctly, it is this: That Congress has appropriated the money; that the ships are being built as fast as labor can be secured to build them.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. GARNER. And if the fault lies anywhere at all, it is the fault of not having trained labor in this country to build ships?
Mr. PADGETT. That is just what it is. And not only that, you must bear in mind that in a battleship there is somewhere from three to four million dollars' worth of steel that has to be manufactured in the steel plants. They have to have their trained metal workers, and they are short there. The armor plate is made by the private manufacturers, and that requires time.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. I will.
Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Tennessee does not want to convey to the House the impression that you can not get steel from the steel plants or the armor plate from the armor-plate plants and at the time lead the country and the House to believe we ought to build an armor-plate plant that would not be able to build a pound of armor plate in the next 25 years?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how long it will take them. Of course, there have been delays in time. I am only calling attention to what Mr. Knox, the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., stated about getting steel. I have it here. He said they were up against the question of getting steel and they had several times been in a famine where they could not get from the manufacturers what they needed in steel.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee this question: With all of these appropriations that we have made for battleships, because we supposed we might need them, are we building a battleship any faster now than two or three years ago?

Mr. PADGETT. About the same rate. Those that have been authorized in the bill passed the 29th of August they had to advertise for bids, and the bids were opened, I believe, in November and the contracts awarded early in December. They have to give out their orders when the contractors get them; they have to give out orders for three and a half or four million dollars' worth of steel plate, steel fittings, and so forth, that go into the ships, and they have to be manufactured and manufactured according to specifications.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, now, these newspapers are always bullyragging Congress about Congress being stingy about these appropriations

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and there is no ground for bully-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Not a bit in the world; it is all a lie; but what I wanted to know is, is there any way known to man by which we can hurry up the building of the battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. The only one I know of is for the Government to exercise the right of eminent domain on labor, which we call commandeering, and put them into the yards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes, as we have taken up his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to make another statement in this connection while I think of it: The officers of the Fore River Co., the Newport News Co., and the New York Shipbuilding Co. have stated that at the present time from 71.6 to 75 per cent of their building facilities are occupied with Government work. The lowest one was 71.6 and the highest one was about 74.4 per cent at the present time devoted to Government

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. In the last year's bill, the current year's bill, we provided $6,000,000 to rehabilitate the Government navy yards.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. MADDEN. And this bill provides $12,000,000, I understand, so that would make $18,000,000.

Yes. Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, will the gentleman be able to state to the House how long it is going to take the Navy Department to spend this $18,000,000 so it can put itself in a position to do any work in the construction of battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. About from a year to a year and a half.

Mr. MADDEN. And up to that time nothing whatever can be done in the way of construction?

Mr. PADGETT. A great deal can be done. Let me explain that if the contracts be awarded, as I stated a moment ago, they give out contracts for steel, for plates, fittings, and all that, amounting to three and one-half or four million dollars. They have to be manufactured according to specifications to meet the particular work for which they are intended.

Mr. MADDEN. And they assemble that in anticipation of pre-paring the yards?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. They spoke about the battleship Tennessee in the New York Navy Yard. I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy, dated to-day, and I ask permission to insert it in the Record, explaining about the construction and what has been attempted. I do not have time to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padg-ETT] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Navy referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 8, 1917.

Washington, February 8, 1917.

My Dear Mr. Padgett: Replying to your request for information bearing upon alleged delays in the construction of naval vessels under this administration, the following is furnished:

When I took office I found a number of vessels just authorized by the act of March 4, 1913. Although these vessels were authorized technically in the preceding administration, of course their construction has been wholly under this administration. All vessels prior to March 4, 1913, had been contracted for by my predecessor, except three submarines, for which bids had been opened in December, 1912, and awards made by my predecessor, though the contracts had not been formally signed. These contracts were signed on March 15, 1913. But within the first year the company to which the awards had been made found itself in financial difficulty, and it was necessary to abrogate the contracts. In the case of two vessels whose construction was advanced, the Government, as provided by the contract, took them over commissioned February 6-March 23, 1915. With a new company completely me unavoidable delay, contracted for with a new company completely me unavoidable delay, contracted for with a new company completely me unavoidable delay, contracted for with a new company completely me unavoidable delay, contracted for with a new company completely me unavoidable delay, contracted for with a new company completely me unavoidable delay, contracted for with a new company completely me unavoidable delay contracted for until 1914. These vessels are now and under finally contracted for until 1914. These vessels are now and should be delivered about a year behind their contract time.

The other submarines authorized at the same time did not have the same complications in connection with their contract and have now been delivered, but they also were in every case a good deal more and the same complications in connection with their contract and have company building submarines the result as regards time would have company building submarines the result as regards time would have company building submarines the result as regards time would have company building submarines the result as regards time would have of having only one private concern able to undertake the construction of submarine vessels.

In this connection it may be remarked that one of the submarines delivered within their contract period.

Statements have been made that fuerious highly the contract time. Statements have been made that fuerious delivers the completed within their contract period.

Statements have been made that fuerious highly the company to the result of the fuerious delivery to the fuerious delivery. The private fuerious delivery to the fuerious completed within less than two years each from the date of laying the keel.

As regards destroyers: The first navy-yard-built destroyer was the Shaw, ordered built at the navy yard, Mare Island, because the estimate of the yard was far below the estimate of private contractors for vessels of the same class. Other work in hand delayed somewhat the laying of the keel of this vessel, but the keel was laid February 7, 1916, and the vessel is now practically completed, a very few months behind sister vessels. This would seem to be a fairly creditable record. There has been delay in the destroyer being built at Norfolk owing to the destructive fire at that yard.

As regards battleships: The record of this administration in connection with their construction is far different from that alleged. The Arizona, authorized March 4, 1913, built entirely under this administration, was commissioned in October. 1916. This time compares favorably with that of any previous battleship, particularly when it is considered that the Arizona is much larger than any vessel previously constructed. The Arizona was three years and seven months from authorization to commissioning. The Pennsylvania, a sister vessel built by contract was 3 years and 10 months. The New Mexico, which succeeded the Arizona, was directed by law to be built in a navy yard, and the New York Navy Yard was the only yard available for it. The Arizona occupied the only battleship ways at that yard, resulting in some delay in laying the keel.

It is true that the work upon the New Mexico, owing primarily to the shortage of labor, has not advanced as rapidly as the department would have liked, but the record of the New York yard on this vessel is creditable. Of the three sister vessels—New Mexico, Idaho, and Mississippi—the former being built at the New York Navy Yard and the latter by contract, the New Mexico hull construction progressed 44.4 per cent during the calendar year 1916, the Mississippi progressed 30.4 per cent, and the Idaho 17.7 per cent. At the present rate of progress it may be expected that the New Mexico will be completed certainly before one of the sister vessels building by contract, and probably before both of them. In the case of the Tennessee and California, as has been repeatedly explained, it was originally intended to huild these vessels by contract. There was delay in advertisement due to the necessity of making changes in the designs as a result of experience in the European war to date. When advertised, no bids were received which would enable the vessels to be constructed within the limits of cost set by Congress. This necessitated their assignment to navy yards, requiring the Mare Island yard to be fitted up, and has involved delay in the laying of the keel of the Tennessee until the New Mexico at New York can be launched.

So far from nothing being done, the material for these ships was advertised immediately when it was found they would have to be built in navy yards, and contracts for it placed in December, 1915, at prices but little more than this at Mare Island for the California, whose keel was laid in October last. The total progress of the Tennessee and a good deal more than this at Mare Island for the California, whose keel was laid in October last. The total progress of the Tennessee as measured by the standard methods of the department is 11 per cent to February I. The machinery is under contract, and the contract provides for delivery well within the necessary time, not to delay the vessels.

It is a matter o

Hon. Lemuel P. Padgett, M. C., Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. PADGETT. The keel of the ship Tennessee has not yet been laid. There were no bids received within the limit fixed by Congress, and they have assigned the Tennessee to the New York Navy Yard and the California to the Mare Island Navy Yard for construction. In the New York Navy Yard, on the ways, was the battleship New Mexico. The Secretary has met this labor condition that has delayed the construction of the New Mexico somewhat, so that the Tennessee has not been placed upon the ways. But in the meantime he has been gathering and assembling the materials that go into that ship, and I have his letter here to-day stating that he has more than 7,000 tons of that material already assembled awaiting the opportunity to get to work upon the ship, and when they do that they will expedite the work. They are prepared for it.

Now, one of the shipbuilders—I forget which one it was, but it is in the hearings-stated that if the contracts were awarded to the shipbuilding companies they would have to construct their ways. They have not ways for battle cruisers. A battle cruiser is so much longer than a battleship that they would have to construct these ways for it themselves. I asked, "How long will it take you?" He said, "At least a year." I then said to him, "Suppose we give you two, what about two ways?" He said, "One way in 12 and the other one some months longer than that." "But," I said to him, "Would that delay the final completion of the battle cruiser, the length of time it took to build the ways?" He said, "It would not delay at all, for the reason that while we were building the ways we would be carrying on concurrently the assembling and the manufacture of the materials that go into the ship that we have to have when we begin the construction."

Mr. MADDEN. They would not assemble it, they would simply store it. They could not assemble it until they got the material where the ship is to be built. Assembling means putting them together.

Mr. PADGETT. They would get them together up there. mean gather them together and get them where they can put them into shape.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have there been any improvements made in battleships in the last 12 or 18 months?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. I just read a moment ago—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause

[After a pause.]

The Chair hears none. Mr. PADGETT. The first dreadnaught that was constructed was known as the Delaware. The South Carolina and Michigan were constructed prior to that time, and for a while were designated as dreadnaughts, but they are classed in what is called the predreadnaught type of ship. They are all battleships. Then the Delaware is taken as a standard of comparison. That represents the fighting efficiency of 100. The Tennessee and the California, that were authorized in the session of Congress before the last, represent a fighting efficiency of 273, and the four ships that were authorized on the 29th of August last represent a fighting efficiency of 286, because there are improvements made in the designing and in the contemplated construction. And in this present bill that we are now considering we are recommending the construction of three battleships that represent a fighting efficiency of 380. In other words, nearly four times the fighting efficiency and value of the Delaware that was the first dreadnaught a few years ago. Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I followed the gentleman closely, and gather from his argument that the problem is a labor problem.

Mr. PADGETT. Largely so, from what they tell us.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If these yards as equipped have skilled men enough to work two or three shifts a day, that would largely solve the problem?

Mr. BUTLER. It would.
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. ALEXANDER. Then how can we simplify it by expending $12,000,000 to fit up other shipyards when we have not the skilled labor to efficiently build ships in the shipyards already in commission?

Mr. PADGETT. The question is this: There is more than a question of labor in the phase in which you state it. The question is of competition between the Government and the private shipbuilders. The department believes that in many instances the private shipbullders ask them exorbitant prices and that the Government yards, as is insisted by the Secretary of the Navy, should be equipped to do construction, and then he would be prepared to construct in the Government yards, and he would purpose to give two-thirds of the construction to private yards and he would do one-third of it in the Government yards if he could get satisfactory prices from the private shipbuilders. But if he can not get satisfactory prices and satisfactory terms on time limits, then the Government would undertake to build them. And it would be a competition in the Government getting the

And it would be a competition in the Government getting labor from the private yards.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Is it not a fact that it is more the fault of Congress than the Navy Department that we have not now the facilities to go ahead and build battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; I can not say that Congress is at fault, because the question of Government construction is a question and a policy that has arisen in late years.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Have they not kept on here trying to deny the right of the Government to construct battleships to a great extent and to do away with navy yards also?

Mr. PADGETT. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the policy in general has been to build in the private yards until

mr. GALLAGHER. I know it was considered a joke on the floor of the House when it was mentioned that three or four battleships were to be constructed in Government yards.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. PADGETT. With pleasure. Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman from Tennessee has been giving some facts that I was trying to elicit in a colloquy a little while ago with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kel-I do not care to ask about the preparedness program authorized last year, because we all understand that practically little could have been done under that in the limited time that has elapsed since that authorization; but what I want to ask is this, with respect to the authorization which antedates that time: Has there been on the part of the department or on the part of the Secretary of the Navy any negligent delay, particularly with respect to those two ships that were authorized some time ago?

Mr. PADGETT. No; none whatever. I have inserted in the Record a letter from the Secretary, which gives the whole history of that matter. The gentleman was speaking of those two battleships?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes. Has there been any delay that could be called negligent delay?

Mr. PADGETT. No. I will give you the facts. In the first place, after those ships were authorized the war broke out in Europe, shortly following, and there were developments coming from that, so that the department thought it would be very advisable to take advantage of those developments and to vary to that extent the construction of these two ships from preceding types, and so they changed somewhat their plans.

In addition to that, no bids were received within the limit of cost, and the Secretary could not award those ships to private bidders because their bids exceeded the limits fixed by Congress. Thereupon the Secretary came to the first meeting of the Congress afterwards and laid all the facts before the Congress in the letter which I have put in the Record, and Congress passed a resolution appropriating $500,000 to fit up the navy yard at Mare Island for the construction of one, and several hundred thousand dollars-I do not remember the precise amount-for additional facilities at the navy yard at New York. And then the department started to assemble and get together all the material, which takes a year or more to get.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then in altering the plans of those two particular battleships, in order to get the benefit of the developments, he was then only exercising the discretion for which he should be commended instead of condemned?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I have so stated on several occasions. Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. KELLEY. Does not the gentleman think, as the matter has turned out now, that these two ships must be built in private yards where the price can not be named? Is not the Government thereby likely to lose two or three million dollars? The gentleman and I agree partly as to the facts.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we agree as to the facts. You know what the Irishman said, that "One's hindsight was better than one's foresight by a damned sight." [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; and I said I did not blame the Secretary for not being able to foresee the conditions. I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARDNER.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman from Tennessee is going to offer the amendment when we get to the right place, allowing certain powers to the President to compel the execution of contracts made with private parties?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I have modified it somewhat. I have made it to read in the beginning-

In all cases where contracts have been made or may hereafter be made or orders heretofore or hereafter placed for ships—

So as to make it apply to the past as well as to the present

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman be good enough to read it, so that we can turn it over in our minds before we get through it?

Mr. GARDNER. It is rather long.

Mr. GARNER. It is only a page of paper.
Mr. PADGETT. It is not very long. Here is what I propose to offer tentatively; I read it now for information:

In all cases where contracts have been made or may hereafter be made or orders heretofore or hereafter placed for ships, or munitions, or material entering into the construction of ships or the making of munitions, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, when in his judgment the exigencies of the public service demand it, to require the contractor or the individual, company, association, or corporation with which such order may have been placed to give preference to the fulfillment thereof and precedence of the work over all other work except work for the Government, and compliance with the requirements of the President in such cases shall be obligatory on the contractor or the individual, company, association, or corporation to which the same may be directed, subject to liability for damages to the Government for breach of contract: Provided, That in case of delay, neglect, or refusal on the part of a contractor or an individual, company, association, or corporation with which such orders may have been placed to proceed with the work to the satisfaction of the President, he may declare such contract or order forfeited and may take possession of the plant, shops, or works of the contractor, individual, company, association, or corporation and proceed with the completion of the work and charge to the account of the contractor, individual, company, association, or corporation all costs of completing the work in excess of the CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, that amendment which has been proposed in the hearing of the gentlemen present only takes care of the situation when a contract has already been made.

Mr. PADGETT. I have proposed "hereafter made" too.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; but if they decline to make a contract hereafter, then you have no way of compelling them. You have no way of commandeering the whole yard or any part of that yard.

Now, the gentleman remembers that when we passed the national-defense act last year we put into that act a pro-

Mr. PADGETT. I see the gentleman's point clearly before he states it, and if he will submit his suggestions I will be glad to consider them

Mr. GARDNER. I have an amendment, and I will be very glad to offer it. I have it drawn. It was drawn on the principle of the national-defense act of last year, with an extension.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in connection with his proposed amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. MADDEN. I notice that in the amendment which the gentleman proposes there is no provision to compensate the man whose property is taken over by the Government for any loss that he may sustain by reason of the Government taking possession of that property, although there is a provision that compels him to pay any excess cost that may be incurred by the Govnment. It does not seem to me that is fair or right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not legal either. That is more important. You can not take a man's property without compensating him for it.

Mr. PADGETT. I am bringing this before you tentatively, Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the gentleman has read the provision for the information of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. It is simply tentative, because I want to get the benefit of the suggestions of gentlemen.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mad-DEN] has pointed out what may be a very serious objection, that you are proposing to take property without any provision for compensation. That can not be done. Now, there is another suggestion that the gentleman ought to consider, and that is the power of Congress to change, or to modify, or to interfere with a contract already in existence. We can not now pass any law that adds to a contract a condition not in it, and declare it forfeited if that condition be not fulfilled.

Mr. MANN. Why not? Mr. PADGETT. I think Congress might do it by paying damages.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. PADGETT. By paying the additional cost, I think Congress has the power.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think it has. Mr. PADGETT. I think the limitation the gentleman has in mind is upon States, and not upon Congress.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. LOUD. Would it not be well to embody in the amendment some provision doing away for the time being with the eight-hour limitation upon Government employees and Government contracts, by which the President might be empowered to set it aside temporarily in case of emergency?

Mr. PADGETT. The shipbuilders who were before us stated that their workmen individually would be glad of an opportunity to work more than eight hours. They say that it is almost unanimous on the part of the workmen. That is one of the limitations upon the capacity to build. The Government can get only men enough for one shift. These private yards can get only men enough for one shift, and they can work them. can get only men enough for one shift, and they can work them only eight hours. Mr. Powell stated that he got it directly from one of the members of an English shipbuilding company, who told him personally, as he expressed it, over the table, that in England they work 24 hours, and work two shifts, one of them, as I remember, 14 hours and the other 10 hours, and that that is the way they are building ships there at the present time. But you know, as well as I know, that when you come to tamper with the eight-hour law, there are many Members in this House who would not follow the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me yield to the gentleman from Illinois first.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman believe there is a single Member of this House or of the Senate, or a patriotic citizen anywhere, who, if the stress of war were upon us, would hesitate to provide the proper legislation to enable men to have the opportunity to work who were willing to work, all the labor unions to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman has expressed his opinion, and each one is able to judge for himself of the temper of the individual Members of the House as well as I am. I have seen something in this House from time to time with reference to labor legislation. Personally I have always believed that an individual had as much right to sell any amount of his labor as he had to sell any amount of his corn or wheat.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking now of a war condition.
Mr. PADGETT. You may be given an opportunity to test that matter

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nothing in the law, as I understand it, that prevents men working.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I had not understood heretofore that the chairman of the committee purposed to offer the amendment that he read a few moments ago

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman will understand that the conditions are shifting and changing very rapidly at this time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I understand that very well, and that is my purpose in endeavoring to offer a suggestion to the chairman of the committee, which I think will help his amendment, if adopted.

I shall be glad to receive it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. As I understand from the reading, he proposes to permit the President to take charge of private shipbuilding yards where the Government has a contract being performed, or where it hereafter makes a contract to be performed. Now, that is very well as far as it goes.

Mr. PADGETT. We also have under consideration a proposition with reference to taking them over where there is no contract.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I did not understand the gentleman had such a provision.

Mr. PADGETT. My amendment did not propose that, but the gentleman's colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] called attention to that, and I asked him to let me have it for the benefit of consideration, and it is a well-suggested amendment; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] also made a valuable suggestion with reference to providing compensation.

Mr. BUTLER. The payment of damages.

Mr. PADGETT. With reference to providing in the law wh

With reference to providing in the law what the courts would enforce, namely, compensation for the taking of property, if it should be taken.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I should like to suggest to the chairman, for his still further consideration, an addition to his amendment permitting the President, by his Executive order, to close private shipyards in order that the men might be taken out of the private yards and mobilized in such yards as the Government desires to use for construction. My object in that is to get at the shipbuilding establishments around the Great Lakes with which we do not make any naval contracts. There are thousands and thousands of tons of commercial ships being built every year on the Great Lakes, and there are thousands upon thousands of skilled shipbuilders around the Great Lakes who, under the amendment proposed by the chairman of our committee, could not be reached unless there were some power in the President to close down those yards. There is no object in making contracts with those yards, because you could not get their product out into the ocean where we need it, but we do want the benefit of the services of the men employed there.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Roberts] a question in his time?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Whether he thinks the Government of the United States should be permitted to go on the Great Lakes and personally seize possession of workmen and take them down to Massachusetts and put them in a shipyard there and set them to work? That is a fair and easy question.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is a fair and easy question, and I will say this in answer

Mr. PADGETT. It is an easy question to ask.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. When we are in war and need the services of skilled men to build fighting ships I am ready go to any extent to compel private shipyards on the Great Lakes to let go of the skilled workmen, that they may come down on the seacoast-Massachusetts, if you please, or elsewhere-and get employment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. Padgett's time was extended five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say that the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts leads us far afield, and I am not prepared just now to discuss that.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the gentleman from Tennessee, he said that the workmen who are now engaged in building ships in Government shipyards are almost universally in favor of Mr. PADGETT. I did not say Government yards. The shipbuilders told us that the men working in private yards favor that; but I have not gotten that from the men themselves. My authority is in the printed hearings.

Mr. GARNER. Is there anything in the law that prohibits them from working more than eight hours a day?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; by direct statute, passed several years ago by Congress, which expressly provides that all private yards doing Government work by contract shall operate their yards upon an eight-hour basis.

Mr. GARNER. Does that prohibit men working more than eight hours a day?

Mr. BROWNING. I want to say that it not only says that they shall work only eight hours, but eight hours in one day.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I want to get at. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not the law prohibits them from working more than eight hours in this way: Suppose they work eight hours and desire to work overtime.

prohibit them from doing so?
Mr. PADGETT. It does. I will go still further. I asked Mr. Knox if that eight hours was a basic day, and if men wanted to work more than eight hours they could do so if they were paid extra. He said no; that although he had about 71 and a fraction per cent of his facilities engaged in Government work he could not operate his plant for 71 per cent on an eighthour basis and the remaining 29 per cent on another basis. Therefore he had to operate the whole establishment on an eight-hour basis.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The eight-hour law applies to the Government plant in the same way?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They work more than eight hours a day in the Government yards.

Mr. PADGETT. No; except in emergencies.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and they are doing it right now in the Government yards, and they pay them overtime. Eight hours a day is a standard day's work; but if they work more than eight hours a day they pay them extra wages. They are working two shifts now.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. OLIVER. There seems to be a feeling on the part of the House that a resolution of the kind the chairman has indicated should pass. I suggest that in view of the very great importance of that matter, in view of the fact that some doubt exists in the minds of some Members as to the exact authority and power of Congress in the matter, it might be well to refer it to the Department of Justice.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say that I thought when I got all the suggestions I would take the matter up personally in regard to framing the matter; but if we should send it officially down there to the Department of Justice I do not know when we would get it back.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. I want to make a statement for the benefit of Members. The employees in the New York Shipbuilding Co. waited on me and asked if I could not introduce a bill that would allow 48 hours a week, so that they could have a Saturday half holiday, as every establishment in the city of Camden has. I introduced such a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Labor, and that committee refused to report the bill out. Mr. Knox said that he was perfectly willing that they should have the 48 hours a week, and stated how much efficiency he lost by these men not working Saturday afternoon. The bill is now pending before the Committee on Labor.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I ask this question for information. understood the chairman to say that there are nine battleships authorized, five of which are partly constructed. Is that correct? Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. KINCHELOE. The information I want is, if the three additional battleships and the scout cruisers are authorized un-der this bill, if the appropriation is agreed to, can any one of them or how many of them can be completed in the year 1918?

Mr. PADGETT. They can all be begun, but none of them can be completed, because you can not build them in that short time. They can begin the construction of them. The shortest time that the shipbuilding companies bid on a battle cruiser in a written bid was 48 months, and one other 51 months, and the other one did not fix any time limit at all, but said it would do it as quick as it could. In consultation with the Secretary of the Navy in personal conversation the Secretary tried to see if he could not get them to agree to shorten the time, and they did verbally say that they would take 46 months, but that is practically four years.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can they all be completed in the year 1918, even if none of the ships were authorized under this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Not all; some will be. Four of the battle-ships that were authorized in the bill of August 29, 1916—the contracts were let in December and they are just assembling the material and getting ready.

There were four battle cruisers authorized in the act of August 29, 1916, but no contracts have been made for any of them. We have not been able to get the contracts. The ship-builders say that they can not build them under $19,000,000. The limit of cost fixed in the act is $16,500,000. We have a pro-vision in this bill increasing the limit of cost to $19,000,000, so that the Secretary can make contracts or proceed with the con-struction himself. We authorized also four scout cruisers.

The Secretary advertised, and under the first advertisement he got one bid. The limit of cost was $5,000,000. He got one bid for $4,875,000 or $4,975,000, I have forgotten which. He accepted that bid and awarded the contract. He then advertised the second time for the remaining three. He got bids for two and no bids for one, and the bids for two were upon the basis that if one were awarded it would cost $5,900,000, and if two were awarded it would be $5,825,000 each. In this bill we propose to raise the limit of cost to $6,000,000 upon those. Under all of these bids there must be a leeway for changes, and the smallest safe margin would be 5 per cent.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then, if I understand the chairman of the committee, the only expedition that could be made in carrying out this naval program by voting to appropriate the money to build the battleships and cruisers set forth in the bill would simply be that the contracts could be closed at an earlier date?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; the men could go ahead and get ready to build them. If contracts were made with private yards, a number of yards have said that they would enlarge their facilities, and the Government is asking for money to enlarge its facilities, and the Government is asking for money to enlarge its facilities, and while they were enlarging the facilities, in the private yards and in the navy yards, they would be getting together and assembling the materials. It takes a year to have the materials prepared. All of these steel products, amounting to three and a half or four million dollars for one of the battleships, have to be constructed according to specifi-

Mr. KINCHELOE. The point I am trying to get at is this: I understood the chairman to say that the program already authorized for 1917 could not be carried to completion in 1918.

Mr. PADGETT. You can not complete it. You can go ahead with the contracts, and the sooner you begin the sooner you will complete it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the 1917 authorizations can not be completed in 1918-

Mr. PADGETT. The contracts can be made for them.
Mr. KINCHELOE. Certainly, they could be made, but can we expedite the business any more by appropriating for this authorization when last year's authorization can not be completed in 1918?

Mr. PADGETT. We knew it could not be completed when we made the authorization. You can not build a battleship under three or four years.

The time of the gentleman from Tennessee The CHAIRMAN.

has again expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I know the chairman of the committee wants to be fair, as he always is on the question of the attitude of the labor organizations and the eight-hour day. In discussing the attitude of labor organizations with the gentleman from Illinois, I understood the gentleman to say that the labor organizations were opposed to working overtime?

I have been so informed. Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. NOLAN. Does not the chairman know that in each and every one of our navy yards in time of emergency the men work. and are now working, over eight hours a day and being paid overtime?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the law provides for it in case of emergency, but in these private yards they are limited to eight hours.

Mr. NOLAN. Let me follow that up by saying this: If you intend to legislate for the taking over of these private establishments. ments by the Government, is it not reasonable to assume that the same conditions will prevail there?

Mr. PADGETT. They may, but I am simply speaking in general terms of the extreme sensitiveness of the labor organiza-tions with reference to interference with the eight-hour law. I remember that several years ago we had before our committee the same proposition that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] spoke of a moment ago, which was to establish a 48-hour week instead of eight hours a day for six days in the week, and the labor organizations had numbers of their representatives come before us and they solidly opposed it. Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not state that correctly. It is not eight hours for six days in the week, but it is eight hours for five days and four hours for Saturday, making 44 hours for the week.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman is mistaken. The private yards can work six days a week at eight hours a day.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct; that is what the law authorizes. I do not know what the practice is.

Mr. LOUD. Custom will not permit it. Mr. NOLAN. Excepting during three months; that is the custom in the navy yards. Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman wants to be fair. Does the gentleman think that any labor organization in the country in time of emergency or in time of stress, when called upon to render patriotic service to the country, would object to their members working 16 or 18 hours a day?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not, and I sincerely hope not.
Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question, which I consider to be the one vital question of the whole controversy, and that is, What will be the value of these dreadnaughts when they are built? Now, early in the war in Europe three armed British cruisers, manned by 2,440 experts, were sent to the bottom of the North Sea by one submarine, costing the Kaiser $380,000, manned by 12 undersea experts, and there were 1,242 sailors food for sharks. More men less their lives in 40 minutes then were lest in five years in the lost their lives in 40 minutes than were lost in five years in the War of the American Revolution. Furthermore, the Queen Elizabeth, the greatest dreadnaught ever constructed since the world began, was set affoat. We read in the London papers what that great dreadnaught, the Queen Elizabeth, would do in the Dardanelles. They were going to sail up the Dardanelles and bombard the imperial castle of the Sultan of Turkey and throw the imperial harem into hysterics. Now, what did all this vast array of the ships of Italy, of France, and of England do in the Dardanelles? It was stated on the floor this morning by a member of the ships of the same law of the sam by a member of the gentleman's Naval Committee that one German submarine put them out of commission. Now, another question is this, and this is a vital question: If the dreadnaught is obsolete in Europe—and it does not take a military expert, a man with as much brains as two gray geese should know it—that the dreadnaught will be obsolete in our oceans in case we have a war.

Mr. PADGETT. I would agree with the gentleman if I could admit his premises, but I can not admit them. Every naval officer who appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs and every naval authority clearly showed that the command—

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is a naval authority good for in the presence of actual experience in ocean warfare?

Mr. PADGETT. It is very clearly shown that the command of the sea is absolutely controlled by the big guns, and if we were to do away with the large ships carrying the big guns they could destroy the submarines in very short order. They must operate and be protected under the big guns.

Mr. DEWALT. Referring to the amendment proposing to take over the different shippards and manufacturing plants, is it not true that the managers, directors, and the president of one of the largest munitions plants of this country, which also controls the Fore River Shipyard, has repeatedly expressed his willingness and their willingness to turn over their plants to the Government and let the Government manage them, at their own expense, without any charge at all except such expenses?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to say in the language in which the gentleman stated it. I understood from them that they said they were willing to devote all their facilities to Government manufacture, but I did not understand that they would turn it over to the Government, under Government administration.

Mr. DEWALT. Just one more question. Was not the statement of Mr. Grace, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., and of Mr. Schwab, of the Bethlehem Steel Co.-they controlling the Fore River yard-that they would turn over, or allow the Government to control their plant, even to the exclusion of private contracts which they had, they being patriotic citizens?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not had any conversation with Mr. Schwab; he has not been before the committee.

Mr. DEWALT. Did not Mr. Grace's statement— Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Grace was before the committee last year with reference to the armor-plate matter. The shipbuilding construction was not gone into, as I remember, at that time, but we were then discussing the armor-plate matter.

Mr. DEWALT. Does not the gentleman know as a fact that Mr. Grace did make such a statement and was willing to abide by it, so far as the promise to the committee was concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the zentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the same privilege.

Mr. GARDNER. I make the same request.

Mr. GARDNER. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these requests?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, endeavoring to answer the question put to the chairman of our committee by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dewalt], I remember with great distinctness the answer that was made by Mr. Grace, the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., that if the Government needs their plant it is at the Government's disposal. Knowing these people as I do, I venture to say now that if the Government needs their plants for the purpose of preparing us for the sea the Government will have them at once. I know some of these business giants well enough to know they will not stand behind any technicality which the courts might afford them in an effort to retain these plants if our need is at hand. If the Government requires the assistance of these cannon makers and these shipbuilders, that assistance will be rendered immediately. Now Mr. Chairman, our Speaker last year asked me some questions which I endeavored to answer. I find that he is dissatisfied with the answer which I gave him, and I am also dissatisfied with it. I told him then if the appropriations could be increased that this great construction could be accomplished at an early date. I did not know then of the great difficulties the shipbuilders and manufacturers were having in procuring skilled labor. I believe it was largely owing to the inquiry which he made that this House offered a bonus of 20 per cent to the shipbuilders to complete within a reasonable time these ships of war. Now, we put the question to the shipbuilders, and they said 20 per cent bonus would do us no good.

That will satisfy your mind that the difficulty is not there. The 20 per cent upon a $19,000,000 battleship would, as you say, be $4,000,000, nearly, a tremendous bonus. The answer was that it would not enable them to obtain the necessary skilled labor to complete these ships with the promptness we demanded. It is my recollection that the answer was made that in this country about 60,000 men were engaged in shipbuilding, and perhaps nearly one-half of that number engaged in the manufacture of commercial ships. The situation, to my mind, is quite plain that if by any manner or by any method or by any means they will put aside for the time being the work upon commercial ships we can finish the ships provided for and included in the program within 25 or 30 months. If the yards partly filled with the ships of commerce, about one-third, according to my recollection, are not relieved, the delay will be one-third longer. And I do not believe it is a question of money, sir. No. These builders and makers alike all answered the question when put to them that it was a question of labor and material alone.

I believe the whole problem could be solved by seizing the yards, if necessary. I do not believe that step will be nec-If this House will authorize this Government to negotiate with these builders, they will construct these ships. The Union Iron works have no ships to-day. They are capable of preparing within six or eight months to construct two of the largest ships of war. The offer was made by Mr.

Powell, the president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. to put this yard in order at once for warship construction under certain conditions, and, with others, join in the absorption of this whole program. Of course it will be necessary to increase these proposed appropriations to enable these shipbuilders to prepare for the great undertaking. Some of them will be ready when their ways are completed. It is my judgment, however, if we start at once and put the authority in the proper place, and if great expedition and great skill are used, within six or eight months we will have this whole program upon the ways. These ships can not be built in a day. They can not be built in a vear.

The best offer they will make to us now is the long term of 46 months, which is greatly disappointing to men like me. would ask this committee-I would ask this House-to help us make a program. We will work it out with you quietly and reason with you here in our common effort to assist our Government to devise some means that will give it the great armament. First of all, let us plan to lay aside the commercial ships. If we do that we are a long way ahead.

Then, let us appeal to the workingmen. I know that they will never desert their country. I have lived among them, and I know them well. They will feel that the country needs their services, and they will not hesitate. They will volunteer for their country's cause as they have always done. Let us suspend the eight-hour law, if necessary, during the grave emergency, to be left to the judgment of the President of the United States. [Applause.] . I do not believe that any American who realizes that at this very hour we are standing in a place of peril will for one moment object to suspending the operation of this law, to be again put in force when the dark hour passes, in the judgment of the President. The men may then work for 10 hours a day, or 12 hours a day, as the workmen may see fit. Then three shifts can be obtained. It is a fact that the Bethlehem Steel Co. built 20 submarines for England in six months, and those ships are to-day employed in the North Sea by England.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania have five minutes more. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will.
Mr. NOLAN. I do not believe the gentleman intended to state that the Union Iron Works were idle at the present time? Mr. BUTLER. No, sir. Mr. NOLAN. I believe he meant to say that they were idle so far as Government ships are concerned?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOLAN. Does the gentleman know that they have on the books to-day $85,000,000 to $100,000,000 of private contracts?

Mr. BUTLER. I understand they have a great deal of work, Mr. NOLAN. In regard to the statement that it is difficult to get skilled mechanics, does the gentleman know that the Union Iron Works has increased its force at Alameda and San Francisco from 3,500 to 10,000, and that it is not a question at the time of getting skilled men as much as it is a question of paying them?

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. TAGUE. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that some of these private shipyards have established yards in Canada and have sent a good many of our good mechanics over there to take care of them?

I do not know. What I know I will speak of, Mr. BUTLER. and of what I do not know I will remain silent. We have nothing more than the statement of the president of this shipping company, the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., that they could build and would build, and begin to build at once, as soon as they could extend their ways, two of these great big battle cruisers at the Union Iron Works. I was never at the Union Iron Works, and therefore never saw them, but I have seen the president of the Union Iron Works, a very responsible man,

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. McGregor?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. NOLAN. Then you have not seen the president of the Union Iron Works.

Mr. BUTLER. Those works, as I am informed, are controlled by the Bethlehem Works.

Mr. NOLAN. The Union Iron Works are controlled by Mr. McGregor.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not see Mr. McGregor. I saw Mr. Powell, who speaks for the Union Iron Works. Let that be as it may, there is room there to construct ships, and I have heard of no complaint of wages received in these shipyards. This Government offered 20 per cent bonus to the shipbuilders to complete this program, and they say they can not use this bonus. As against that and in accord with Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him just a moment?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.
Mr. PADGETT. Notwithstanding the 20 per cent bonus that was provided every shipbuilder in the country refused to bid for it, and they all stated before our committee that they would not bid for it in the future or make contracts upon that assumption because of the labor question.

And then, just in that same connection, I want to say a word about the submarines which were authorized and for which contracts were made. There are only two concerns in the United States that contract or bid for submarines. The lowest term that they bid for was 26 months. The Secretary declined to make contracts or accept their bids for that time. By negotiation they finally cut the time down to 23 months. A premium of $700 a day was offered them for every day that they will shorten the 23 months in completing the submarines. And yet it is said that the Secretary has not been endeavoring to hasten the construction. Now, that shows you how anxious the de-partment was and how far they are going to get these submarines. The total amount of the premium not to exceed the 20 per cent authorized by law.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is absolutely accurate in his statement, and I want now, while I am here and on my feet, to be allowed to say that I believe that in the effort to have this program constructed in obedience to the demand made by Congress the Navy Department under the circumstances has done its best. I do not believe, if we have any differences of opinion-and we do have, and have heretofore ventilated those differences on the floor and made them known to the public-that now is the time to speak of them. I want, however, to say, and I believe it is only just to say, that the department under the circumstances has done its best to get this program under way. We might differ as to methods employed. Another party might be willing to go further in the expenditure of money and make greater efforts to reconcile differences to complete the program than the other.

But let me give you the situation now as I have it. The Secretary of the Navy and these shipbuilders do not greatly differ on the price or cost of ships. We are not confronted with a question of wages. It may be that many men do not go to the navy yards. But I happen to live quite near to one, and I believe they do. They may not be quite satisfied with the wages they receive, but the trouble is not here. The steel that is in one ship is the same kind of steel that goes into another ship. What it costs the shipbuilder, I do not know; because in some instances the shipbuilder makes it himself. But I believe from statements made and from what I have learned that there is but little difference in the cost of the raw material used in either the navy yard or the private yard.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
Mr. NOLAN. I think the gentleman misunderstood me in what I said about wages. I said that the Union Iron Works had in two years' time increased the force of their men from 3,500 to 10,000. It is easier for us to get men than for some of the shipyards of the East to get them. In the East the munition factories have been able to offer more money and greater inducements to mechanics than we give in the shipyards.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from California is correct. I know that in my district there is the greatest munition factory ever seen on the earth, and my constituents who are employed in this factory are receiving, perhaps, from $5 to $8 a day for their labor.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Just for this, in connection with the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. Nolan], that the Union Iron Works build no Government ships.

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. KELLEY. And in these days of shipbuilding for private concerns the profits are immensely large, larger than for Government yards or for yards where Government ships are built, and the tendency for yards not doing Government work is to take the labor away from the yards that are doing Government The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennlvania has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed for two minutes more.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, if I can sum up in a word, in answer to the query that our Speaker put to us, that if we will authorize the Government to use such means as we have authority to give to the Government either to seize these yards or to compact with the owners of the yards, to the end that they will agree to lay aside all the commercial work in their yards, we can not only absorb this program but complete it at an early date. We can further hasten it by authorizing the President of the United States, when in his judgment a great emergency exists, to suspend the eight-hour law during that emergency, so that men who care to work more than eight hours may have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of money that we have to solve. It is a question of opportunity; that is all. Give it to the Government and it can complete the program with promptness. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if it would not be improper, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee about the bill before reading it under the five-minute rule. We have not com-menced doing anything but general debate. What is the meaning and purpose of this paragraph providing that "The Secretary of the Navy shall send to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session a complete schedule or list," and so forth, as to the pay and allowances of each grade?

Mr. PADGETTE The number of Complete is the pay and allowances of each grade?

Mr. PADGETT. The number of officers is being increased every year, and the number of enlisted men is being increased every year, and this report is intended to keep Congress advised as to the status during the current year.

Mr. MANN. I had supposed that when this paragraph first went into the law that it was designed to give Congress information which we have never been able to extract and which would enable us to know how much a naval officer gets under his pay and the various kinds of allowances that are given. But I ascertained, when I read the report made in accordance with this provision, that that is not the purpose. I have read the report. That information is furnished to the committee, anyhow.

It is the total pay of the Navy. That is all that it amounts to.

Mr. PADGETT. It gives detailed information as to the number of officers, the various grades in which officers are employed, and the enlisted men, and the ratings of the men, and the number.

Mr. MANN. It bunches it as to the men, and you can not ascertain from that how many men are drawing $50 a month, or how many are drawing $40 a month, or $20 a month, or anything of the sort. You can not ascertain from this how many naval officers are getting longevity pay for 5 years and how many are getting it for 20 years. The purpose of this item in the first place was to get that information. The Navy Department does not give it. What is the use of keeping it in the law? However, Mr. Chairman-

Mr. PADGETT. Just a moment. If the gentleman will take, for instance, Appendix E in the estimates

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not taking Appendix E in the estimates

Mr. PADGETT. This is the report that is sent down.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report made by the Secretary of the Navy in compliance with this requirement in the law.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but he sends down as a part of that report in the estimate the list, and here is the active list of the line, and the Medical Corps and the Pay Corps—
Mr. MANN. That is the regular estimate. That is the statement always furnished in the estimates.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It comes down with the estimates as part of them.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is a part of the estimates, but this was in addition to the estimates, and it means nothing, except the expense of printing a document of Congress. However, I really rose to suggest that this is Saturday, and we met at 11 o'clock, and have had a rather exciting day, and before we really get into the bill I think we ought to have a little rest.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Speaker of the House, can we have Monday?

Mr. MANN. Monday is unanimous-consent day.

Mr. PADGETT. Can we dispense with it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No.

Mr. PADGETT. Then we will not get back to the bill until Tuesday,

Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I started this shindy that has run here for about an hour and a half, I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. First, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs how it happens that it took from August last until now to let these contracts to build these new ships?

Mr. PADGETT. The naval appropriation bill was passed on the 29th of August. The contracts were let, I believe, either the latter part of November or early in December. Under the law the department is required to advertise for a number of days, and then the contracts had to be prepared, and so forth. There has been no delay in that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I started this interlocutory per-formance to get some information; I have secured a good deal; and it turns out that nobody can give the rest. The whole object I have in view is to have this program expedited. Notwithstanding what some people say in the newspapers, Congress is not stingy with the Army or the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have voted them all the money that seemed reasonable and proper, and I am sick and tired of having Congress hammered all the time and never given the slightest credit for anything that we do. [Applause.]

the first proposition.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] and the chairman of the committee, Mr. Padgett, have both been very kind about contributing information, and some of it is very valuable. I am in favor of giving the President of the United States the power to commandeer these shipbuilding yards if he needs them. But the United States Government must be honest and just. It can not afford to be anything else, and if these private parties are damaged by this process of commandeering, then the Government ought to compensate them for it, and I have no sort of doubt but that it will-not a bit of doubt. I think if we get into trouble-and I hope we will not-the percentage of the American people in high life or low life or middle life, laboring men or professional men, merchants and business men, farmers, and every sort of men, who will prove recreant to the best interests of the country, is almost infinitesimal, I do not care a straw whether they were born in this country or born across the seanot a particle. [Applause.]

I believe the union-labor men of this country, if they felt it was necessary, would be willing to work 14 or 15 hours a day to save this Republic from humiliation or defeat. Of course there has been a great deal of unwise talk in the United States in the last two or three years about who are the most patriotic. My judgment is that we are all patriotic when the time comes, and the only difference on earth that there ever has been between us on that is on the question of expediency and what is best to be done. I am glad to learn from these gentlemen that the shipbuilders and these other people are willing to do their part if we need their services and need them quick. But, as I see it, the great trouble about these battleships—and it has been pestering me ever since I first studied about them—is that if you build one of the things to-day it is out of fashion to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that is any reason why a lady should not buy a hat?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; not a bit in the world. The hat business is all right, but it is different with a ship.

Mr. MANN. The hat is out of fashion to-morrow.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield just a moment? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Battleship construction began comparatively a few years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I know that.

Mr. BUTLER. Twenty-four years ago.

Mr. PADGETT. And it has been going through a process of transition and development. When I first went on the Naval Committee, 12 years ago, we were building battleships of 12,000 and 15,000 tons' surface displacement, carrying four 12-inch guns, costing $5,000,000. We are proposing in this bill to build battleships of 42,500 tons displacement that carry twelve 16-inch guns. These ships that were carried, as compared with the Delaware, represent a fighting efficiency of about 25 or 30, while the ones we are proposing in this bill represent a fighting efficiency value of 380. That shows the marked progress. The ships we are building now and for several years past are not going out of fashion, but we are reaching up to the limit of achievement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, with all due respect to the chairman, and everybody else, the chairman does not know that. Nobody can tell that some genius is not going to make an invention to-morrow revolutionizing the whole business. I am in favor of going on with the program. I am in favor of this bill. I am in favor of the resolution that the chairman talks about. When we had this subject up a year ago I asked the question if any battleship was recognized to be the queen bee of the whole business; and if it was, why, instead of fooling around and making new plans every time they want to build a new ship, they did not take that one for a model, reach into the pigeonhole, pull out the specifications, and copy them. I have come to the conclusion after hearing the debate that that plan I suggested is absolutely impracticable.

The committee is doing the best it can, and it seems to me the department is; but, if it is necessary, I am in favor of taking every shipbuilding yard into the hands of the Government and putting these great sea fighters on the ocean at the earliest pos-sible date, with all the resources that the American Republic will furnish. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly.

Did I understand the gentleman to say that Mr. BUTLER. he is in favor of having this program completed at a very early date, not having in his mind the condition abroad, which may involve us, but, Congress having authorized the program to be built, that we should proceed to complete it as quickly as possible?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Precisely; with not a minute of delay about it; without reference to any particular nation, but with reference to all the nations on the face of God's earth which would attack us. We are not building battleships for purposes of aggression, but for defense-solely for defense.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. When they say they can not complete these ships within 48 or 52 months, does the Speaker believe that they are lying about it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I do not, because they all testify clearly and you can not have any doubt about it.

Mr. BURNETT. They say they can not do it. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know that they do.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the Speaker think they are lying? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I do not, because they are talking about things they know about and of which I know very little, Mr. BURNETT. They know whether they can complete the

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yos; I think they are lying?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I think they are telling the truth.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman from Missouri—
Mr. BURNETT. I am interrogating the gentleman from Missouri. How does the gentleman reconcile those statements when they say they can not do it, and you say they are not lying about it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say that if you commandeer the shipyards you can carry it out on schedule time.

Mr. BURNETT. Who can commandeer them?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We authorize the President to do it. Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman think that the President can have it done in a shorter time?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; if he can commandeer the shipyards and put them to building battleships instead of commercial ships. I think they can do it within the time the gentleman has been talking about.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the Speaker believe that we ought to do that when they are lying about the time they can do this in?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think they are not lying about it.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not go away. The Secretary of the Navy through his chief con-structor, Admiral Taylor, in whom we have the greatest con-fidence, says that he could not build the ships in the navy yards in less time.

Mr. BURNETT. Then that settles it.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; it does not.
Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman think that Admiral Taylor is lying?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No.

Mr. BURNETT. He puts him in the same position as the

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Alabama leaves out the main proposition that has been discussed, or proposed in the resolution that we are to discuss, and that is that which gives the President of the United States the authority to take over all the shipbuilding yards and hurry this program up if it is necessary.

Mr. BURNETT. Does this bill do that?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This bill will do it if we can get votes enough next Tuesday.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it in the bill now?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; it is not, but it will be before Tuesday night.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope so. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5126. An act giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 865. An act granting to certain States public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads;

S. 5395. An act to repeal sections 2588, 2589, and 2590 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 6716. An act to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation,

S. 4360. An act authorizing the President to exchange land set aside for military purposes in the Territory of Hawaii for private land; and

S. 7486. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors,

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the retirement of Federal judges

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, February 4, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

 A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the service for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 2021); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate for the reappropriation of the unexpended balance on June 30, 1917, for new fence at St. Elizabeth's Hospital to be made available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 2022); to the Com-mittee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, requesting an increase of salaries of certain messengers of the War Department (H. Doc. No. 2023); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting tentative names of persons, firms, or corporations who draft of a provision of legislation for incorporation in the tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

general deficiency appropriation bill (H. Doc. No. 2024); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board. transmitting annual report of the Federal Reserve Board, covering operations for the year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1888); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20297) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Beltrami, Minn., construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said county, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1410), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 4, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. Adamson as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, whose name evokes awe, reverence, gratitude, trust, which men hallow upon their lips in worship, be with us, we beeseech Thee, as we assemble on this holy Sabbath day to pay our tribute in sacred memory to a Member of this House who has been called to the higher life, and who was chosen by his constituents year after year to represent their interests, an earnest of the trust reposed in his ability, sincerity, and nobility of purpose. His heart went out not only to the interests of his people but to his State and nation only to the interests of his people but to his State and nation with patriotic zeal and fervor, a consistent member of the church of his choice, an earnest and faithful worker in the Sunday school, beloved by all. Peace be to his ashes and repose to his soul. Be Thou with his colleagues, friends, his bereaved wife and children, that they may cherish his memory, copy his virtues, and look forward with faith to a happy reunion beyond the confines of this world, where peace, joy, and happiness shall reign forever. Through Him who lived and died that we might know Thee and dwell with Thee evermore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal. Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the special order for this day's session.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE TRIBBLE, OF GEORGIA.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. Rucker of Georgia, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That Sunday, February 1, 1917, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. Samuel J. Tribble, late a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 484.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended in order that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, late a Member of this House from the State of SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, late a Member of this Resolved. That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned. Resolved. That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, these are always sad occasions, and out of them should come lessons to the living as well as tributes to the dead; and I earnestly hope the tributes to-day will at least give a measure of comfort and consolation to the bereaved family and to the thousands of friends who loved the late Congressman Samuel J. Tribble, to whose tender memory these eulogies are paid as our last tribute of respect and affection.

It is called death, but there is no death for those who be-lieve in God and live true to that belief. The body passes away and goes to its last long sleep to awaken no more until the dawn of the morning on that great day when "we shall know each other as we are known" in that beautiful realm beyond this vale of tears, and we miss our friend Mr. TRIBBLE from the places where we used to see him-he has gone to that long sleep-but there is no death for such a soul as was a part of the Christian-hearted SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE. His body is dead, but for the soul of the Christlike there is no death, and his spirit, tender and courageous, has winged its flight to mansions in the sky to claim its sweet reward in that "Temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," where it was bidden with the glad greetings of "Well done, thou good and faithful serv--enter thou in the joys of my heavenly kingdom.

"SAM," as he was affectionately called by his friends, has left testimony of a noble character among men; and he has left a record, pure and spotless, worthy of our emulation. The memory of him is so sweet and full of tender thoughts, and there is so much to commend his life to us, in the blameless way in which he lived and moved among us, that this should be an hour of rejoicing rather than one of sorrow and grief. Try as we may, sorrow and grief can hardly be taken from death; there is that something about it that strikes awe to the human heart, and but for the hope of eternity and the salvation of the soul I can not see how anyone could meet the awful ordeal. The promises of salvation and of eternal life, the hope of resurrection, with which God's word is so abounding, takes the sting away from death and robs the grave of its victory; and to those who keep His commandments and walk in the path of uprightness, as did our friend TRIBBLE, death and the grave are but gateways to a more delightful realm and death has no terrors.

It was while I was a student at the University of Georgia in 1897 that I first had the pleasure of meeting Mr. TRIBBLE. I only knew him casually and did not have an intimate friendship with him until after he came to Congress. He had not been long a member of the House before he had impressed himself upon his colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans, as an able and fearless legislator, guided by but one light and that light was his conscience. He had not long been a mem-ber of this House before he had won the friendship and esteem of all his fellows, and all respected him for his determination, at all times, to stand for what he thought was right.

Since I became a Member of Congress, 10 years ago, I have seen many occasions of this kind, and many good men with whom we have served here have been called "from labor to and have answered death's unavoidable summons, and their fellows have felt a keen loss and deep grief; but I have not known of a death of any Congressman that caused deeper grief and over which there was more genuine regret than was expressed by his colleagues in the House and the Senate when the sad news of Sam's death reached them. He made warm friends and his friends loved him, because he loved his friends and was true to them. He was fearless and tireless in the performance of his duties, yet he was one of the most tender-hearted men I have ever known and one of the most obliging.

I can hardly think of the late Congressman Anderson Roddenberry, of Georgia, who served here so ably, without thinking of the late Congressman TRIBBLE. They were strong friends and worked together like brothers and they were almost as devoted as brothers. I recall, soon after Mr. Roddenberry died, Sam said to me one day: "Roddenberry hastened his death by hard work," and it was true; but it was true also in Sam Tribble's case. He was a slave to duty and took but little thought of his own physical weakness. We are all frail and realize often when it is too late that we have taken too little thought of the frailty of the body. His only thought was to serve, and to do something worth while for his people and his country.

Mr. Tribble was a lawyer; and a good one, too; he was solicitor of the city court in his home city of Athens, Ga., and later was elected solicitor general of the western circuit of Georgia. It is known that he filled these positions of homor and responsibility with that splendid ability which later marked him in Congress as a faithful public servant. He was elected to the Sixty-second Congress, and reelected to the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, and Sixty-fifth Congresses. In looking over his biographical sketch in the Congressional Directory, I was impressed with the statement made therein:

Elected to the Sixty-second Congress, and reelected to the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses without opposition.

He meant, and we all understand it, that he had no opposition in the general elections. He had opposition in the primary elections, and always won with splendid majorities, attesting his great popularity with his constituents; but Sam was too considerate and too modest, afraid he would wound some one, if he made reference to his battles in the primary elections, so he merely refers to the general elections and makes no reference whatever to the primary elections, in which he proved himself one of the best campaigners ever known to Georgians. This is so like the man—a brave fighter when fighting had to be done, but modest, considerate, and forgiving as a victor—never boastful, rather meek, until he was stirred to action, and then he was as brave as a lion and fought with the fury of a storm, but was always fair and honorable, regardless of who his antagonist was or what the cause of battle.

Mr. Tribble was a self-made man, and did his task well in the making, for I have never heard anyone say other of him than that "he was a good man." The fact that the people, early in his young manhood, elevated him to important positions and promoted him to higher honors, indicated that he merited and held their confidence and esteem. As a Member of Congress, he was able, diligent, and faithful. He was a true American and as patriotic a man as I have ever known. He was tireless in his services for his country and carried, at all times, the welfare of his country on his heart and his mind, and never missed an opportunity to advance, as he saw it, the best interest of the whole country. He was an apostle of genuine Americanism.

I fear many public men are not appreciative of the suffrage of their fellow men. Sam Tribble was. He loved the people of the Eighth District of Georgia, and they loved him, too, as was evidenced by the thousands who came from cities, villages, and farms, far and near, to pay a last tribute of respect to their dead Congressman and friend when the remains were carried home for burial. It was particularly noticeable and sad to me to see in the large crowd gathered to attend the funeral, men from every walk of life, a great number of farmers to whom Sam was always so faithful, who had come great distances to say a last farewell to Sam and to get a last sight of his honest face, who, with tear-dimmed eyes and bowed heads, had the appearance of soldiers who had lost their chieftain after many battles. I knew the love deep down in those noble hearts-I had been through political battles, just about like Sam had gone through with, and I knew that human hearts in order to love a man as Mr. TRIBBLE's constituents loved him, were necessarily reflecting a deep and true affection which he

In political campaigns the strongest ties are formed between men, and that Congressman who does not love a constituency which has time and time again stood by and honored him with their votes and support is void of all the real tender human sensibilities and is unworthy of a place in the great National Congress. I did not know how deeply and truly I loved my friends and constituents, who have kept me here for 10 years, until I announced that I would not again be a candidate for the House; and my friends from all over the first Georgia district began to write me and express regret. It brought to my mind and my heart a more tender thought and affection for my constituency than I had ever had, for the trials in which they had proven true friendships came over me in a flood of memories, and I hope the fragrance of those sweet memories will abide with me until the end. When I saw men of all callings at Sam's funeral, weeping, in many cases, like little children, I knew why Sam had been invincible as a campaigner in the eighth, for it brought home to me the memory of friends who have stood so loyally by me in my battles, and I said in my own heart, here is the secret of his political successes—his hold on the people.

When the train, upon which Mr. TRIBBLE's remains were carried, and on which was the funeral party, neared the boundary line of the eighth Georgia district on its sad mission, friends would board it to express sympathy and regret; and as we reached the eighth district large crowds, with sad faces, would stand about the depots and in their appearances could be read the unmistakable evidence of deep grief and great sorrow. His people, as I have said, were devoted to him and properly so, for he was a true friend, a good man, and a splendid Congressman and they hated to give him up. The grief of his constituents was so pronounced that along with the great sympathy I felt for his bereaved family and his close personal friends I found myself keenly sympathizing with the whole people of the district who seemed to realize what the loss meant to them. The people who congregated at the depots knew Sam was on that train and they seemed to long for a sight of him, for a warm clasp of his hand, and for the sound of his earnest voice, his usual friendly greetings, as on his former returns from Washington to the "red old hills of Georgia," but alas! his manly form was lifeless, his strong hand was cold, his voice which he had so often raised in defense of his people was forever silent; and his thousands of friends were broken-hearted and sad as it dawned upon them that Sam was returning for the last time to be buried in the dear "red old hills of Georgia." which had always been close to his heart and over which he had romped and played as a boy, where he had lived as a man, and where he wished to be buried.

In his death Georgia lost a noble and beloved son of whom the State was justly proud, and the Nation lost a true citizen and one of its ablest statesmen. His wife lost a devoted and splendid husband and his children a tender and affectionate father. His wife, one of the most charming and able ladies in Georgia, had been a great help to Mr. Tribble in his career, and no tribute to his achievements can be paid this great man without carrying coupled with it also a deserved tribute to his devoted wife.

From the activities at the National Capitol, where he did his last and best work for his district, his State, and his country, his remains were taken back to Athens, the beautiful and classic city, where he had made his home for many years, and there, in the heart of his district, laid to rest.

the heart of his district, laid to rest.

If no marble shaft is ever erected to this distinguished Georgian to proclaim for all time his splendid qualities of heart and mind, there is builded to him a monument, larger, taller, and far more sublime than any piece of marble that will perpetuate and keep his memory ever fresh and green, a lasting monument of genuine love and admiration in the hearts and affections of noble and appreciative friends.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with sorrowful hearts that we are on this occasion reminded of the passing away of one of our colleagues to whom we were all so closely attached, and one who had, during his active service here as a Member of the Sixty-second, Sixty-third, and Sixty-fourth Congresses, made many loyal and admiring friends. He was elected to the Sixty-fifth Congress by the people of his district by an overwfielming majority.

I was personally acquainted with Mr. TRIBBLE for more than 20 years, during which time he always convinced me of his earnestness and enthusiasm in matters of interest to those whom he represented. When I first knew our departed friend he was in the active practice of law, and afterwards was elected and served four years as solicitor general of his judicial circuit, which position he filled with credit and distinction. He received his first nomination to Congress over one of the ablest men our country has known for many years, and for this reason the public watched his career with interest. He was a hard worker, a very enthusiastic, wide-awake Representative and did much good for the district and the people he represented and for the country generally. He was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which is one of the great committees of Congress. He was always at his post of duty and could be found at his seat at the opening of each session of Congress and was one of the last to remain upon the floor at the hour of adjournment. Truly he performed his duty well and we and the country may truthfully say that the Congress has lost one of its most valuable Members. One of the most inspiring characteristics of this man was his willingness to aid his friends and those worthy of recognition. He would go his full length for his colleagues and for any meritorious matter in which any of them were directly interested. He was positive in his declarations and ready at all times to defend any position he might take and always stood firm in his convictions. He had a resolute will, a determination undaunted by fear, and was never satisfied unless he had accomplished that which in his heart he believed just and proper. Courage was the mainspring of his make-up, and nothing but positive proof of error would turn him from his course.

He was thoroughly convinced that to serve a constituency meant something to him, and no idle moments can be charged to him in the performance of his duty. A confidential statement made to him was absolutely safe and lingered in the deep recesses of his heart. He was proud of his wife and children and had the fullest measure of their love and esteem.

His sudden demise was a great shock to us all and his passing from among us is an irreparable loss to our body. We shall never forget his sojourn with us. We will oft remember the brightness of his face and the pleasant communications with him. He was indeed kind and generous, and the courtesy with which he responded to all his colleagues was commendatory and his desire for the success of his coworkers was unselfish. He has gone from among us, but we shall not forget him. We shall not forget his labors. We shall not forget the many hours he unrelentingly worked for his people and his country. He is now at rest.

Brother, thou are gone before us; and thy saintly soul is flown Where tears are wiped from every eye and sorrow is unknown, From the burden of the flesh and from care and fear released, Where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

Sin can never taunt thee now, no doubt thy faith assail,
Nor thy meek trust in Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit fail:
And there thou'rt sure to meet the good, whom on earth thou lovedst best,
Where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

And when the Lord shall summon us, whom thou hast left behind, May we, untainted by the world, as sure a welcome find, May each, like thee, depart in peace, to be a glorious guest, Where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my tribute of respect, friendship, and admiration for our late colleague, the Hon. Samuel J. Trible, who served the people of the eighth congressional district of the State of Georgia with zeal, industry, and ability for six years as a Member of this House. He was a useful, faithful Member, always at his post of duty, and ever watchful of the interests of his constituents. He enjoyed the confidence and good will not only of every Member of the Democratic side of this House but every Republican who enjoyed his acquaintance or had knowledge of his many worthy qualities. We did not always agree with his position on public questions, which constantly divide the membership of this body, but it can be truthfully said that at all times he had the courage of his convictions. He was open, honest, and conscientious in the discharge of his duties. He was not a trimmer, not a dodger, not a demagogue. He was an honest, fearless, manly man. He fairly earned and deserved the love and admiration of his loyal constituents and the friendship and respect of his colleagues here in Congress.

I met Mr. Tribble soon after his election to the Sixty-second

I met Mr. Tribble soon after his election to the Sixty-second Congress, and our friendship continued up to the time of his untimely death. In the passing of our colleague Georgia lost one of its true and devoted sons and his district a faithful, efficient, untiring public servant.

To live in hearts we leave behind Is not to die.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, one of the most delightful conversations I ever had with the distinguished gentleman whose death we mourn to-day was here in this Chamber the day he was stricken. Apparently in the best of health, he was in a reflective mood, and those ties which bind true friends together, those tender feelings which ennoble friendly intercourse, seemed stronger that day between us than ever before, though we had always been the best of friends since our acquaintance began.

We talked of our pleasant and happy relations during our service in this House, and I am glad that I then had the opportunity to tell him how deeply I appreciated his friendship. It was one of those quiet hours when men are drawn close to each other and speak their feelings. Late that afternoon I learned of his sudden illness and hastened to the hospital, where were gathered many of his friends and colleagues, shocked, grieved, awaiting the fateful words they were so soon to hear. The call which we all must answer had come to him suddenly, almost in the twinkling of an eye, and he was soon to answer. Before his sun had reached its zenith and the shadows were falling to the east his day was ended. Always ready to meet the great emergencies of life, he was ready to answer the last call, for he had led a Christian life and heeded the mandate: "Be ye ready; the summons cometh quickly."

In the full glory of a brilliant young manhood, when success was crowning his efforts and the fine promise of goals yet untouched held their lure and hope, as he looked up the mountain whose paths he was climbing so surely and fast, his untimely death at least carried the blessing that goes to those whose ship goes down "when eager winds are kissing every sail."

Always enjoying the confidence and trust of those with whom he came in contact, he was early chosen a leader of his fellows. A lawyer by profession, he was made the prosecuting attorney for his county and for his judicial circuit before he came to Congress. His work in the discharge of his duties was always characterized by a fine sense of fairness, intelligent effort, and the utmost zeal.

I never knew a public man who labored more industriously for those whose commission he held than did Samuel J. Tribble. No wish of a constituent was too small to receive his considerate personal attention, no task too great for him to undertake for them. He died in the service of his people, giving the very best that was in him to their cause. An incessant worker, he overtaxed his strength in the performance of his duties. He fell in battle. He was inspired in his fight for his people by the same intrepid feeling that moved Washington at the head of the noble Army of the Revolution from White Plains to Yorktown. Tingling in his blood when the Great Commander called him from the service of his people was the same patriotism which coursed through the veins of Jackson as he fell at Chancellorsville.

His service to his country was great. His life is worthy of emulation. He made an impress on the time in which he lived. But it is as Sam Tribble, my friend, that I shall always think of him and mourn his loss. The Nation has lost a patriot, but I have lost a friend.

In his home he was happy, for his good wife always shared the fortunes of his life with a generous encouragement whether the days were dark or bright. She was ever willing to share his trials along with his successes, and there was a perfect sympathy between them. With his family the State and Nation share his loss,

Mr. TRIBBLE left to his family and his people a heritage far more priceless than gold—a life well lived and filled with service, and we are reminded that—

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, And loving favor rather than silver or gold.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, there is not a great deal that I can say that has not already been said in the way of tribute to my late friend, the Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, of Georgia, but what little I can say I want to say. In the matter of friendships among Members of this House there is no North, no South, no East, and no West. I suppose that Democrats perhaps more naturally form their friendships among Democrats than among Republicans, and Republicans more naturally form their friendships among Republicans than among Democrats, but the strongest friendships in this House often cross party lines, and there is, of course, no partisanship in friendships. It might be interesting to say a word or two as to how some of these friendships originate. Some come from living as neighbors in the same hotel perhaps, or in the same neighborhood of the city, or from belonging to the same church or fraternal organization; some come from service on committees; some of them come from the very antagonism which springs up across the aisle between Republicans and Democrats, as a man comes to love a worthy foe, and there are other ways doubtless in which they begin.

My friendship for Mr. TRIBBLE came from the fact that he had been my neighbor in the House Office Building and I have seen a great deal of him in a casual way as we passed each other in the corridors and went up and down on the same elevator and occasionally visited each other and did for each other the usual small favors, as Members of Congress, in the way of exchange of documents and information, and other little helps back and forth from one to the other. So I came to know him soon after my first service began in the Sixty-third Congress and it is a singular fact that when I came down here in December for the opening of this session Mr. TRIBBLE was the first Member of Congress whom I met. I took a car from somewhere up near the Treasury building and came down to the farther entrance of the House Office Building and as I started to get out I saw Mr. TRIBBLE in front of me. We got off the car together, walked up the corridors and took the elevator together for our respective offices, and talked over the coming events of the session. He looked well and told me that he was very well—yet only a day later he was stricken with his fatal illness. I was very much shocked. I felt I had lost a personal friend, and I can hardly say how much it affected me as I at once recalled the fact that he had been the first Member of Congress whom I had seen after my arrival here for the session and the fact that he had been my neighbor over in the House Office Building for so long a time. Of course, I had not enjoyed the pleasure of the long friendship with Mr. Trible that his colleagues from the State of Georgia have enjoyed, but the friendship I have had with him is a very precious memory to me. This House has lost a most worthy Member and our country an able, valued representative.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, one of the strange things about life is, that we never fully appreciate our friends and our loved ones until they are called to the other world.

We see this man and that man occupying places of trust and honor, and those who have not attained such places of distinction never stop to consider the struggle, the deprivation, and the toil that made his goal possible.

Of all the men it has been my pleasure to know who now hold and have heretofore held a public office, none deserved the confidence and affection of his constituents more than did our dear departed friend, Samuel J. Tribble. A more faithful, solicitous, or conscientious man never filled a public office. His paramount thought was of the betterment and happiness of his people. To lighten their burden, to be helpful to those who had the least of this world's blessing controlled his voice and vote.

He was the most indefatigable worker I have ever known. No task was too burdensome for his undertaking if it was for his people. He literally worked himself to death in serving those people he loved and who so sincerely loved him.

He loved the South. He was proud of his State. Whenever his section or his State was directly or indirectly in the balance, his voice was always heard in forceful and eloquent defense of his people.

He was a true friend—brave, courageous, honest, and humble. He said to me one day: "The longer I serve my people the more humble I am. To have the confidence of nearly 300,000 Georgians should make any man humble."

He was a most affectionate and thoughtful husband and father. I never knew a more miserable man when separated from his family. His last rational thought was of them from his family. His last rational thought was of them.

He was held in the highest esteem by the membership of the House. No matter what difference of opinion may have existed about his position on public questions, all men knew he possessed an honest heart and intellect.

Mr. Speaker, as his friend I was a constant watcher at his bedside. I with thousands of friends hoped against hope. God in His infinite wisdom had laid the hand of death upon his brow. As I looked into his honest face for the last time I could not but think of how well it was with his soul. What childlike faith he had in God! How he had striven to serve Him! How clean and noble his life was! How charitable he was! How ready his hand to help the poor! What an example his life had been to his manly and devoted son just stepping into manhood.

As I clasped his palsied hand for the last time I thanked God that I had known him and loved him, and as I stepped into the chill of a winter's night I felt that I should return to his side and whisper one word to cheer him on his flight to God. I would have said:

O just and faithful knight of God: Ride on, the prize is near.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, it was a tremendous shock to me to hear of the death of Samuel J. Tribble. My heart went out to his devoted, helpful wife and children in their sad affliction. I realized, too, the Congress had suffered a great loss.

It was my good fortune and pleasure at the beginning of his congressional career to have become acquainted with Mr. Trible. We both came to this great body in the Sixty-second Congress. We occupied near-by offices and came in almost daily contact. Later we were associates on the Committee on Naval Affairs during the period of deepest interest in the great arm of the sea, when policies of tremendous importance were being inaugurated. Many differences prevailed, and feeling and tension at times were sharp and intense. With this association with Samuel J. Tribble I had opportunities to know much about him. Happily, we here learn to know each other as men—not as partisans—and set our value on the qualities of mind and heart each other possess. That which first impressed me was his close, happy family relations, an index so expressive of that which is best in life and man. Always did his great sincerity impress me, and his high sense of right and nobility of character stamped themselves at every turn.

themselves at every turn.

He was devoted to his official duties, industrious, studious; indeed, so strenuous in his earnestness and activity that he seemed loath to lose a minute in his love of service. The outpouring of people at the funeral services at his home fully attested the great love of his neighbors. It was so sincere, so marked, so general, that, in itself, proved that a kind, strong, high-minded, thoroughly serviceable man had passed to his reward, and their grief and expressions showed how fully they appreciated the great loss they suffered. Samuel J. Tribble earned this tribute by his deeds of love and service to mankind. After all he profits most who serves best.

There is a lesson in the sudden death of our dear departed colleague. The last day comes to all of us. We know not what moment the summons may come. Let duty be our constant watchword and faithful service our guide, ever remembering, no matter what the station in life, that "the charities that soothe, and heal, and bless, lie scattered at the feet of men like flowers."

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I came to add my presence in commemorating this occasion.

The death of the Hon. Samuel J. Tribble gives remarkable accent to that sacred proverb which says, "In the midst of life there is death." In the heyday of a useful, intellectual, and vigorous life, the shadows of death were thrown athwart his path, and he lay down to rest in eternity and sweet communion with those who serve and obey God.

His life and example ought to be assimilated into the life of the young American everywhere. He stands in just fulfillment of that proposition that Christ gave to the twelve when He had just returned from the Mount of Transfiguration and found in the valley the twelve contending among themselves as to who should be the greatest in Heaven. He turned to them stating that "He who would be greatest of all must be servant of all." Mr. Tribele's life fulfilled that proposition. His life was a life of service to his country, to humanity, and to God. And we ought to profit by his life and example, for we find:

There will be a place we know not where, And time we know not when, When God Divine in justice there, Will judge the deeds of men.

And to be prepared for that judgment and get a decree in our favor in that eventful epoch in the universe ought to be the full hope and fruition of all human existence.

Mr. TRIBBLE in the very midst of life met death. He met death in the service of his country, and that service began in the vigor of his young manhood in the call of his State and his country, and in the midst of that service he was called to the Great Beyond.

I simply rose to add my presence and these few remarks in honor of a distinguished son of Georgia, and a splendid, typical American citizen.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, as a boy in north Georgia I looked with admiration upon the foothills that bordered my father's farm. When I first traveled the then seeming great distance of some 20 miles to the famous Lookout Mountain, from whose summit visitors looked over seven States, three battle fields, and numberless mountain peaks, I thought that here in the "heaven-kissing hills" is represented God's best illustration of the eternal, the everlasting. When some years later my mind became absorbed in the history of nations and the growth of governments, I felt that in the development of men, made in the image of their Maker, the purpose of the Almighty was shown—the continuing problem of the universe was outlined.

I now believe that the most everlasting thing in the contemplation of the human mind—the most fixed thing in men and in governments—is character. The soul, the spirit, the immortal part of him whom we memorialize to-day found its keynote, its essence, and its strength in his pure and splendid character.

No truer man ever breathed the breath of life than Samuel Joel Tribble. He died in the very flush of manhood—47 years of age when the summons came. He was a native of Franklin County, one of the so-called country counties of Georgia, on the northern tier, near the South Carolina border, where the mountain air is bracing, where thought is pure, where contamination by evil influences is unknown. As a boy he was an easy favorite in the county schools; as a student in the State University at Athens he soon ranked with the highest; choosing the law as a special course, he was speedily recognized as one of the leaders in the legal department.

His university and law courses completed, he "hung out his shingle" in this classical educational center of the South and begun the practice of law. His adaptability to public service soon became evident, and he was elected solicitor of the city court, serving five years in that office, and was then called to a further four years' service as solicitor general of the western circuit. The constituency of the eighth congressional district of Georgia were not slow to recognize the value of representation in Congress by such a man, and elected him to serve in the Sixty-second Congress. So fully did he meet all their expectations that they elected him to the Sixty-third and again to the Sixty-fourth Congresses.

From the very moment of his admission to the membership of this House Mr. TRIBBLE applied himself with singleness of purpose and unflagging assiduity to the work of legislation. Never losing sight of the interests of the people of his district, he never failed to keep before his mind's eye the larger interest of the country. The most important committee assignment given him when he took his seat here was to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and he continued there until the end. The chairmain of that committee and his associates testify to the faithfulness, the industry, the high intelligence, and the intense patriotism with which Mr. Tribble applied himself to the difficult work before that committee at every session, and which was particularly onerous when the momentous events of contemporaneous history enlarged its activities. He was unfailing in his attendance upon all sessions; any amount of labor assigned to him was borne cheerfully. Whatever the subject which he was called upon to investigate was exhausted by the minutest research.

With almost unerring instinct he knew how to separate the wheat from the chaff. With the acumen of the trained lawyer he distinguished between the true and the false; nothing that bore the faintest resemblance to wrong could escape his notice, and with like discernment he saw the good points of a proposition. In the great work accomplished by the Committee on Naval Affairs during the past few sessions of Congress Mr. Tribbia bore a share which will entitle him to honorable remembrance throughout the coming years.

The chief of the Confederate forces during the Civil War, Gen. Robert E. Lee, was fond of saying that "duty is the sublimest word in the English language." This thought found an echo in the heart of Mr. TRIBBLE and guided his course at all times and in all circumstances. His devotion to duty, his courage, his strong adherence to his convictions were salient characteristics, distinguishing him both in his public and private life.

With Mr. Trible conviction, the sense of duty, never yielded to expediency. Because a thing was popular, this did not commend it to his consideration or influence his action whenever his conviction ran counter. This policy of his was most strikingly illustrated in his course on private pensions. He was a consistent and persistent opponent of private pension legislation. He was firm in his belief that the general pension laws were liberal enough, both in their original frame and in the interpretation given them by the officials charged with their execution, to obviate the necessity of supplementing them with private pensions for persons who happened to be fortunate enough to have friends and advocates in Congress.

No doubt Mr. TRIBBLE at times aroused resentment among his colleagues by his opposition in this regard, but he never allowed this to deter him from the course which he had marked out for himself and of the correctness of which his conception of duty did not leave him in doubt. I am quite sure that the kindly feelings which he cultivated in his intercourse with his fellow Members must frequently have suffered a severe pang when they came in conflict with the stern dictates of conceived duty, but I am equally sure that his colleagues finally bore him no ill will because of his opposition, for they could not fail to recognize and appreciate the high sense of moral obligation which determined his action.

In a Republic like ours the conscientious man is the greatest asset of the State. The citizenry of a democracy must be animated by high ideals to be fruitful of the best service. Such a citizen was Mr. Trible. He had set his ideals high before him, and they were his guiding stars through life. Mr. Trible carried his idealism into every action of his life. It was not enough for him to do the thing which it was obviously his duty to do, but he constantly strove for something better and higher. If he ever had chosen a motto for himself it must have been "Excelsior." His thoughts were always lifted above the common; they were aimed at the best in life; they reached up to those higher realms where truth reigns supreme.

Those who live are those who struggle.

Measured by this, Mr. TRIBBLE may well be said to have lived a splendid life, for he never ceased to struggle for that which is good, that which is noble, that which elevates character. In his nature Mr. TRIBBLE partook of much of the mountains in whose vicinity he was born and had been reared. Firmness, rugged honesty, unyielding determination in the face of adverse influences, perseverance under difficulties, self-reliance were distinguishing traits in his moral make-up. Yet withal his was a kindly spirit. He was lovable to a degree, but not a spendthrift in his friendships. When he once had made a friend, however, he did "grapple him to his soul with hooks of steel," and was then as self-sacrificing as such a nature could prompt a man to be. No man was ever loved and respected more fully by his neighbors than was he. They knew that they could always rely upon him for friendly aid whenever aid was needed. They knew that if they came to him for advice it would come from the heart and would be given after patient consideration. He was a man whom children loved, and that is the best test of the kindliness of a man's nature.

Mr. Tribble was a model husband and father. In his home life he was governed by the same lofty ideals which animated his public career. To his wife he was the ever loving, considerate companion; to his children the ever faithful counselor and close friend. They received from him the best that his mind and heart could offer them. Praise was ever given in lavish measure and reproach was softened by gentle words.

reproach was softened by gentle words.

Disraeli, in his speech on the death of the Duke of Wellington, in the House of Commons, said:

The Duke of Wellington has left to this country a great legacy, greater even than his fame—he has left to us the contemplation of his character.

No one will gainsay the declaration that the contemplation of a fine character is something whereby every man may profit. And thus we may to-day gather new inspiration for the work which we are appointed to do by pondering the character and the life of our departed colleague and friend. Surely, we can profit by the contemplation of his high sense of duty; by the consideration of his earnestness in his application to his work, of his conscientiousness in the discharge of every task that came to his hands. From such a study we may well gather new inspiration.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, we have assembled to-day to pay tribute to one of Nature's noblemen, to one who loved God and his fellow man, for such a man was Hon. S. J. TRIBBLE, our late colleague in this august Assembly.

Mr. Tribble, in the very prime of life, vigorous, energetic, full of hope, and desirous of being of service to the people who had honored him, was suddenly called from his sphere of usefulness by the Great Architect of the Universe. Surely "God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform."

moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform."

On the opening day of this session of Congress, I sat in the House with Mr. TRIBBLE, and we discussed pending legislation, and he was full of ambition and determination to render splendid service to his district, State, and Nation. I never saw him in better spirits or seemingly in better health. On the following morning my heart was inexpressibly grieved and shocked to learn that my friend had had a stroke of apoplexy, and was at death's door, in a hospital. I hastened to his bedside, but human love and friendship and the best of medical skill availed not, and on the 8th day of December the soul of our friend returned to the God who gave it.

Mr. Tribble held many positions of trust and honor and fully measured up to the requirements of each of them. He was a devoted husband, a loving father, a sincere and loyal friend, and the world is brighter and better for his having lived in it. He was my friend, true and tried. I loved him in life, and shall ever cherish his memory.

With a number of his colleagues, I accompanied his remains to the beautiful, classic city of Athens, Ga., his former home. On the following day, in the Presbyterian Church, his funeral was held. The church was filled with beautiful floral offerings, evidencing the love and esteem in which he was held, and a great concourse of sorrowing friends assembled to do him honor. The large edifice was inadequate to accommodate his many friends, and thousands could not gain admittance to the church. The funeral services were conducted by Dr. Lynch, of the Baptist, and Dr. Hill, of the Presbyterian Church, each delivering able and impressive orations which I incorporate in this, my simple tribute to my friend.

We believe in the immortality of the soul; therefore, let us hope, in the bright and better world, once again we shall know Mr. TRIBBLE and be with him forevermore.

There is no death,
The stars go down to rise upon a fairer shore
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine forevermore.

And ever near us tho' unseen The nearer immortal spirit treads, For all the boundless universe is life, There are no dead.

Discourse at the funeral service of Congressman S. J. Trib-BLE, by Rev. James William Lynch, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, Athens, Ga.

ETERNITY IN THE HEART.

God has surprised us. We are shocked, pained, and grieved. For the moment the nightmare of oppressive mystery paralyzes us. We are as those who have frightful dreams in the night and wish for the light of the coming day.

THE TIMELINESS OF GOD.

In the dark and fell hour, so seemingly rude and ruthless, I come to lay upon your gashed hearts the comfort and hope of a beautiful scripture, "He hath made everything beautiful in its time: also He hath set eternity in their heart." In the eyes of God everything is beautiful in its time and place, for He sees it in the light of His all-revealing eternity. Though our hearts are stunned and paralyzed, God has put in them the ballast of a deathless hope.

THE DEATHLESS HOPE.

By the deathless hope I mean to designate the hope of immortality. The thirst for a future, personal, and conscious existence is the supreme passion of the soul. The moaning hunger of life is life—continued, personal, family-related, and consciously happy.

AGE AND EXPRESSION OF THE HOPE.

This hope is old as the soul and a part of it. The writer of Ecclesiastes—a book Voltaire read and Ingersoil praised—declares that God has set eternity in the heart. This eternal hope the Hebrews embalmed in their holy writings, the Egyptians builded in their pyramids, prehistoric man symbolized on his rude implements of toil and weapons of war, and in all ages sculpture has given to its expression the finest stroke, painting the softest touch, poetry the gladdest note, and devotion the most sacred utterance.

THE RETICENCE OF MOSES.

The reticence of Moses on the question may be explained—the matter had been overdone in Egypt. In that land of pyramids, tombs, and mummies, immortality was only another word for superstitious idolatry. The nations' literature was called the "Book of the Dead." The enslaved Israelites needed to be organized and taught, not the masonry of sepulture and art of embalming, but the laws of hygiene and jurisprudence, not how to die and be buried, but how to be healthy and strong and long-lived. The great Prophet succeeded—the Jews are the healthiest people and most persistent race in the world.

NO LIE IN NATURE.

Though we may not affirm that the universality of the deathless hope proves the reality of an endless life, yet we do conclude that it constitutes a strong presumption in its favor. In the realm of nature there is no unsatisfied want—no emptiness without a corresponding fullness. The eye wants vision, and there is light; the ear wants sound, and there is music; the nose wants smell and there is fragrance; the mouth wants taste, and there is food; the nerves want thrill, and there is touch; the mind wants thought, and there is truth, revealed and axiomatic; the heart wants love, and there is friend-ship; the soul wants life, and there is 60d. "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." If there be no future existence, this eternity in the heart is the only lie in nature.

THOUGHTS BEFORE THINGS.

Our faith in the doctrine will largely depend upon whether we assume the primacy and preeminence of mind or matter. For my part I find it easier to believe in the eternity of mind than to believe in the eternity of matter. Thoughts are greater than things. I believe they are older. All things were first thoughts. The modern loom is Arkwright's thought dressed up in iron; the locomotive is Stephenson's thought harnessed to steel; the ocean liner is Fulton's thought under steam; the stars are God's thoughts on fire; the Lord Christ was the Word made flesh. Our bodies decay and fall, but we pass away thinking.

THE GREAT ASSUMPTION.

Much of our practical knowledge is based upon assumptions. We can not prove anything in its genesis. Mathematics rests upon the assumption that one is one and twice one is two. We can not prove it. The great truths are axiomatic. God has put them in the mind as He has put eternity in the heart. They admit of no demonstration. Our use of them is an act of faith. God is the Great Assumption sumption.

THE LAW OF CORRESPONDENCE.

The Law of correspondence.

To everything in the universe there has been given a sphere of existence corresponding to its nature. The planet Jupiter has an orbit of a thousand million miles. Some trees live a thousand years and more. The white elephant of India does service for a century, Now, man is greater than trees and elephants and planets. It is unreasonable to believe that they have larger spaces and longer lives. We are all greater than our dreams. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever."

AN ETERNAL NECESSITY.

Moreover, the hope is an eternal necessity. Without it society would not hold together or civilization advance. The great apostie truly says, "If we have only hoped in Christ in this life, we are of all men most pitiable," Once let materialistic philosophy filter down into the common mind and selfishness would become dominant and regnant. Wheels would reverse and take us back to mere animalism. Epicures do not make missionaries or martyrs or soldiers. The world must have men who endure as seeing Him who is invisible, "We are saved by hope," God has put this telescope in our hearts and we look not upon things seen but unseen, for these are eternal. With John Fiske I believe in the "sweet reasonableness of God." This infinitude of space and these multitudinous worlds mean something. Nothing is wasted in God's hands. With Him there is a thing for every place and a place for everything, "In My Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you."

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNIVERSE.

The inequalities of condition and miscarriages of justice in the

The inequalities of condition and miscarriages of justice in the social world at least hint a final settlement and adjudication of human affairs. Not many lawyers are infidels. They believe in laws and laws are made; they do not make themselves. Old Abraham asked, "Will not the Judge of all the earth do right?" It is the first moral question raised in the Bible and the question can only finally and satisfactorily be answered in the Supreme Court of the Universe. Nothing is settled until it is settled right, but many decisions here will have to be appealed to the Great Assize. I have found the deathless hope weakest in physicists and surgeons, men who work in matter; and I have found it strongest in teachers, jurists, and statesmen, men who work in mind.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST REASONER.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST REASONER.

The world's greatest intellect, for pure and unaided reason, reached the conviction of a life beyond. I refer to Plato of the Greeks. The words of his classic interpreter, Addison, have almost the immortality of their theme:

"It must be so—Plato, thou reasonest well!—
Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire, This longing after immortality?

Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror, Of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul Back on herself, and startles at destruction?

"Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
"Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter, And intimates eternity to man.
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought.
The stars shall fade away, the Sun himself Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years, But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth, Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds."

But after all has been said that can be said from the standpoint of science, philosophy, poetry, and reason, it remains, as revelation declares, that Christ brought life and immortality into light. The universal hope blossomed on His lips. He spoke words of familiarity, candor, and assurance. He called spirits back from the silence, and talked with heavenly visitants. He turned loose resurgent forces that still work upward. Out of His empty tomb came the great White Day, our Sabbath, witnessing every week and forever to His resurrection.

THE KEYS OF DEATH AND HADES.

John of Patmos saw Him in glory and heard Him say, "I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hades and death." The "keys" are doubtless the symbols of experience and authority. Our Lord has tasted death for every man, and He has power to unlock all doors. He has the key to every experience in our life, every pain in our fiesh, every wound in our heart, every perplexity in our mind—every condition, situation, state, and place through which the soul must pass. He will meet us in death with the keys; at the grave with the keys; at the gates of heaven with the keys; at the grave with the keys; at the gates of heaven with the keys. The compressed eternity in our hearts will expand into the eternity of ageless time, boundless space, endless life, infinite beauty, and all-perfect knowledge. We shall be with Him and like Him, and we shall know Him and ours and all, even as we are known. The deathless seed in the heart will flower forever in a deathless world.

"God does not send us strange flowers every year:

God does not send us strange flowers every year;
When the spring winds blow o'er pleasant places,
The same dear things lift up the same fair faces,
The violet is here.
It all comes back—the odor, grace, and hue,
Each sweet relation of its life repeated;
It is the thing we knew.
So after the death winter it will be;
God will not put strange sights in heavenly places;
The old love will look out from the old faces;
Veilchen, I shall have thee!"

Remarks at the funeral of Congressman S. J. Tribble by his friend Dr. E. L. Hill.

The gifted and brilliant Goldsmith put in the mouth of one of his characters, who occupied the sacred office and lived the holy life, the disparaging words,

"And what is friendship but a name,
A charm to lull to sleep;
A shade to follow wealth and fame,
And leave the wretch to weep."

If this is a true conception of friendship, then better by far eliminate the thought from the human mind, and eradicate the sentiment from the human heart, and erase the word from the human language; but this is not a true interpretation of friendship. Friendship is the richest gift of one soul to another; and more precious than gold and silver. When Cyrus gave Artabazus, one of his courtiers, a gold cup, he gave Crysanthus, his favorite friend, a kiss. And Artabazus said to Cyrus, his great general, "The gold in my cup is not so precious as the sweetness in the kiss of friendship, which you have given Crysanthus." This was the ancient way of expressing the priceless value of friendship. The life which has not been blessed with friendship's fragrant love is not worth living; and impoverished indeed is that life which has not been graced with true friends. We Americans can almost feel our hearts move with forgiveness and certainly with pity when we see that military genius, Benedict Arnold, who trified with his honor and betrayed his country, lying upon his death bed in a garret in the metropolis of the world; and hear his physician ask him if there is anything he would have, and hear him reply, "Yes, only a friend." The essential worth of friendship was duly appreciated by the great Master Teacher who had nothing more valuable to give his disciples and nothing they coveted more, and hence he said to them, "Henceforth I call you not servants. I have called you friends."

Hon. S. J. Tribbus gave expression in life to no other virtue more strikingly than that of loyalty to his friends. Standing on yonder street corner engaged in conversation with him one day, he pointed to a man who passed by, and said, "That man is my friend, and I

I am honored to have been numbered among those who claimed him as a friend. Ten years ago I came to this city, a stranger in a strange land, and the third home into which I was invited was that of Mr. Tribble. I well remember that ideal little cottage home on Prince Avenue, with the charms of a warm hospitality and the delights of magnetic personalities. From that evening my friend constantly expressed his genial interest in me and mine. His every effort was put forth to make me comfortable in that same little cottage, the few months that I occupied it as my home. When he was called into a larger sphere of usefulness, I thought perhaps his mind would be so engulfed in the larger interest of life he would drift away from local interests and persons, but from time to time he wrote me of his service and plans in Congress, and never falled to give me the warm hand grasp when I met him on our streets here.

But this friendship, like yonder mountain stream which springs from a pure fountain head and moves along its course for a time and then darts from sight underground, until farther down in the valley it appears again larger and richer and grander and more powerful, has been interrupted for a season by its passage through the grave, but soon will appear grander and larger and stronger in that world of endless and congenial associations. Until then I bid my friend, good-bye.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of personal bereavement that I appear to-day. When Mr. TRIBBLE came to Congress it was the good fortune of our committee that he should be assigned as a member thereof, and during the years of his service I had opportunity of close association with him, an association that, as the years continued and our work grew in volume and importance, became closer, and our friendship was cemented into a more hallowed compact. I esteemed him very highly, and I am justified in saying that he had the esteem, confidence, and admiration of every member of the committee. We esteemed him for his worth, we admired him for his ability, and we loved him for his friendship.

Mr. Tribble was a man of positive convictions. It was not a question in his convictions, as commonly expressed, of "milk and He believed something. He believed it in a positive way. He believed there were duties to be performed in life, and that belief was positive. He believed that there was work to be accomplished by a Member of Congress, and that was a positive belief with him, and he asserted it. He was a man who had the courage of his convictions. He was not afraid to express them, and he did express them when he felt that it was his duty so

He was not only positive in his convictions, not only had the courage of them, but he was sincere in his beliefs. His beliefs and his convictions found lodgment in his heart and received the sanction of his judgment and the approval of his intelligence. No one can help but admire one who is positive in his character, who is courageous in his convictions, and who is sincere in his beliefs.

Again, Mr. Speaker, a thing that may be spoken to his credit and is worthy of emulation is that he was not too stubborn to learn. There is a great deal in that. Every Member who comes to Congress comes as a new man. There is a broad field here that before coming he has never explored. There are many subjects here which in their full phase and full view he has not attempted to survey. There are many questions here that he has not had either the time, the opportunity, or the privilege of Sometimes we find a man so set in his ways, so prejudiced in his convictions, that he is too stubborn to learn. It is to be said to the credit of anyone, when he comes into a larger field of experience and observation, when he comes into a line of new duties, of untried labors, that he is not too stubborn to learn by experience and by enlarged opportunities and extended privileges. And I do not know of anyone in my association, in committee work, in private friendship, and in observation in the House that better illustrated that than our friend, Mr. TRIBBLE. He was frank, open, and sincere, and a man with feeling, with noble purpose, not too stubborn to learn, and developed year after year as he served in this House, and he was enlarging the sphere of his usefulness and improving all of his opportunities. It is something that can be spoken to his credit and is worthy of emulation.

Again, Mr. Speaker, he was polite and courteous. I think I might emphasize that especially. Politeness is one of the virtues of life that I sometimes think in the stir and bustle and the confusion of our present life is sometimes overlooked. I some-times think that this generation does not give that attention and that consideration to the virtue of politeness that characterized our fathers and our forebears. It is a virtue, however, that yields the greatest dividends of any in life. It costs nothing, and yet it is the polish, it is the finish in character that marks the gentleman, that makes us close to our friends, that makes us congenial in company and in society. There may be a rough diamond and we esteem it as a diamond; but its beauty, its brilliancy, its value, is brought out and exemplified when it is polished. And politeness, courteous demeanor, courteous and polite character, is the finished-diamond quality of our lives.

Mr. Tribble in his personal conduct and association illustrated these virtues. It is said:

Our lives are songs; God writes the words, And we set them to music at pleasure; The song grows sad, or sweet, or glad, As we choose to fashion the measure.

The song of life for Mr. TRIBBLE was a glad song. He realized the true philosophy contained in that little verse, that he could fashion the song of his life and make it sad, sweet, or glad, and he chose to make it sweet and glad. Its harmony was pure, its melody was inspiring; and although we have laid him away to rest, the sweetness and the melody of that song are not hushed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, we are glad to hear from the great chairman of the great committee on which our late friend, Mr. Tribble, performed such excellent work, Mr. Padgett of Tennessee, the words of praise and esteem and affection to which we have just listened. He is the best witness in this House as to the facts about which he talks, and his commendation is high praise indeed.

All important events and conspicuous men afford opportunity for instruction, and we can not make progress if we fail to observe and embrace the opportunities. Of course, we all hear though we neglect and do not often bear in mind, the great truth that "in the midst of life we are in death," and the importance of that injunction, "Be ye also ready," and the suddenness with which death comes and cuts off the most promising and useful in life. But there are other lessons that can be learned from the lives of such men as Samuel J. Tribble. His life is an exemplification of the genius and value of our institutions, of the wide-open door which our institutions afford of opportunity for all to rise, to do well, to achieve usefulness, to make themselves illustrious, and to bless mankind.

Although we had a general knowledge of Mr. Tribble as a lawyer in Georgia and as solicitor general of his circuit, there was very little general knowledge in Georgia of the real character of the man. But when suddenly and unexpectedly to us all at a distance from his district he defeated for Congress one we at that time thought the most brilliant man in Georgia or in Congress—at least many of us thought so—a man who had been most illustrious in his State, a man who by his wisdom and achievements in this House stood as the peer at the highest, and who would have been chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs if he had been reelected, we were led to wonder and inquire who was Mr. Tribble. We were prompted to think there must be something in him, and something known to his constituents not known to the balance of the State; and so with much curiosity we observed his coming and his performance

We found on nearer acquaintance that he had in him those elements of heart and mind and character that had endeared him to the people who knew him the best; that as solicitor general he had enforced justice with some discriminating de-gree of judgment and some element of tender mercy; that even as prosecuting officer, who had for four years enforced the law, he was yet popular, and that the people among whom he had lived, the people whom he had served, had elected him to Congress over the great and popular man whom he challenged in the battle for preference. We found that though he was not born to titles nor wealth nor influence, he had taken his chances among the poor boys in America; that he had used the few opportunities afforded him; that he had utilized every advantage; that he had learned to realize that-

The heights by great men reached and kept Were not attained by sudden flight, But they, while their companions slept, Were tolling upward in the night.

And that with a resolute determination that would take no denial he proceeded step by step to inform his mind, to develop his character, until he had commanded that degree of confidence that elected him as solicitor general, in which office he made good and justified the confidence which afterwards secured his election to Congress.

He realized, even when he came to Congress, that he was not at the top, that he was only an humble beginner in the field of statesmanship, and he accordingly selected the men of experience and wisdom here and sought counsel of them, and sat at the feet of Gamaliel, and adopted for himself the strictest and most careful doctrines of statesmanship. He realized that—

Heaven is not gained by a sudden bound; But we climb the ladder by which we rise From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies Round by round.

And he toiled without ceasing day and night, performing the routine duties the arduous nature of which unfortunately the people do not always understand and appreciate. Sometimes they think a seat in Congress is a sinecure; that a man has nothing to do but come here and roll in luxury and have an easy time and a frolic all the time.

If they could take Samuel J. Tribble as an exemplar and notice him, a poor man, with great demands for expenditure always upon him, his time so occupied by public duties that he could not give attention to private finances, always at work, always working for other people, they would realize that such a man is doing something for his fellow men in return for the great honors they are conferring upon him.

I do not want to forget to state another thing that we discovered upon nearer acquaintance. I may say we also realized the truth of the Scripture which says that "Whoso findeth a good wife findeth a good thing," and that in his wife he had secured a veritable helpmeet who in all his trials and in all his labors had labored and sympathized with him, and who in all his triumphs had rejoiced with him, and in most cases had been conspicuous in securing them. Their union was blessed with two delightful and splendid children, who blessed them by being good and intelligent children; and it seemed that all the elements of happiness and usefulness surrounded Mr. Tribrie when he saddened us all by unexpectedly taking his departure for the other world

It is a pleasure to me, Mr. Speaker, in the midst of our sadness at his loss, to testify this much to his usefulness to his people and his country, and the confidence his fellow Members reposed in him, and the pleasure his acquaintance afforded us all.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, within the brief period of six years four Georgia Senators, Steve Clay, Joe Terrell, A. O. Bacon, and William S. West have passed on their way, and three Members of this body, Jim Griggs, Anderson Roddenbery, and Sam Tribble have answered the roll. The natural conclusion may reasonably be drawn that life in Washington is not conducive to longevity—seven Members of Congress in six years, or an average of over one a year. The last to die was Samuel J. Tribble, of Athens, Ga., whose life and services we meet here to commemorate to-day.

His life and history are marked by strenuous effort. Above all he was a clean-cut, uncompromising, honest, and generous fighter who bore upon his political body many honorable scars, and I may add that in my opinion his strenuous exertion leading to a wonderful victory over a strong opponent in the last campaign was the direct proximate cause of his death. He had grown to be a skillful, watchful, and efficient legislator; he got results; he was ever ready either for service or for sacrifice; and the people of his district evidenced their great appreciation of his services by an overwhelming majority of some 12,000 in the last primary.

He would hardly have had opposition again in 10 years; and having reached this satisfactory state in public life when he could work for his district and State untrammeled by the dread of near opposition; when his efficiency was at its best an unaccountable thing happened as it often happens. The end of what appeared the beginning of a most useful public life came suddenly.

It was hard to die under such circumstances and conditions, yet when I first saw him after he was stricken I realized that he knew that the clock had struck twelve for him and he apparently had no deep regrets at leaving but for the parting with family and friends. He met and faced the common foe calmly and resignedly. With Dr. Davenport White and a trained nurse at Providence Hospital I was in a condition to know, if any one could, the state of his mind. I was the last person to whom he spoke. Right here I wish to remark in an aside of the wonderfully delicate structure of the human body. With every faculty at its best, mentally and physically, and the red blood coursing at full tide, there came a slight rupture of a minute capillary within the skull near the right temple, through which only one red blood corpuscle could pass at a time, and this little seeping leak formed a clot no bigger, perhaps, than a small pinhead and this caused the pressure which induced paralysis, and either the clot would not absorb or the little leak would not stop, and this little thing stopped the wonderful machinery which in action is life; and, then "the golden bowl was broken and the silver chord was loosed," and his spirit winged its way to the God who made it, and now we trust he is at perfect rest.

now we trust he is at perfect rest.

Sam Tribble's friendship was as pure and true as the "unchanging blue." He was such a friend as one could trust without fear of betrayal with the innermost secrets of his soul; and how rare is such friendship! Such unwavering loyalty! Among the most sacred words to me relating to the conduct of man to man is "friend," and "friendship." Friendship amidst one's difficulties, friendship that clings to one when others doubt his motives and misconstrue his conduct—

"friendship, the cordial drop that makes the bitter draught of life go down!"

He was great because he loved his country, his home, his district, his State, his section, and there was not a conscious moment when he would not, if he deemed it needful, have freely sacrificed his life on his country's altar.

His conscience was his guide through this life to another. He followed its dictates, true as the needle to the pole, and there rises before my mental vision the lines of Burns to his young friend, to heed his conscience:

Its slightest touches instant pause, Debar all side pretences, And resolutely keep her laws Uncaring consequences.

He left a brilliant and devoted wife, one who was more helpmeet than most wives can be to their husbands. She was his daily consulting companion at all times and everywhere; he left a noble and manly son, who will surely follow in his footsteps along the pathways of duty; he left a beautiful and affectionate daughter who loved him devotedly; and he left many true and tried friends who mourn his death.

We all loved him, we love his memory, and trust that in the future we will meet and live together again. If for no reason given in the Inspired Writings, "by the same token that the death-devoted Greek knew that he would meet again his own Clemanthe" we know that we will meet again.

"As Ion begins his preparation for sacrifice at the command at Athens, Clemanthe his beloved fiancé exclaims, "And shall we never see each other?" and, after a pause, Ion answers, "Yes! I have asked that dreadful question of the hills that look eternal; of the flowing streams that lucid flow forever; of the stars, amid whose fields of azure my raised spirit hath trod in glory; all were dumb; but now, while I thus gaze upon thy living face, I feel the love that kindles through its beauty can never wholly perish; we shall meet again."

never wholly perish; we shall meet again."

Some philosopher has wisely or unwisely said that death is man's best friend. And what is death to him who meets it with an upright heart?

A quiet haven where his shattered bark Harbors secure 'til the rough storm is past, Perhaps a passage overhung with clouds, But at its entrance a few leagues beyond, Opening to kinder skles and milder suns, And seas pacific as the soul that seeks them.

A deserving and beautiful compliment was paid to him by the two able and Christian ministers who conducted his funeral exercises at the old Presbyterian Church at Athens, the seat of learning, the alma mater of so many distinguished Georgians. His pallbearers were among the wealthiest and most respected men of that center of learning; but higher than sermons and distinguished pallbearers was the simple and, to me, touching testimonial of the multitude of plain people who came from the edges of his district with increasing numbers as they came to view in solemn silence the last rites of the man they had loved and learned to love more and more as they knew him better and better.

SAM TRIBBLE was an independent character. "He walked a highway of his own and kept the company of his self-respect." He seldom sought advice, he worked out his own problems. He flared with righteous indignation at any slight assault made by Members on his State or his people, and he struck back like the reflex action of a nerve-pricked muscle. He was responsible for his acts because they were peculiarly his own. "Like Tenpasses's pardner he played a lone hand."

The close of such a life as his is in keeping with its general tenor—calm, peaceful, resigned, hopeful—leaving to his family and friends the inestimable heritage of a well-spent life in service of God and fellow man.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has set apart this hour to pay tribute to the work, life, and character of our departed colleague, the late lamented SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE.

I had known him for quite a number of years casually, but from the beginning of my term here we were thrown together almost daily until Congress adjourned, discussing our work, the different items of legislation, and the best and proper way to proceed. Being a new Member, I always felt free to discuss anything with him and obtain suggestions from him. In our constant association and work together I learned to know him, I believe, as he really was—a kind, courteous, lovable Christian gentleman.

He was dependable, always at his post, seeking the truth and right in everything, doing his duty to his people and to his country. His whole ambition here was that he might serve his people; to the trust reposed in him by them he was always faithful and true. He had a fine and delicate sense of justice and the power to discriminate accurately, being able to separate the good from the evil, the true from the false; and, when convinced in his own mind of the right course to pursue, he possessed the moral courage to stand by his convictions. His mind and heart were always open to the cry of the distressed, the poor, the needy, the oppressed, wherever found; and, be it said to his everlasting credit and honor, he was always ready to help them.

I could not pay him higher tribute; nay, if he now knows—and who will say he does not—he would not have me say more, nor consider anything a higher honor or greater tribute than to say he was the servant, the friend of the poor, the needy, the friendless, the weak, the oppressed.

He was just finishing his third term here and had been reelected for another term, showing the faith and confidence his constituents had in him. He devoted his whole time and energy to their interests. His loyalty and majesty of character are shown in his life work. He was of a modest demeanor, and had no desire to appear other than he really was. He avoided show and ostentatious display.

SAM TRIBBLE was a man, great, not in the large accumulation of wealth, not in his own estimation, though holding high positions of honor and trust, but great in humility of life and of that moral character which enables one to withstand and overcome all obstacles, and do right under all circumstances, as he saw it.

His early training and life were such as to bring him in contact with that class of his fellow citizens which made him familiar with the wants, needs, hopes, ambitions, and desires of the great mass of tollers of his district and of the Nation, and his sympathy always went out to them, and he labored tirelessly for their welfare. A striking illustration of their appreciation and esteem was shown at his funeral, when men from all walks of life, and especially such as I have referred to, from all over his district in large numbers attended and showed their grief for him who had always kept them in mind and was faithful to their every interest and trust.

We need more such men in public life, in high positions, in legislative halls especially. He was a very useful Member here, and we will continue to miss him.

He is not dead; he has only passed through the gates into that unknown land, into a newer and larger life, waiting and watching for those he loved, free from all pain and sorrow. But our friend and colleague is with us no more. He appreceded us, but we are reminded that we too must travel the same road; whether at some early date or in the distant future, may we have so lived that it may be said of us, as it can truly be said of him, that he was a noble, true, and honest man; that the world is better on account of his life; that he contributed some to the sum total of human goodness and made many happier.

Earth seems more sweet to live upon, more full of love, because of him.

It was a sad privilege to attend his funeral. The sorrowful crowd which gathered long before the hour of the funeral, the procession which accompanied his remains to its last resting place, the large floral offerings laid by friends upon his bier, and the look of sadness and grief upon the faces of all who gathered to pay last tribute of love and respect to his memory, showed the real esteem in which our colleague was held by his colleagues, his fellow townsmen, and the people of his State.

Now, as we meet in this hall where he labored and spent much time so pleasantly, and realizing that he is to meet with us no more, our hearts are filled with grief and we feel deeply the loss we have sustained. When we remember how he was so suddenly striken, his sufferings, how we watched by his side, hoping against hope, and then how he slipped away, we are overwhelmed in our sorrow. We have reached that place where earthly help is of no avail in our suffering; yet we can look beyond the clouds that overshadow us and through faith see the star of hope, and remember the assuring promise of Him who said,

I am the resurrection and the life; whosoever believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live again. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me, he shall never die.

His death was a distinct loss, not only to his district and State, but to the Nation. People, out of gratitude for service rendered throughout the past, in all ages, have built imposing monuments in memory of the lives, characters, deeds, and virtues of their dead; they remind us and generations following of their many lovable traits and accomplishments, inspiring us to nobler deeds and better lives; but greater than monuments of marble, than fame, and wealth is the rich heritage left to his family and friends. A life that amid all of its temptations, it worries, and disappointments "had kept the whiteness of his soul." Had lived the true life, worthy, and well spent in the service of his people.

[Mr. WALKER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be allowed 10 or 15 days to revise and extend remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WALKER] requests unanimous consent that general leave to print for all Members be given for 15 days. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, from the time when God said, "Let there be light," and there was light, the evidence He gave us of His power and purpose was discoverable in three things, and they are, that He implanted in the human heart the sentiment of love, inspired respect for life, and reverence for death.

Centuries before the cross was erected on Calvary, where was consummated the sublimest of all sacrifices, the ancients worshiped their mythical gods under the belief that they were children of earth and that by their wisdom and power they had transmuted themselves into gods and were instrumental and capable, from their homes afar off, of controlling the destinies of earth; that all changes of season, climate, thunderstorms, and tempests, all ills of mankind, his sorrows, his misfortunes, blessings, and comforts, came either from the wrath, whim, or pleasure of these beings.

It is related by the historians that it was no uncommon custom among the ancients to offer up human sacrifice to the gods and to the spirits of departed friends.

The progress and enlightenment of mankind has changed even the appearance of the bloody sacrifice, and we have gathered here to-day to perform a sad but most appropriate duty, under a beautiful custom of this great lawmaking body, for the purpose of speaking in kindness and sorrow of a departed Member; to refresh our memories with copious drafts from the fountain of love and charity made by our departed colleague while living among us; to revive sweet thoughts and pleasant recollections; to place upon the altar of friendship a sprig of evergreen—a little forget-me-not.

When we met early in December for the last session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, knowing the frailty and uncertainty of life, we knew that ere this Congress expired by limitation on March 4 of the coming year there would be some of us whose voice would become silent, who would sink into that dreamless sleep which kisses down the eyelids still; whose form would be absent from this chamber; whose seat would be vacant; some who, at the beckoning of the pale messenger that never tires and never pities, would lay aside forever the burden and cares of this life and be piloted to the "misty dim regions of Weir," where hope is the creator and faith the defender, and within one week of the day we convened the soul of Hon. Samuel J. Tribble had appeared before its Maker.

On the 4th of December, Mr. Tribble was in his seat, well and happy, and joined his fellow Members in extending congratulations to those who had won reelection in November and genuine sympathy to the unfortunate ones whose terms must terminate March next. There was then no indication that the angel of death hovered so closely about our beloved colleague who had just been reelected to the Sixty-fifth Congress and during his sojourn in Washington as a Member of the House had become so popular with all of those with whom he came in contact.

Death is always sad, but it is peculiarly so when it strikes at a shining mark and cuts down and terminates a life but half spent at the moment the zenith of success and happiness has been attained, as it did in this instance. It is such cases which cause us to realize how mysterious life itself is, and how uncertain.

Death has since then again visited our body and summoned to his eternal home another able, valued, and popular Member, Hon. David E. Finley, of South Carolina. Georgia, with sorrow's pain still fresh in her breast and tears not yet dry from her own loss, extends loving sympathy to her sister Commonwealth across the Savannah in the sudden and sad bereavement which has come upon her.

which has come upon her.

Perhaps in all Georgia no man's life furnishes greater inspiration and incentive to hope for the young man of that State than does that of Mr. Tribrie. Born in a small hamlet, Samuel J. Tribrie, by hard work in the open air during his early boyhood days, laid the foundation for a strong constitution, which was strengthened in after life by freedom from any evil habits. He possessed three predominating and cardinal virtues—fidelity, sobriety, and industry—to which were added a fund of great common sense and a wonderful knowledge of human nature. Without influence and starting without means in early life, by hard work he overcame one obstacle after another and made for himself a pathway through life marked at every milestone by singular success, in each instance due almost entirely to his wonderful industry, strong integrity, absolute sobriety, and constant faithfulness and fidelity to trusts confided to him.

He laid hold of his opportunities, and nobly and grandly he rounded out a magnificent character. It is, after all, the character that we work out of our opportunities, whatever our ability, that marks the measure and the fullness and the grandeur of the man. He was true to his fellow men, true to his duties, true to his associates, true and loyal to his friends, a devoted husband and father. We are better for our association with him, and the world is better that he lived and labored.

To those who knew him best it seemed as if he had placed and constantly kept before him that great motto:

To thine own self be true, And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man.

And by closely and constantly adhering to this simple but hard rule of life he steadily moved on from a country boy without influence to honorable membership in the greatest body of law-makers for the greatest Nation in the world, and there made for makers for the greatest Nation in the world, and there made for himself a reputation for character, industry, ability, and courage that commanded and gave to him at all times the esteem and respect of his fellow Members, who are gathered to-day to pay tribute to him and his life's work, unfortunately terminated before he was 48 years of age and just in fullest prime.

Surely no man could hope to do more. He is sincerely mourned and sadly missed by the wide circle of friends and acquaintances he had made.

He, the young and strong, who cherished Noble longings for the strife, By the roadside fell and perished, Weary with the march of life.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, again the death angel has invaded the ranks of our membership, and he has taken away one of the bravest and best Members of this body.

Sam Tribble was my friend, and I was deeply grieved when heard that he was dead. Here he labored earnestly and faith-

He was an able and industrious Member of Congress, cheerful and enthusiastic in all his labors.

Just a little while ago, Mr. Speaker, we saw him engaging in the debates in this House and we heard him answering the rollcalls. But we can hear him speak no more-and he has answered his last roll-call here. In the midst of a busy and a useful life death touched him and he fell asleep. In the providence of God I believe that his name has been added to the list of the faithful over yonder, and that his splendid spirit is at rest forevermore. God bless and comfort his loved ones.

Mr. RUCKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, when Mr. TRIBBLE left Athens on Friday preceding the meeting of Congress in December he seemed full of health, happiness, and brilliancy, and there was nothing to indicate that we would have the services of today commemorative of his services in this House, and yet God in His providence has so ordered and he is profoundly mourned by the people of the eighth congressional district, into whose confidence and affection he had dug himself deeply. They loved him in life, they deplore him in death, and in him they knew they had a friend in whom there was no shadow of turning.

He went directly to the people and made himself known to them, learned their wants, was interested in what they desired, and served them faithfully. The eighth district of Georgia has had many illustrious Representatives. It has had upon this floor as its Representatives Howell Cobb, Benjamin H. Hill, Parks Bell, Emory Speer, William M. Howard, and many an illustrious person. It never had a Representative more true to the people, more watchful of their interests, more solicitous of their good than our lamented friend.

I first knew Mr. Tribble when he came as a student to the University of Georgia at Athens from the county of Franklina good old rock-ribbed Democratic county. He was graduated from the university with distinguished honors, succeeding here as everywhere else and commencing the practice of law at Athens with the Hon. Edward T. Brown, a great lawyer and a man enjoying an excellent practice.

Mr. Tribble made good from the beginning because he brought into the practice of his profession high intelligence, sterling integrity, untiring energy, and a faithfulness that characterized his every act.

After a few years he became a candidate for the office of solicitor general in the western circuit, and was elected. He gave equal rights to all and special privileges to none, the high and the low, the rich and the poor alike. There was no bitterness in his prosecutions but fairness and justice, and he left no wounds, because everyone recognized that fair play was the order of the day. He won the office by a tremendous vote over a strong field, for even this early the people had become to know him and to love him. After he retired from the office of solicitor general he continued the practice of law for a year or two and then announced his candidacy for Congress, in opposition to the Hon. William M. Howard, a long-time Member of this House who was known for his intelligence and high character and deemed invincible.

This race was in 1910 and one of the hottest that we ever had in the eighth congressional district—a district in which there has been many a hard fight, and as much fine campaigning as in any district in this great country. He faced every shape of power and influence and conquered all. He made good in Congress from the beginning. He never got a letter he did not answer promptly. He attended to every request made of him and got favorable action, and the people soon came to know that they had one at Washington who could be relied upon in all contingencies.

In the two succeeding elections he had no opposition but in 1916 he was opposed by Hon. Thomas J. Brown, of Elbert County, a gentleman of high standing and character, and he triumphed by a large majority, and at the time he was taken away it seemed that he had silenced opposition, that he had gotten out over the rough waters and out in the open sea where every prospect pleased.

In all his public career he had the support and help of his wife, possessed of every grace of mind and heart, of his lovely daughter and his noble son.

In his first campaign I believe he visited every home and every citizen in the eighth congressional district and he knew every voter personally. His style of campaigning was novel.

His services here have been beautifully portrayed by his fellow Members. They knew him, loved him, and are aware of the excellence of his service, of his interest in his constituents, and his unswerving integrity.

I never knew a man who had more of the elements that commend one to the love of those he comes in contact with than Sam Tribble. It was not hard for him to make friends with the people. He loved them and they loved him. I observe, Mr. Speaker, that whenever you love anybody you will find them loving you, and when they love you you may know you love them.

He had a kind heart and a generous disposition and he sought to find good in every person, and he found it. Speaking of kindness I desire here to produce some words spoken by Senator Benj. H. Hill, years ago in the United States Senate:

Mr. President, we are told that when God created the heavens and the earth on the third day He said, "Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth; and it was so." From that day to this it has been so. Yet all these seeds must be sown in their season and in a climate adapted to their nature, else they will perish. But, sir, there is seed which will bear fruit in all seasons and in every clime under the heavens. Plant it in the cold where the snows never melt, or in the heat where the frosts never come; scatter it on the naked rocks or in the most fertile soil; drop it in the water or on the land and everywhere, every seed will germinate and grow and reward the sower. It is tilled by a hand that never thes; it is watched by an eye that never sleeps; it is trained by a power that tempers all the elements to its healthiest maturity. That seed, sir, is kindness, and I have garnered its fruits when and where they were least expected.

I was standing at Heardmont, in Elbert County, Ga., near the banks of the Savannah River, when the train bearing the body home came upon the long bridge that spans the mighty river into Elbert County, Ga., and as the train crossed that mighty stream there was a low mournful shriek of the whistle, and I felt that the engineer driving the train was thinking of the dear dead he was carrying home, and he evidenced it by that mournful blast, and it came home to me, SAM TRIBBLE is coming home, coming into Elbert County, which was the storm center of his first race—coming home to be laid away in the beautiful cemetery at Athens, which overlooks the Oconee River, his last resting place. There never was a more beautiful cemetery. There never was interred in its soil a nobler Georgian. Home—a place dear in life, precious in death-more genuine pleasure therein to be found than can be found in all the splendors and glories of the earth. Those at home are the father, mother, the wife, the children, the grandchildren, dear relatives. They never go back on us and love us to the end. They will never turn their backs on us.

And, Mr. Speaker, I remember with so much pleasure this fact, that Mr. TRIBBLE not only professed the Christian religion but he practiced it, which is a far better thing.

see him now, when on Sabbath evenings when at home, he would go into East Athens, a part of the city lived in by Godfearing men and women, and he visited the Sunday schools and singing schools. Nothing interested him more than this work, and he brought sunshine and happiness whenever he entered the door. What a sweet reflection this is.

I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live," and whosoever liveth and believeth shall never die.

Life's fitful fever ended, he sleeps well, and may he renew his wasted strength and refresh his fatigued faculties in the balmy breezes of Heaven's happy home. May a kind Providence rest his mighty soul in eternal peace.

SENATE.

Monday, February 5, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer

O God, our Father in heaven, we feel deeply our dependence upon Thee and upon Thy kind providence. We know not what a day may bring forth. In the midst of life we are in death. Guide us, we pray Thee, and guide all the affairs of our great country, that we may have life, and that we may have it more abundantly. Bless Thy servant, the President of the United States, his Cabinet, the Members of Congress, and all who are in positions of authority that they may have wisdom and grace to guide us through these perilous times in a safe way, and that the blessings of peace may speedily come to all the world. We ask it all in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, February 2, 1917, when, on request of Mr. James and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 3d instant, a translation of the note addressed to him on January 31, 1917, by the German ambassador at Washington, together with translations of the two memoranda which accompanied it. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The matter referred to is as follows:

To the Senate:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution adopted by the Senate on February 3, 1917, requesting the Secretary of State, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate a correct copy of the message and accompanying memoranda from the Imperial German Government advising of the resumption of submarine warfare against neutral and other countries, of date February, 1917, the undersigned the Secretary of State has the honor to transmit to the Senate herewith a translation of the note addressed to him on January 31, 1917, by the German ambassador at Washington, together with translations of the two memoranda which accompanied it.

These appear to be the documents called for by the Senate resolution.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 3, 1917.

(File No. 763.72/3179.)

THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE. [Translation.]

GERMAN EMBASSY, Washington, January 31, 1917.

Washington, January 31, 1917.

Mr. Secretary of State: Your Excellency were good enough to transmit to the Imperial Government a copy of the message which the President of the United States of America addressed to the Senate on the 22d instant. The Imperial Government has given it the earnest consideration which the President's statements deserve, inspired as they are by a deep sentiment of responsibility. It is highly gratifying to the Imperial Government to ascertain that the main tendencies of this important statement correspond largely to the desires and principles professed by Germany. These principles especially include self-government and equality of rights for all nations. Germany would be sincerely glad if in recognition of this principle countries like Ireland and India, which do not enjoy the benefits of political independence, should now obtain their freedom. The German people also repudiate all alliances which serve to force the countries into a competition for might and to involve them in a net of selfish intrigues. On the other hand, Germany will gladly cooperate in all efforts to prevent future wars. The freedom of the seas, being a preliminary condition of the free existence of nations and the peaceful intercourse between them as well as the open door for the commerce of all nations, has always formed part of the leading principles of Germany's political program. All the more the Imperial Government regrets that the attitude of her enemies who are so entirely opposed to peace makes it impossible for the world at present to bring about the realization of these lofty ideals. Germany and her alies were ready to enter now into a discussion of peace and had set of their peoples. Their aims, as has been expressly stated in the read of December 12, 1916, were not directed toward the destruction or annihilation of their enemies and were, according to their conviction, perfectly compatible with the rights of the other nations. As to Belgium, for which such warm and cordial sympathy is felt in the United States, the chancellor had declared only a few weeks previously that its annexation had never formed part of Germany's intentions. The peace to be set to be such that the sum was to provide for such conditions in that country, which such earning and the such as the such as [Inclosure 1.] MEMORANDUM.

After bluntly refusing Germany's peace offer the entente powers, stated in their note addressed to the American Government, that they are determined to continue the war in order to deprive Germany of German Provinces in the west and the east, to destroy Austria-Hungary, and to annihilate Turkey. In waging war with such aims, the entente allies are violating all rules of international law, as they prevent the legitimate trade of neutrals with the central powers, and of the neutrals among themselves: Germany has, so far, not made unrestricted use of the weapon which she possesses in her submarines. Since the entente powers, however, have made it impossible to come to an understanding based upon equality of rights of all nations, as proposed by the central powers and have instead declared only such a peace to be possible, which shall be dictated by the entente allies and shall result in the destruction and humiliation of the central powers, Germany is unable further to forego the full use of her submarines. The Imperial Government, therefore does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the entente allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the central powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intentions of the entente allies give back to Germany the freedom of the action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc. All ships met within that zone will be sunk.

The Imperial Government is confident that this measure will result in a speedy termination of the United States has so much at heart. Like the Government of th

Imperial Government hopes all the more for such an understanding of her position, as the neutrals have under the pressure of the entente powers, suffered great losses, being forced by them either to give up their entire trade or to limit it according to conditions arbitrarily determined by German's enemies in violation of international law.

MEMORANDUM.

From February 1, 1917, all sea traffic will be stopped with every available weapon and without further notice in the following blockade zones around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean:

In the north: The zone is confined by a line at a distance of 20 sea miles along the Dutch coast to Terschelling Fire Ship, the degree of longitude from Terschelling Fire Ship to Udsire, a line from there across the point 62° north 0° longitude to 62° north 5° west, farther to a point 3 sea miles south of the southern point of the Farce Islands, from there across point 62° north 10° west to 61° north 15° west, farther to 43° north, 15° west, then 50° north 20° west to 47° north 20° west, farther to 43° north, 15° west, then along the degree of latitude 43° north to 20 sea miles from Cape Finisterre and at a distance of 20 sea miles along the north coast of Spain to the French boundary.

In the south: The Mediterranean.

For neutral ships remains open: The sea west of the line Point del'Espiquette to 38° 20° north and 6° east, also north and west of a zone 61 sea miles wide along the north African coast, beginning at 2° longitude west. For the connection of this sea zone with Greece there is provided a zone of a width of 20 sea miles north and east of the following line: Thirty-eight degrees north and 6° east to 38° north and 10° east to 33° north and 11° 30° east to 34° north and 11° 30° east to 34° north and 12° 30′ east.

From there leads a zone 20 sea miles wide west of 22° 30′ eastern longitude into Greek territorial waters.

Neutral ships navigating these blockade zones do so at their own risk. Although care has been taken that neutral ships which are on their way toward ports of the blockade zones on February 1, 1917, and have come in the vicinity of the latter, will be spared during a sificiently long period it is strongly advised to warn them with all available means in order to cause their return.

Neutral ships which on February 1 are in ports of the blockade zon

ANNUAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS (H. DOC. NO. 2027).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year ended December 31, 1916, which was referred to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed, FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

Annie K. Squier, widow (remarried) of Samuel Ingraham, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 704); and Arthur E. Colgate, administrator of the estate of Clinton G. Colgate, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 705).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram from the Legislature of South Dakota, transmitting a copy of a concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature pledging the support of the people of that State to the President and the Congress in the present crisis, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PIERRE, S. DAK., February 4, 1917.

The President of the Senate, Washington, D. C. Concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of South Dakota (the Senate concurring), That we, the Legislative Assembly representing the people of the State of South Dakota, do in this crisis hereby pledge our support to the President and Congress of the United States in any stand they may take to defend and protect the honor and dignity of our Nation and to preserve to our citizens their rights and privilege.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forthwith messaged by wire by the secretary of thate to the President of the United States and to the presiding officer of each House of the National FRANK M. ROOD, Secretary of South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram, in the nature of a petition, from the Bible class of the First Presbyterian Church of Pittston, Pa., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, remonstrating against the literacy test in the immigration bill, commending the President for his veto of that bill, and praying that Congress eliminate the literacy clause from the measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a petition, from the executive council of the New York State Federation of Labor, indorsing the President's action in severing diplomatic relations with Germany and pledging their support, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have received a number of telegrams from mutual life insurance companies and others in my State protesting against the passage of the pending emergency revenue bill in its present form, and asking an opportunity to be heard.

I have one from H. B. Coleman, of Kalamazoo, Mich., which is fairly indicative of the others, and I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and the one indicated ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KALAMAZOO, MICH., January 30, 1917.

WM. ALDEN SMITH, Washington, D. C .:

In behalf of the mutual life insurance companies I desire to enter a protest against the passage of the Federal emergency-revenue measure in its present form. I regard it as being unfair and unjust to them, and the reasons for this conclusion will be placed before you later. In the meantime, please use your endeavors to secure a fair hearing from the companies on this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have also telegrams from the Michigan Manufacturers' Association protesting against the passage of the revenue bill in that it discriminates against manufacturers and other business associations.

I present a protest from Hon. Cornelius Van Loo, one of the prominent citizens of Michigan, and if I may be indulged for a moment I will read a sentence or two from this protest. It comes from Zeeland, Mich., and is addressed to myself.

We note there is a Federal revenue bill now pending which carries a provision for taxing all profits of a corporation in excess of 8 per cent on their capital. We do not understand whether this is to take the place of the income tax we now have to pay or is in addition thereto. If it takes the place of it, then it is to be preferred, if the rate be not excessive. If we are correctly informed, that rate is to be 8 per cent, which would be outrageous. Under the present income tax law we pay on all profits or income, while if a man gets his income from another source than corporate earnings he has, if married, $4,000 exempt, otherwise $3.000. By consequence, if our business were not corporate but I owned it alone I would have $4,000 exempt, while now we pay on the whole. How does that work? We have 35 stockholders, many poor people, for small amounts only. They have to stand their share, small, it is true, but the principle is vicious. For instance, Mrs. Gertrude Vereeke holds 33 shares which her dead Rusband left her. What she requires to live beyond the income from this she has to earn by scrubbing and washing. Yet she must help pay this income tax. If anyone can make out that that is right, I should like to hear the argument. We also are now required to pay a tax on stock, if above the value of $99,000. That is a tax—and it must be paid in advance—for the privilege of doing business, for the privilege of working so one can earn his living. The idea seems to be, pay a tax or you have no right to live, to exist. I do not see what we are coming to, and when the money is raised we waste it catching (not catching) Villa and not getting salute of 21 guns to restore the honer of our flag. O Statesmanship, what folly and nonsense and oppression are committed in thy name.

I am reading that as a fair sample of protests which come to

I am reading that as a fair sample of protests which come to me daily and which emphasize the utter lack of sympathy of the people with this proposed taxation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that to-morrow at 10 o'clock we will hear the insurance people in the office of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I thank the Senator. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I take it for granted that the general representatives of the insurance companies will speak for all

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Subcommittee on Finance has in charge the business of insurance, and there is question as to what is really the desire of the insurance companies. I understand they do not object to paying on their profits, but they do not wish to be taxed on the trust funds of their policyholders.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Georgia. I hope they are giving careful thought to that phase of this question,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We are, and a subcommittee consisting of three Democrats will sit to-morrow and hear them. Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Committee on Education and Labor will hear them? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I said in the office of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be three members of the majority of the Finance Committee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three members of the majority of the Finance Committee will sit to-morrow morning and hear them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a telegram, in the nature of a petition, from the Board of Commerce, of Marshall, Mich., praying for an appropriation for the erection of a new postoffice building in that city, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as Senate concurrent resolution 12.

Senate concurrent resolution 12.

Whereas the granting of suffrage to the women of Kansas has resulted beneficially to the State and has been a great advantage to the men and women of Kansas and is a helpful influence in all public affairs and legislation; and

Whereas the withholding of the right to vote from women of other States is an injustice and deprives the Nation of the direct participation in the Government of a large part of the people: Be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas (the House of Representatives concurring therein). That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kansas are hereby requested to vote in favor of the Susan B. Anthony amendment, which seeks to terminate the discrimination against women and to urge upon Congress a submission of that amendment to the States for ratification.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the States of Kansas, to be presented by them to the Congress of the United States.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate and passed that body January 24, 1917.

ABTHUR CAPPER, Governor.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, J. T. Botkin, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of house concurrent resolution No. 15, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed my official seal.

House concurrent resolution 15.

Whereas the southwestern portion of the State of Kansas is located in what is known as the semiarid belt at the foot of the Rocky Mountains; and
Whereas the Cimarron River flows through this portion of the State of Kansas; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has made surveys for reservoir sites for the purpose of reclaiming the semiarid belt at the foot of the Rocky Mountains: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas (the Senate concurring therein):

(the Senate concurring therein):

Section 1. That the Legislature of the State of Kansas request the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress of the United States to erect a plant on the highest general level near the west line of the State of Kansas, on the Cimarron River, for the purpose of reclaiming the semi-arid portions of southwest Kansas by means of subirrigation.

Sec. 2. That the secretary of state be directed to forward to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, to the Vice President, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United State a copy of this resolution, and that a copy be also forwarded by the secretary of state to each Representative and Senator of the State of Kansas in the Congress of the United States.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house and passed that body January 23, 1917.

Mr. JONES. I have also a telegram here from Mr. J. W. Maxwell, of Seattle, Wash., pointing out reasons for the establishment of a thirteenth Federal reserve bank at Seattle. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., February 3, 1917.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES, Washington, D. C.:

Senator Wesley L. Jones,

Washington, D. C.:

Your attention has no doubt been called to the disturbance among some of our banking institutions in Seattle and surrounding neighborhood. The clearing house association is of the opinion the matter is now entirely under control, as everything is normal. This, however, proves a contention which we have made since the passage of the Federal reserve act, and that is to the effect that Seattle, or rather the Pacific Northwest, is at too great a distance from any of the Federal reserve banks to do us any good in case of emergency. This assertion has proved itself without a question of doubt within the last week. While the Federal reserve officers at San Francisco were ready and willing to do everything they could, it was impossible to take advantage of anything on account of the distance. We have persistently requested that a branch be located in Seattle on account of the time it naturally takes to do business between Seattle and San Francisco. Reply to a letter written here can not be had for about five or six days. This would also be the same condition if Seattle was connected with the Federal reserve bank at Minneapolis. We fully realize that the reason a bank was not established in Seattle was for the fact that the capital necessary under the present act could not be obtained. While the business of this country may not be as voluminous as other parts, it does not seem right that we who contribute everything to the Federal reserve act that the banks do in other parts of the country should not have the quick protection which it affords in establishing the banks. Kansas City and St. Louis were each given one, and they are within a short distance of each other, while this part of the country is left entirely to itself. Is it not possible for Congress to amend the Federal reserve act creating another Federal reserve bank, which should be called No. 13, and the same located in Seattle? With the fast growing shipping interests and the needs of Alaska, as well as the busine

Mr. NORRIS. I have here a resolution passed by the Senate of the Nebraska Legislature, memorializing Congress on the subject of the tax levied by the Federal Government on the manufacture and sale of liquor. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary may read the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas under existing Federal laws any person engaged in the manufacture or sale of malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors is required to pay a tax to the Federal Government; and

Whereas the Federal statute levying such tax is purely a revenue measure, and was enacted neither to encourage nor discourage the sale of such liquors, nor to embarrass or interfere with the police regulations of the several States in respect to such liquors; and

Whereas it is a matter of common knowledge that comparatively few violators of such police regulations take the hazard of engaging in the manufacture or sale of such liquors without payment of the tax levied by the Federal Government, and a knowledge of those who had paid such tax to the Federal Government would be of great value to those charged with the duty of enforcing our State police regulations in respect to such liquors: Therefore

Resolved—

Resolved—

I. That we respectfully memorialize Congress to amend said revenue law by adding thereto the requirement that the collectors of such revenue be required to mail the governors of the several States and Territories each month a list showing the name and address of each person in the respective States who has paid such tax for the then current fiscal year.

II. That a copy hereof be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. In connection with the memorial of the Senate of the Nebraska Legislature, which I have just presented, I desire to have printed in the RECORD section 3240 of the Revised Statutes as amended and approved June 21, 1906. To a great extent I think the request contained in the memorial has been complied with, inasmuch as the existing law provides, to a certain extent at least, for the thing asked for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[Public, No. 263.]

[Public, No. 263.]

An act to amend the internal-revenue laws so as to provide for furnishing certified copies of certain records.

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and hereby is, amended in section 3240 so as to read:

"Sec. 3240. Each collector of internal revenue shall, under regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, place and keep conspicuously in his office, for public inspection, an alphabetical list of the names of all persons who shall have paid special taxes within his district, and shall state thereon the time, place, and business for which such special taxes have been paid, and upon application of any prosecuting officer of any State, county, or municipality he shall furnish a certified copy thereof, as of a public record, for which a fee of $1 for each 100 words or fraction thereof in the copy or copies so requested may be charged."

Justice and peace should be the ruling American principle.

Mr. THOMPSON. ear to the reports of alleged "barbarisms" pretendedly committed by Germany in deporting laboring men of Belgium to Germany that they may earn an honest living by work, which, due to England's restrictions on Belgium's trade was made impossible by them at home, this report of barbarisms of the Germans being merely a pretext to further the ends of those that circulate them. And, finally, that we ask our Government to warn all Americans not to travel or take passage on afmed merchantmen of the warring nations, nor on ships carrying munitions for them,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Proposed Federal emergency revenue measure, if it applies to life insurance companies, will lay an unfair tax on the thrift of over 30,000,000 policyholders of this country, whose policies are already too heavily taxed. They are already more heavily taxed than the policies of war-ridden England, France, and Germany, where, in spite of the terrible need of money for the Government, the fact is recognized that men should be encouraged to insure their lives, and thus at death have the Commonwealth relieved of the burdens of caring for the families. Every penny of taxes levied on life insurance companies is paid by policyholders in increased cost of protection. We hope you will use your influence to have life insurance companies excepted from the provision of this proposed law.

THE PIONEER LIFE INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a telegram in the nature of a petition.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., February 3, 1917.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON, Washington, D. C.:

The Johnston Bird Club at its last meeting unanimously adopted a resolution asking you to support Senate bill No. 7858, known as the migratory-bird treaty act. We are doing all we can to protect bird life in this State.

ROBERT LEE SELL, President.

Mr. CHILTON. I have received a telegram from Harry Cutler, chairman of the commission on immigration, urging support of the President's veto of the Burnett immigration bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUFFALO, N. Y., February 4, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHILTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:
The delegates of district No. 1, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, in convention assembled, earnestly urge you to sustain the President's veto of the Burnett immigration bill. It is not a test of character and is un-American. While it bars many desirable immigrants, it does not prevent the admission of undesirables.

HARRY CUTLER, Chairman Commission on Immigration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to present three separate joint memorials addressed to the Congress of the United States by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The joint memorials were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 11.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America:

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation designed to encourage the development of the water-power resources of the Nation; and Whereas the State of Oregon and other Western States are blessed with bountiful natural resources, largely undeveloped, among which is water power; and Whereas, although water power in said States is available in abundance, only a very small percentage has been developed; and Whereas numerous water-power sites of large commercial possibilities are located in the public domain or in navigable streams; and Whereas existing Federal laws and regulations are so inadequate and restrictive that development of water power in the public domain and in navigable streams has practically ceased; and Whereas electrical power at a cost to justify its use in the conversion of our natural resources into finished, marketable products, in the reclamation of lands at present unproductive, and in the transformation of the motive power of rail transportation is wholly dependent upon the economical production of power on a large scale; and Whereas the essence of conservation is intelligent and economical utilization of natural resources to serve the economic necessities and desires of our people, and to conserve those natural resources that are exhaustible; and
Whereas the use of exhaustible resource as water power can be used results in economic waste, which is indefensible when it can be civil ated; and
Whereas since legislation necessary to encourage development of water power has been a constant subject of study, investigation, and discussion for years, it is the judgment of your memorialists that the time is at hand for action: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Oregon, in twenty-ninth session assembled, respectifuly urges upon the Congress of the cussion for years, it is the judgment of your memorialists that the time is at hand for action: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Oregon, in twenty-ninth session assembled, respectfully urges upon the Congress of the United States the absolute and urgent necessity of the development of water power in order that natural resources may be utilized to create new wealth by the settlement of lands, the development of agriculture, the establishment of manufactures of varied nature, and the economy and comfort of rail facilities of transportation may be enhanced, the means of transportation enlarged and made cheaper and traffic congestion relieved by opening to navigation waterways incapable of use because of natural obstructions removable by water-power development in navigable streams, and adequate national defense may be alded, all of which will contribute to the increase and diversification of agriculture, commerce, and industry, and as a consequence promote economic security; and respectfully petitions that Congress at its present session enact legislation that will encourage investment in the development of these resources, consistent with adequate guaranties for the protection and safeguard of the public interest; and be it further

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, however, do not indorse any particular bill now pending before the Congress of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to make every effort to carry out the purposes of the foregoing memorial: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house and attested by the chief clerks of the two houses, be forthwith forwarded to each of Oregon's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Senate joint memorial 13.

o the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a large portion of the State of Oregon is infested with coyotes and other predatory animals and the said predatory animals at all times destroy property of the citizens of Oregon and destroy the wild game and the birds of the State of Oregon; and

Whereas at this time the said animals are affected with rabies and on this account are unusually dangerous and are spreading rabies and by this means causing death among the live stock of all kinds and at times menacing life of the citizens of the State of Oregon and of other Western States; and

Whereas the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture has been aiding the citizens of the State of Oregon and other Western States in the eradication of rabies and in extermination of predatory animals referred to and have been very successful in the campaign which they have organized, and are able to carry out the said campaign more effectually than the several States have been able to do; and

Whereas the State of Oregon is financially unable to carry on this program for the eradication of rables in an adequate manner and it is essential that the Biological Survey continue its investigation and efforts in order that the said predatory animals may be exterminated and the money already expended may not be wholly lost: Therefore be it

Besolved by the Senate of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to appropriate at an early date, by special appropriation, adequate funds for the use of the Bureau of Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture in its campaign to prevent the spread of rables and to cradicate rables and exterminate wild predatory animals; be it further

Resolved, That after concurrence of the house of representatives herein the chief clerk of the senate shall transmit copies of this memorial to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oregon and to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, several commercial organizations in the country have recently passed resolutions protesting against the passage of the bill providing for a tax on excess earnings of corporations. I have received a few protests from corporations in my State against the enactment of that legislation, but this morning I have a letter from the manager of the Liberty Light & Power Co., of Richmond, Ind., a corporation with extensive interests in my State, which breathes such a patriotic spirit that I desire to have it read, in order that it may appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

RICHMOND, IND., January 31, 1917.

Hon. John W. Kern, United States Senator.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the House bill to place a tax of 8 per cent on all excess earnings of $5,000 or more, our company is in the class that would come under this tax, and we wish to inform you that we will gladly do our part. Indiana is willing to pay her share.

With best regards, we remain.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 358) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in March, 1917, and so forth, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.
The joint resolution was read, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. From the Committee on Appropria-tions I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the reunion of the Confederate Veterans' Association, to be held in the District of Columbia in the year 1917, and for other purposes incident to said encampment, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the joint resolution be reported. The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the joint resolution be reported.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make such special regulations for the occasion of the reunion of the Confederate Veterans' Association, which will take place in the District of Columbia in the year 1917, as they shall deem advisable for the preservation of public order and the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior the protection of the daily newspapers of the District of Columbia and no penalty prescribed for the violation of such regulations shall be enforced until the days after such publication; and said commissioners are authorized and directed to establish a special schedule of fares applicable to public conveyances in said District during the period aforesaid. Any schedule of fares shall, upon conviction thereof in the police court of the said District, be liable for such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, and in default of payment of such fine imprisonment in the workhouse or jail of said District for not longer than 60 days. This resolution shall take effect immediately upon its approval, and the sum of $11,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any mes of the District of rollowing and provisions of section 1 of this joint resolution, $1,000 of which shall be available for the construction, maintenance, and operation of public-comfort stations and information booths, under the direction of a section 1 of the provisions of section 1 of this joint resolution, $1,000 of which shall be available for the construction and population of the confederate Vetera such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands and platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said citizens' executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the SuperIntendent of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia.

Sec. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the chairman of the medical department of the citizens' executive committee for said reunion, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of said reunion, such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture, and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment: Provided, That the said chairman, or his successor in said office, shall indemnify the War Department for any loss to such hospital tents and appliances as aforesaid not necessarily incident to such use.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I observe that in that joint

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I observe that in that joint resolution the very proper provision is incorporated that the charges for transportation shall be fixed by schedule by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as I remember it. I will suggest to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Smith], who is taking great interest in the presidential inaugural ceremonies as well as in the pending matter, that I hope in some resolution or bill some authority will be given to some one in the District of Columbia to fix the charges for transportation during the inaugural ceremonies, because I know from knowledge that on some former occasions there have been most exorbitant and outrageous charges imposed upon the people who have come to Washington to attend the inauguration. I think it would be a very commendable thing to provide some such restriction.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think it is a very good suggestion which the Senator from New Hampshire makes, and the probabilities are that there will be some such regulation made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland subsequently said: For the information of the Senator from New Hampshire and others, I wish to say that the fixing of fares for public conveyances at the inaugural ceremonies was included in the joint resolution I introduced, and which was reported by me and passed a few days ago, providing for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. It was not necessary to have it appear in the joint resolution to-day, as it had already been incorporated.

DOCUMENTS RELATIVE TO GEN. WASHINGTON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 297, transferring certain papers relating to the death of Gen. Washington from the files of the Senate to the custody of the Librarian of Congress, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

And agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to transfer to the custody of the Librarian of Congress the following documents, which are now in the files of the Senate, namely:

The message of President John Adams, December 19, 1799;
Letter of Tobias Lear to the President, December 15, 1799;
Address of the Senate to the President, December 23, 1799, and the answer of the President, December 23, 1799;
Address of the House to the President, and his answer, December 19, 1799; Message of the President, January 8, 1800; and
A letter of Martha Washington to the President, December 31, 1799;
All pertaining to the death of Gen. Washington.

PORTRAIT OF JOSEPH HENRY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 334, authorizing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to transfer the portrait of Joseph Henry from the office of the Sergeant at Arms to the Smithsonian Institution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Smithsonian Institution the portrait of Joseph Heary, the first Secretary of that Institution, now hanging in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

DAUGHTERS OF 1812.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 230) authorizing the National Society, United States Daughters of 1812, to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual reports to the secretary thereof, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 9533, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for to-night at 8 o'clock

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the morning business first be completed. I have been waiting for some time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STAMFORD, CONN.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (8, 8062) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the enlargement of the site of the public building at Stamford Conn. and I ask unanimous consent for building at Stamford, Conn., and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandeger] to the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which was read, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That not exceeding $5,000 of the unexpended balance of appropriation beretofore made for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a post-office building at Stamford, Conn., be, and the same is hereby, made available for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such land as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary for the enlargement of said site so as to provide better accommodations for the transaction of the postal business.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask permission at this point to have inserted in the RECORD a letter received from the ecretary of the Treasury in relation to the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 26, 1917.

Hon. Frank B. Brandeger, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: An informal message from the Post Office Department to-day stated that you had inquired whether that department would take the initiative in obtaining an authorization from Congress for the enlargement of the Federal building site at Stamford, Conn., and that that department had stated it was a matter for the Treasury Department's attention.

The custodian of the Federal building had already brought to this department's attention the necessity for additional land, and the Comptroller of the Treasury had been asked whether existing legislation would permit the enlargement of the site. The comptroller has just decided that additional legislation is necessary to authorize the department to buy more land, notwithstanding there remains of the limit of cost for said building sufficient money to pay for such enlargement if authorized.

From the representations of the custodian it is apparent that more land should be acquired to provide properly for the transaction of the postal business. This department, therefore, would be gratified if you would undertake to obtain the required legislative authority. A draft of what would probably be sufficient is inclosed.

Respectfully,

B. R. Newton,

B. R. NEWTON, Assistant Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 30, 1917.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: Receipt is acknowledged, by reference from the Post Office Department, of certain correspondence had with you relative to the matter of the acquisition of additional land adjacent to the Federal building site at Stamford, Conn.

A draft of bill providing for the above was forwarded to you by this department the 26th instant, together with the views of the department regarding this matter.

The correspondence is returned herewith as requested.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. Newton.

B. R. NEWTON, Assistant Secretary.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL, Washington, January 26, 1917.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE, United States Senate.

Mx Dear Senator: I am to-day in receipt of the papers forwarded to this bureau by you relative to the advisability of acquiring additional land adjacent to the Federal building at Stamford, Conn. As this matter is under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department, I have taken the liberty of forwarding them to that department, with the request that they be returned to you after they have served their request that they be recalled upon for a full report regarding the purpose.

The postmaster has been called upon for a full report regarding the project, and when it is received an appropriate recommendation will be submitted to the Treasury Department.

J. C. Koons,

Very truly, yours,

First Assistant Postmaster General.

Be it enacted, etc., That not exceeding $5,000 of the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a post-office building at Stamford, Conn., be, and the same is hereby, made available for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such land as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary for the enlargement of said site so as to provide better accommodations for the transaction of the postal business.

BATTLE FIELD OF GUILFORD COURTHOUSE.

Mr. DU PONT. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park on the battle field of Guilford Courthouse. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope unanimous consent will be given. The committee has stricken out the appropria-The battle field of Guilford Courthouse, of course, is historic ground. The bill passed the House unanimously after a speech had been made by "Uncle Joe." Cannon, who was born near this battle ground. It is one of the most historic spots in America. Some 40 or 50 patriotic citizens of North Carolina have established this park at their own expense, built roads, and beautified it. There are many monuments there now, and all that is asked is that the Government take over the park and protect it. I hope there will be no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand that the Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. DU PONT. I have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill comes with a unanim The bill comes with a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me ask the Senator whether it has been the policy of the Government to take over such battle fields generally? Mr. OVERMAN. The Government has taken over some. The Gettysburg battle field has been taken over, and there are many others which also have been taken over, but whether the Government has taken over battle grounds generally I do not know. The Battle of Guilford Courthouse is historic and is recognized now as having been the turning point in the Revolutionary War. As I have stated, a number of patriotic citizens of North Carolina have made a park of this place. It only embraces 125 acres of ground, and a number of monuments are already erected

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from New York that Congress has already appropriated a handsome sum for an equestrian statue of Gen. Greene, which has been erected on the battle field at Guilford Courthouse. This battle field is of special importance and interest, as it was the scene of some of the hardest fighting during the Revolutionary War. I think it would be a highly proper thing to pass this bill. It only provides for putting the ground under the care of the Secretary of War and allowing him to take charge of it. There is no appropriation attached to the bill as amended by the Senate Military Committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I know it is not a pleasant thing to call attention to a bill of this sort in a hostile manner. I realize, of course, the tremendous importance of the contest that occurred upon this ground, and I for one appreciate the generosity of the people of that community who have pur-chased the land and now offer it to the Government free of

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to inform the Senator that this tract was purchased about 30 years ago. They have furnished the money for it, built roads through it, beautified it, and there are now a large number of monuments there. Among them are two monuments which the Government erected—a beautiful monument to Gen. Greene and a monument to Gen. Nash, who was killed at Germantown, with which the Senator is very familiar. The Government has an interest in it, and all we want to do is for the Government to have a caretaker there to look There is scarcely any money at all involved in it. It is only 125 acres of land; and, as I say, the Government already has this great monument there to Gen. Greene, one of the most beautiful monuments in the country; also one to Gen. Nash and one to Gen. Davidson, who fell at Cowans Ford. I think the Government has such an interest in the battle field that it ought to take it over, and I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand that these monuments are already erected?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; they are already erected and paid for.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are the monuments now in the care of the Federal Government?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they are not. That is what I think we ought to do—have a caretaker there to look after them and superintend the grounds. There is no appropriation asked for in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course that will appear later.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose that is provided for now in the general fund for the maintenance of parks, and so forth. It does not require an appropriation. It may require an appropriation of $1,000 or $2,000, or something like that, I do not know; but this bill does not provide for any, because the Secretary of War has informed the committee that he can take it over. These great monuments there, as I say, to Gen. Greene and Gen. Nash, ought to be cared for by this great Government. We have spent the money there; the monuments are all finished, and have been unveiled and dedicated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in view of the fact. that the Federal Government has already assisted in the erection of monuments upon this battle field, and as I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that they are now in charge of the Federal Government, I shall not press the objection at this time to the proposition that the Government shall take over the battle field; but I do desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina and other Senators who may be interested-

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want to say that the Federal Government now has charge of them. The Senator misunder-stood me. I said that the Federal Government has erected the monuments I mentioned, and a few patriotic gentlemen have charge of this tract now, and they want to dedicate it to the Government. Besides these monuments there are various pri-vate ones. It is a great place for having Fourth of July and other patriotic celebrations. I think the Federal Government is interested in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if all these monuments were authorized and paid for by the General Government?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not one of them, except, as I have stated, those to Gens. Greene, Nash, and Davidson. All others were paid for at private expense.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that if some of us who think that Stark's monument ought to be on every battle field of the Revolution should take a notion to have his monument there, we would have an opportunity?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to see a monument there to the great man from Delaware who was the hero of that great battle; and from Rhode Island there was Gen. Greene, and others from Virginia and Maryland did some great work there. I should like to see some monuments erected there by other States; but we are not asking for that at present.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New York that the people of Delaware are very deeply interested in this battle field.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Delaware. Mr. DU PONT. In the Revolutionary War the Continental troops from the State of Delaware immortalized themselves on that battle field.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, before withdrawing the objection, I simply desire to call the attention of Senators who are interested in this matter to the fact that it will be found, as years go by, that there are many, many battle fields all over the United States which will suddenly acquire tremendous importance, and an effort will be made, very naturally, and perhaps very properly, to have the Federal Government take them over.

My attention has been called to this prospect very recently by reason of the fact that there are at least two very large and important communities in the State of New York who purpose requesting the Federal Government to take over battle fields. One is the battle field of Oriskany, on the Mohawk River, at which there was fought during the War of the Revolution a contest certainly of equal importance with that fought at Guilford Courthouse, and probably more so. Another project has been brought to my attention for the Federal Government to take over a battle field near the city of Elmira, in the southern portion of the State of New York; and I have no doubt that if the Federal Government once embarks upon the policy of taking over battle fields upon which it is alleged that contests of great and farreaching importance were waged, there will be no end to it.

I am in complete sympathy, of course, with the generous purpose expressed by the Senator from North Carolina and the people of that community who have done so much to erect permanent memorials upon that particular battle field; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that propositions of this sort are not exactly in the same class as that involved at Gettysburg or at Chattanooga, which were made great national cemeteries and around which have grown up great memorials of a strictly national character.

In view of the fact that, as the Senator from North Carolina says, the Federal Government has already erected one monument upon this particular battle field, I shall not press an objection at this time to this bill. I shall, however, upon the general policy of acquiring battle fields, insist that the Senate understand the prospect.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the suggestions made by other Senators, I desire also to remind the Senate that there are a number of battle fields in Ohio in which patriotic societies are interested. I am referring to the battles with the Indians; but that was not what I rose to speak about. At the present time there is no suitable monument erected to the memory of the first President Harrison. I have a bill for this purpose pending now before the Senate, and at the proper time I hope to ask for a suitable appropriation to erect a monument to his memory. If these matters are to be taken up at this particular time or in the near future, I hope that we shall not forget the first President Harrison.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 5, after line 5, to strike out sections 4 and 5, as follows:

out sections 4 and 5, as follows:

Sec. 4. That the affairs of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park shall, subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War, be in charge of three commissioners, to be appointed by him, one of whom shall be a resident of Guilford County, State of North Carolina; such resident commissioner shall be chairman of the board so appointed and shall also act as secretary of the commission. Said commissioners shall have an office in the city of Greensboro, State of North Carolina, and shall be paid such compensation as the Secretary of War shall deem reasonable and just, not to exceed, however, $2,000 per annum for the resident commissioners and $500 each per annum for the nonresident commissioners.

Sec. 5. That it shall be the duty of the commission named in the preceding section, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to open or repair such roads as may be necessary to the purposes of the park, and to ascertain and mark with historical tablets or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may determine, all lines of battle of the troops engaged in the Battle of Guilford Courthouse and other historical points of interest pertaining to the battle within the park or its vicinity; and the said commission in establishing this military park shall also have authority, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to employ such labor and services and to obtain such supplies and material as may be necessary to the establishment of said park, under such regulations as he may consider best for the interest of the Government, and the Secretary of War shall make and enforce all needed regulations for the care of the park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 9, to insert as a new section the following:

a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That the affairs of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park shall be subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War, and it shall be the duty of the War Department, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to open or repair such roads as may be necessary to the purposes of the park and to ascertain and mark with historical tablets or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may determine, all lines of battle of the troops engaged in the Battle of Guilford Courthouse and other historical points of interest pertaining to the battle within the park or its vicinity; and the Secretary of War, in establishing this military park, is authorized to employ such labor and services and to obtain such supplies and material as may be necessary to the establishment of said park; under such regulations as he may consider best for the interest of the Government, and the Secretary of War shall make and enforce all needed regulations for the care of the park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, to change the number of the section from 6 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, after the words "Secretary of War," to strike out "which approval shall be based upon formal written reports, which must be made to him in each case by the commissioners of the park," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That it shall be lawful for any State that had troops engaged in the battle of Guilford Courthouse to enter upon the lands of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park for the purpose of ascerzalning and marking the lines of battle of its troops engaged therein: Provided, That before any such lines are permanently designated the position of the lines and the proposed methods of marking them, by monuments, tablets, or otherwise, shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War; and all such lines, designs, and inscriptions for the same shall first receive the written approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, to change the number of the section from 7 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 8003) authorizing the county of Morrison, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said county, and I submit a report (No. 1010) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 6, after the words "Mississippl River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of naviga-tion"; at the end of the bill to insert "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construc-tion of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906"; and to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Morrison, in the State of Minnesota, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in section 8, township 127 north, range 29 west of the fifth principal meridian, and section 32, township 39 north, range 32 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEYENNE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5648) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish certain information relative to the employment of members of the Lower Yanktonai Tribe and Two Kettle Band of the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, S. Dak., as scouts in 1863, and I submit a report (No. 1011) thereon, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for compensation of Fast Walker, D. K. How, and Not Afraid of Bear, all of the Crow Creek Reservation, S. Dak., for services rendered while acting as scouts under Gen. Sully and Lieut. Col. John Pattee in the year 1863, the sum of $150 each; in all, $450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Fast Walker, D. K. How, and Not Afraid of Bear."

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 351), as follows:

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 351), as follows: Whereas the President has, for the reasons stated in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session on February 3, 1917, severed diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government by the recall of the American ambassador at Berlin and by handing his passports to the German ambassador at Berlin and by handing his passports to the German ambassador at Washington; and Whereas notwithstanding this severance of diplomatic intercourse the President has expressed his desire to avoid conflict with the Imperial German Government; and Whereas the President declared in his said address that if in his judgment occasion should arise for further action in the premises on the matter to the Congress and ask the authority of the Congress to use such means as he might deem necessary for the protection of American seamen and people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Senate approves the action taken by the President as set forth in his address delivered before the joint session of the Congress as above stated.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?
Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, of course not intending to object, but, feeling that this is a matter of extreme importance, and that the vote should be as emphatic as possible, I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration there was an amendment offered to it directing the Committee on Patents to make an investigation of the Patent Office. I supposed that that was a movement in the nature of a grievance, and as I have great confidence in the Commissioner of Patents, I made an objection, which took the amendment out of the bill. I have since learned that the sole purpose of the amendment was to give the Committee on Patents authority to look into the needs of the Patent Office, which I happen to know are imperative. As I can not restore the item to the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill, I submit a resolution, which I ask unanimous consent to have considered at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 350) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate the needs of the Patent Office respecting both its force and its equipment and to report to the Senate at the opening of the next session of the Congress.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I know that what the Senator from New Hampshire states is true, because the Commissioner of Patents himself came to me with the amendment which I gave to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] and asked him to present. Its purpose was to ascertain the needs and requirements of the Patent Office. I think the resolution ought to be passed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NOMINATION OF DR. CARY T. GRAYSON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that the resolution I offered on Friday last be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would inquire whether the resolution was not offered in executive session?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was not, in this sense, that unanimous consent was granted that it should be offered as in legislative session.

Mr. JAMES. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I think the Senator rose to offer it, and did offer it without any request of that sort.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the Senator from Kentucky is mistaken.

Mr. JAMES. I do not think so.

Mr. CHILTON. There is nothing in the RECORD about it.
Mr. JAMES. I was watching the matter pretty closely, and I remember very accurately, I think, as to what occurred.

Mr. CHILTON. There is nothing in the RECORD to show that it was offered.

Mr. JAMES. The Record does not disclose that it was offered in legislative session. Of course, the Senate speaks only by

Mr. POINDEXTER. It could not have been offered very well for the purpose I have in view in any other way. I have the most distinct recollection of having offered the resolution, accompanied by the request that it be considered as in legislative session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the RECORD show it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know whether there is any record of it or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There would be if offered as in legislative session.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not necessarily.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If in executive session the Senator might move as in legislative session that it be so considered, but we are not in executive session and it is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not the point. The point is whether it was submitted heretofore as in legislative session. Mr. WILLIAMS. That does not change the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If permission was granted, it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it was not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair is trying to find out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know whether the Senator from Mississippi was present or not, but permission was granted by unanimous consent for the introduction of the resolution as in legislative session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may be that I am mistaken, but I do not so understand it. Of course, if the Senate in executive session gave permission for its introduction in legislative session, then the Senator has the right, but my recollection is that that was not done. I may be mistaken.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator might very well not have heard that. There was a colloquy, if I may be permitted to refer to it in the most general way, between the Senator from Georgia and myself upon my request that the matter go over under the rule until the next legislative day. The first statement which was made in connection with the resolution was that it be introduced as in legislative session. I asked unanimous consent to introduce the resolution as in legislative session, and the inquiry was made by the Secretary to know what was to be done with it. I stated at that time that it would go over one day under the rule. Those were the exact proceedings. Of course there is no record of it, because there was no reporter present, but it was not an executive matter. It was not submitted as an executive matter. It was submitted on the assumption that under Rule XXXVI, section 2, a motion or resolution is in order to proceed to executive business in open session, and that the resolution is in order in open session as a part of legislative business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator to make that request, but I did not understand that the Senate passed the resolution in executive session; and unless the Senate in executive session did pass the resolution which he offered, which was that this matter should be considered in legislative session, then it can not be so considered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In view of the fact that there is a controversy about that matter, at the suggestion of one of my colleagues I will withdraw the request which I have just made, and I will submit the resolution now in legislative session, and ask that it go over under the rule and lie on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely want to give notice to the Senator that when the Senator calls up the resolution for consideration I shall, of course, move to go into executive session to consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 352), as follows:

Resolved, That further consideration of the nomination of Cary T. Grayson to be medical director, with the rank of rear admiral, in the Navy shall be in open executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the NIGHT SESSION FOR THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, February 6, the Senate take a recess at not later than 6 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m., and that upon the reconvening of the Senate at 8 o'clock it shall be in order to resume the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII at Calendar No. 802, and that the Senate take a recess at not later than 11 o'clock p. m. until 11 o'clock the following morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is that for unobjected bills only?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the Senator. Is that request for to-night or to-morrow night?

Mr. ROBINSON. To-morrow night.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before I give my consent I should like to know whether the request includes unobjected bills only?
Mr. ROBINSON. Unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. JAMES. Let me ask the Senator why he proposes to commence with Order of Business No. 802?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is where we left off the last night when the Senate had under consideration the calendar. If we do not do that, the probabilities are that we will never be able to reach the unobjected bills which are far down on the calendar.

Mr. JAMES. There are some bills, I suggest to the Senator, to which objection was made for reasons which can be entirely

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator can recur to them by unanimous consent,

Mr. JAMES. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be the understanding that that can be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; there will be no objection.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?
Mr. GALLINGER. Does the proposed agreement provide for a recess at not later than 11 o'clock to-morrow night?
Mr. ROBINSON. At not later than 11 o'clock.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday morning, immediately after the close of the routine morning business, I will address the Senate on our relations with Germany.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator couple with that the request that no other business shall be considered?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am between two fires. One Senator is saying that if one thing is inserted in the agreement he will object and another Senator is intimating that if it is not in he will object. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] to the fact that the Senator from Utah is requesting that nothing further be done during the night session than the consideration of the Porto Rican government bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that that bill shall be made the special order, to begin at the time referred to by the Senator from Colorado, but if that is done no other business could be transacted, except upon a vote of the Senate displacing that bill. I am not, however, willing that by a unanimous-consent agreement-which itself could not be set aside under the ruling of the Chair, even by unanimous consentanything should be taken up to the exclusion positively of all other possible business. I think the Senator from Utah will upon reflection agree with me. We are in a pretty acute situation; there is no telling what may arise at any moment, and the Senate ought not to adopt a unanimous-consent agreement to consider any legislation to the exclusion of other possible business, even of the most vital importance.

Mr. JAMES. An exception might be made as to emergency

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the request is worded in a way to except emergency legislation, I shall not object to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am willing to have the request worded

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be content if the unanimous-consent agreement be worded in such way that the only exception will include special and emergency cases.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then let the wording of the unanimousconsent agreement be in that way. As I now understand, the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] is that the Porto Rican government bill shall be made the special order at 8 o'clock to-night, to the exclusion of all other business, except possible special emergency legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I accept that suggestion, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have no special objection to the Porto Rican bill, but I desire to notify the Senator from Colorado and the Senate that if legislation of that kind is to be considered to-night there will have to be a quorum here when the session begins.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator from Washington will not make that condition.

Mr. JONES. Why not? If we are going to hold night sessions, why should we not have a quorum of the Senate here to do business

Mr. SHAFROTH. The reason is that there are not enough Senators interested in the measure to come here at night.

Mr. JONES. If unanimous consent is given, I want it understood that it is given on that condition. Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask the unanimous-consent agreement to which I have referred, and I will try to induce the Senator to change his position.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be no objection.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Colorado had better not make that statement, or he may have more trouble in getting a quo-

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate at half past 5 o'clock take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that the Senator word his request that the Senate take a recess not later than at half past 5 o'clock. Mr. SHAFROTH. That the Senate take a recess not later than half past 5 o'clock

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

INTERFERENCE WITH NEGOTIATIONS WITH FOREIGN POWERS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in view of the tendency which certain private citizens seem to have to meddle with the negotiations of our Government with foreign powers, I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read sections 5 and 9 of the Penal Code.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 5. Every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or in any foreign country, without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly, commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign Government or any officer or agent thereof, with an integt to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign Government or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States; and every person, being a citizen of or resident within the United States; are in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and not duly authorized, counsels, advises, or assists in any such correspondence with such intent, shall be fined not more than $5.000 and imprisoned not more than three years; but nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of a citizen to apply, himself or his agent, to any foreign Government or the agents thereof for redress of any injury which he may have sustained from such Government or any of its agents or subjects.

SEC. 9. Every citizen of the United States who, within the territory or jurisdiction thereof, accepts and exercises a commission to serve a foreign prince, State, colony, district, or people, in war, by land or by sea, against any prince, State, colony, district, or people, with whom the United States are at peace, shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than three years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, the morning business is closed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 1740. An act to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes, approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby; and

S. 5014. An act to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6145) for the relief of Edward F. McDermott, alias James Williams.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:
H. R. 6145. An act for the relief of Edward F. McDermott, alias James Williams;

H. R. 9547. An act authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government from the Kenesaw Memorial Association of Illinois of a proposed gift of land on the Kenesaw battle field, in the State of Georgia; and
H. R. 10124. An act to add certain lands to the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION-VETO MESSAGE.

The Senate proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, which had been vetoed by the President of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the President's veto of the immigration bill, and I most sincerely hope that I can, for at least a few moments, engage the attention of the Senate, not to the old questions that have been discussed but to some suggestions that have since been made and some events that have since occurred which I think at this particular crisis of public affairs demand very serious thought.

Mr. President, the bill as passed contains this language in the excluding clause:

And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

I want to get your attention to the words-

And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

We have a treaty with Japan and a "gentlement's agreement," so called, with Japan. It is a part of that "gentleman's agreement" that the Government of Japan will not permit certain classes of Japanese to emigrate to the United States. That is a condition of exclusion carried out through the Japanese Government, but it is nevertheless a condition of exclusion.

Now, I want the Senators to know the fact before they vote:

that the Japanese ambassador has already called the attention of our State Department informally to the language of the bill which I have read. The fear is expressed that it constitutes a legislative exclusion of those citizens of Japan who are now excluded by the "gentlemen's agreement"; in other words, that instead of allowing that exclusion to rest upon the "gentlemen's agreement" we have added a legislative prohibition. authorized by the State Department to say to the Senate that the Japanese Embassy has called attention to this language and that the State Department feels that the clause may be the occasion of some misunderstanding. The State Department is ex-ceedingly desirous that nothing shall be done which will cause the Japanese Government to feel that we have in any way impinged upon the understanding which now exists. Notice that the language is:

No alien now in any way excluded shall be admitted to the United States.

The exclusion of the Japanese citizen now is by virtue of the act of the Japanese Government, but he is nevertheless excluded by that action; and if this bill becomes a law it could be well said that the case of the Japanese citizen was covered by it, because the language is so broad, comprehensive, and sweeping as to embrace in the legislative exclusion every man who is now in any manner prevented from coming to the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair) Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the contention of the Senator from Missouri to be that the Japanese Government prefers to have this rest exclusively upon the "gentlemen's agreement," so

Mr. REED. Well, I do not like to answer the question in just that form, because I do not want to assume to speak for the Japanese Government. I am, however, at liberty to say that it has called attention to this language, and I am, of course, at liberty, as we all are, to construe the language. arguing is that there is a reasonable ground for the claim that language so broad and sweeping might embrace all those who are now excluded from any cause or for any reason or by any means and hence would exclude the Japanese because they are now excluded, albeit, by the action of their own Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I am not in error, the Senator who has charge of this bill stated that the agreement which the conferees had reached with reference to this particular clause was satisfactory all around. If I remember correctly, that was stated upon the floor. I may be in error, however.

Mr. REED. I can not answer the Senator as to whether that statement was made or not, because, of course, I did not hear all that the Senator in charge of the bill said by any means, for I was not here during all of the time. The Senator who was in charge of the bill is not here this morning; indeed, there are very few here, as is usually the case. But I lay it hard upon the conscience and patriotism and intelligence of Senators whether at this particular juncture of affairs we desire to do anything that may in the slightest degree tend to disturb the amicable relations that now exist between this country and a country with which we have no serious controversies

The State Department regards this as important, so important, indeed, that the Third Assistant Secretary of State called my attention to it this morning, and asked me to lay it before the Senate. I regard it as important.

I do not know whether or not the Senate is so determined to pass this bill that it will do so regardless of all consequences.

I do know that at this particular juncture of international affairs sober thought and reflection ought to be the rule with reference to every matter touching our foreign relations. unwilling at this hour, big with the world's fate, to do anything that will by any possibility weaken or impair the friendly relations existing between our country and a country which has given to us no offense,

I know how dear this bill is to certain Senators. I know that a feeling has been growing up in our country for many years that too many people are coming to our shores who are not fit for American citizenship. With that sentiment I have been in absolute accord. But there have been differences of opinion as to how the end desired was to be accomplished. The bill that is before us is an unsound and illogical measure. Nevertheless, it has been pushed through, with all its unsoundness and with all its lack of logic, simply because there is an earnest desire to accomplish the end of limiting improper immigration to the We are acting upon this measure much in the United States. same spirit that men might act if they were obliged to accept this particular bill or obtain nothing, whereas we have the absolute power at any time to pass such a bill which will bring the desired result and yet be free from the faults which impair the present measure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am much in sympathy with the attitude of the Senator from Missouri, but I do not desire to see the record closed on his view of the Japanese situation without suggesting to him that this especial favor which is extended by the President of the United States to the Japanese Government might still be accorded to the Japanese Government, if the Executive were so disposed, after the passage of this law. a very radical departure from the present law. The Japanese Government have simply assumed to vise or issue the passports of their citizens who sought to come to the United States, and to that extent they have controlled immigration to the United States; but if the present laws and treaties were effective I hardly believe they would have the latitude which they now have by the so-called gentlemen's agreement.

As to the wisdom of that agreement, I am not going to say; but if the law and the treaties could be overlooked or set aside, or their enforcement suspended by Executive favor, it can be done after the passage of this bill, if it should pass. never been very enthusiastic about it. I think it is most inopportune now, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator misses the point that I tried to state, and which perhaps I was unfortunate in not stating This, as I understand, is the view of the Japanese Embassy, as expressed in an informal conference with the State Department: That a treaty exists between the United States and Japan under which its citizens have the right to enter the United States; that an attempt was made to deny the Japanese the right to enter; that thereupon the Japanese Government insistently urged their rights under the treaty and protested against the enactment of any exclusion law. However, what is known as a gentlemen's agreement was arrived at, by which the Japanese Government in effect said: "If the United States will refrain from enacting an exclusion law, we will take care of the matter; we will ourselves exclude the immigration from Japan to which you object."

Now, the Japanese Government is willing to stand upon that. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has one-half of my audience. [Laughter.] I want to wait until it is released.

Mr. BORAH. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that we were discussing the point which the Senator was making without interrupting the Senator.

Mr. REED. As I could not hear your discussion, I want you hear mine. I was trying to state the point to the Senator from to hear mine. Michigan. Now, as I understand, the Japanese Government is willing to let matters rest just as they are, but it does not want a legislative act passed which might be so construed as to be the enactment into law of this gentlemen's agreement, or which would effectuate the same thing.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me one moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do. Mr. LODGE. The provision embodied by the conference committee, simply as a proviso, that no aliens now excluded in any way or prevented from entering the country in any way shall be admitted after the passage of this act, touches nothing that now exists. It does not interfere with the gentlemen's agreement in any way. If the Japanese Government should abandon their agreement-and it is purely voluntary; they can abandon it at any time—then the people who are now kept out under that agreement would not be able to come in. But it does not touch it at all, and it was drawn with particular care so as not to touch the agreement of treaties or existing law, or to draw any race distinction whatever.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I call the distinguished Senator's attention to the fact, and then to the language. First, the fact is that Japanese are excluded from the United States in some

Mr. LODGE. Japanese labor; yes. Mr. REED. That way is the action of the Japanese Govern-

Mr. LODGE. The voluntary action; yes. Mr. REED. Now, says this law:

No alien now in any way excluded or-

Prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted.

They are prevented now. Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REED. By the action of the Japanese Government; and this bill is not limited to the present moment. It reaches into the future, and it provides, as to the future, that no alien—or class of aliens, of course—now prevented, shall even enter the United States. Now prevented by our laws? Now prevented by our treaties? No; the provision is that no aliens now prevented in any way from entering the United States shall be permitted to come.

The Senator's viewpoint upon any language is always very important and very weighty; but I can not understand the logic of the Senator when he states: "Yes; the Japanese are now prevented," and says, then, that the language "and no alien now in any way excluded or prevented from coming to the United States shall be admitted to the United States" does not embrace every Japanese who is now within the prohibition of the Japanese Government from coming, because he is already prevented from coming by his own Government. The fact is that this law if passed will do what the gentleman's agreement does. The difference lies in this: The Japanese citizen is now excluded by the action of his own Government, which is not offensive to the Japanese Nation, whereas if we pass this law we will then exclude him by our act, which will be offensive.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly it would embrace them, Mr. President, if they abandoned the voluntary agreement.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. I do. Mr. FALL. As I understand, the point that the Senator is making is that now being excluded simply by the action of the Japanese Government, if this bill passes they will then be excluded by the law of the United States.

Mr. REED. Exactly. The Senator has stated it admirably. They will then be excluded by the law of the United States, because the law will declare that anybody that is now excluded by a gentlemen's agreement or in any other way shall forever be excluded by the law of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Some of us feel that if the Japanese people should see fit to abrogate the gentlemen's agreement there ought to be a law against their admission into this country. That law would be founded not only upon what we believe to be right, but upon what the Japanese Government has conceded to be right by its own voluntary action in excluding them from this country. No one would wish to offend Japanese people, but there can be no offense, it would seem, in putting a conceded principle in the form of a statute.

Mr. REED. I believe, as the Senator believes, that this country ought so to frame its treaties and its laws as to prevent Japanese labor from coming to the United States. so said on former occasions. Our Government found, however, that the Japanese regarded any attempt to exclude them by law as offensive; and for considerations so weighty that the State Department has spent much time on them, it was decided best not to resort to legislative exclusion, but to have resort simply to a genteel agreement, trusting to the Japanese Government to protect our shores by its action. Now, that agreement is a fact, and that exclusion does now exist; but it rests in the honor and good faith and good will of the Japanese Nation and not in a law. Now, it is proposed to put into the law a phrase that will shut out these Japanese by law as completely as though the law named them. I say to the Senate that at another time and under other conditions I would be willing to stand here in the Senate and insist that our Government ought to insist upon a change of treaties; but I also say to the Senate that this is no time to be creating new points of difference or new causes of friction with a great nation with which we have been at complete peace, and with which we desire to remain in complete accord and amity.

I now stand here and talk "to the deaf ears of the adder," to those who propose to put this bill through regardless of con-sequences. The absence from the Chamber at this moment of sequences. The absence from the Chamber at this moment of nearly all its Members indicates a total indifference to the importance of this question. All I can do is to challenge the attention of those who are here, for at 4 o'clock we shall vote, and between now and 4 o'clock is the only time left for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend? The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. REED. The President in his veto message had in mind. think, some of the troubles that now loom before us. He put into his message a warning with reference to this same question, speaking broadly, not with reference to the Japanese, but with reference to the possibility of international complications which might arise between any country and the United States.

The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith."

That is the end of the quotation. The President continues:

Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecution. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible but probable that very serious questions of international justice and comity would arise between this Government and the Government or Governments thus officially condemned should its exercise be attempted. I dare say that these consequences were not in the minds of the proponents of this provision, but the provision separately and in itself renders it unwise for me to give my assent to this legislation in its present form.

So you have the warning of the President that this legislation will probably be the occasion of international difficulties or misunderstandings. You have the knowledge that there is already a protest, informal but nevertheless a protest, by a great world power, and I repeat with all the force and emphasis I am capable of that this is not the time to be seeking points of difference with the great powers of the earth. Enough lies ahead of us that we can not avoid.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the

Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I suppose the Senator is very familiar with Article I of the treaty between the United States and Japan which was ratified in 1911, and the language of the first article, which I think very important in view of the memorandum which the Senator cites, I should like to read:

The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel, and reside in the territories of the other; to carry on trade, wholesale and retail; to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops; to employ agents, and so forth; to lease lands for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

Surely the bill which the Senator is discussing is squarely in the teeth of that treaty right.

Mr. REED. When it is taken in connection with the gentlemen's agreement; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and whether the gentlemen's agreement can be made after the passage of this law, if it should pass, I am not quite prepared to assert vigorously, although I think it could be. I think if the law-enforcing officials of the Government decided that as to the Japanese people their officials should oversee and supervise the immigration of their subjects to the United States they, perhaps, would miss the penalties and regulations of this law. I am quite of opinion that that could be done; but, at any rate, in the face of the protest which the Senator has asserted, and in view of the fact that it would repeal absolutely, pro tanto, the treaty which I have now read, it has a very significant bearing.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have stated the matter as clearly as I can state it. I do not want to multiply words upon it.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some other things relating to the bill. The Senate put into the bill a very vital amendment. It was an amendment that would have prevented a great abuse of the privilege of entering the United States. It was to the effect that persons could not come to the United States for the mere purpose of temporarily engaging in labor, intending to return to their own country. That provision would have removed one of the chief causes of complaint against foreign immigration, to wit, the frequently recurring tidal waves of human beings that sweep over the ocean to take the places of our labor. This happens whenever wages become good. The immigrants come intending to earn some money and return home. They employ America as a sort of feeding ground. They do so to the detriment of our home labor. The provision I refer to was put in in the Senate and stricken out in the conference, and I should like to know what efforts our conferees made to keep it in. The fact is nearly every wholesome provision placed in the bill by the Senate was stricken out. It seems to me that our representatives, who opposed all these amendments in the Senate, were quite willing they should come out in conference.

I notice the chairman of the committee is absent, confident of the vote, regardless of the merits of the bill or of this discussion, but I want somebody representing the committee to tell the Senate before the debate is over why that important clause was stricken out of the bill, and why those who profess that they want to protect this country from an influx of foreigners and to protect the labor of this country against an unjust competition with those who come here temporarily to take the places of our labor struck that clause from the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REED. I do. Mr. CHILTON. Does the Senator remember whether that same clause was in the bill that passed this body in the last

Mr. REED. I do not think it was in that bill; but I do not know. The clause in the present bill I prepared. It was offered here on the floor of the Senate, was fully debated, and was adopted against the protest of the chairman of the committee. It is not hard to know why it was not kept in the bill, but it is difficult to know why any man professing to desire the protec-tion of our shores and of our labor would not have kept it in the bill.

The committee undertook for the first time to exclude people from entering this country by lines of latitude and longitude, not by races, not by intellectual qualifications, not by moral attributes, but by arbitrary lines. Accordingly, they marked a space upon the map which included countries containing, as I figure roughly in my head, something like 300,000,000, and said no human being in all that vast territory could ever come to the United States. The point was raised that to thus arbitrarily exclude everybody would exclude even those members of the white race who happen to be within that vast excluded territory, which embraces about one-half of all Asia, and so the words "white persons" were inserted in the bill, the effect being that white persons residing within that territory could, if otherwise qualified, enter the United States.

But the conferees cut out the words "white persons," leaving the bill so that it absolutely excludes every human being within that mighty portion of the earth's surface, and this regardless of the intellectual or moral qualifications of the immigrant and even though he be of the purest of pure white blood.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to explain to the Senator why we did that, and I think possibly he will agree with it. The Senator knows that the Hindus have been held by our courts to be white people. Now, even if they are technically white people they are not the sort of white people the Senator wants to come in, and if we had left in the bill the words "white people" we would not have gotten rid of this immigration that we wanted to avoid. I also invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that comprehensive language is employed in describing the excluded classes. That language is so broad that it includes practically all of the white people living · in those countries.

Mr. REED. I think not by any means.

Mr. HARDWICK. It was so considered in the committee. Mr. REED. You can not say they are doctors and lawyers. Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator read the language?

Mr. REED. Let me find it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it pretty nearly included all white

Mr. REED. I will endeavor to get to that language in a moment. But if that is the rule the committee are proceeding by, why do they not put Africa in the excluded district? Why do you exclude the citizens of India, whom you say are of white blood, and permit to come to this country all the inhabitants of every part of Africa except a little spot on the east coast, embracing the desert portions of Arabia?

Mr. HARDWICK. As the Senator knows, personally the Senator from Georgia agreed with him on that question, and so voted in the Senate. The conferees, however, believed that the real reason why it was not necessary to do that was because there is no material immigration into this country of Africans from Africa. On the other hand, there is a very large immigration of Hindus, who, if you used the words "white person," would not be excluded. That is why we did not leave those words in

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator, I hope, will not leave the Chamber.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will not.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell me why you exclude the people living in the territory of southern Russia and allow to come to this country the people from all of Siberia and all that part of Russia which lies north of the fiftieth degree of latitude? What is there about the people there who live just south of that parallel which distinguishes them from those living just north of the line?

Mr. HARDWICK. Would the Senator like to have me give an answer to that question now?
Mr. REED. I would.

Mr. HARDWICK. The part of Russia that we included is Turkestan.

Mr. REED. It also includes other parts of the Russian Em-

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think any part of it in which a considerable number of white people live.

Mr. REED.

Mr. HARDWICK. What part of it?
Mr. REED. There are white people living in all parts of the excluded areas.

Mr. HARDWICK. I mean they do not constitute the mass of the population.

Mr. REED. I think so.
Mr. HARDWICK. I think the Senator is in error about that. Of course there are white people all over the earth, but I mean the mass of the population are not white people in the excluded territory described by the geographical lines.

Mr. REED. As originally prepared the committee ran these lines clear up to the Arctic region, taking all of the white people out of the central portions of Russia. There was some debate upon that, and they moved the line down to the fiftieth degree of latitude, and there they arbitrarily drew it, although the people just north of that line are just like those just south of the line.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is in error there. There is a racial difference.

You do not follow the lines that mark the divi-Mr. REED. sion of races. You follow the parallels and meridians drawn on the map of the surface of the earth, utterly disregarding the lines of countries or the lines of races.

It is as arbitrary a thing as though you were to draw two parallel lines across the United States and say that the people within those lines should have certain rights and the people outside should have certain other rights. You exclude some because you say they are Turks, yet you allow the great body of the Turkish Empire to send its people here. Are the Turks over in the body of the Turkish Empire in Asia Minor and Syria not as dangerous as those who live over in Turkestan? Are they not the same kind of people? Have they not the same color of skin, the same character of blood, the same religion, the same fero-clous tendencies and traits? You exclude one, and you say you do so because he is a Turk. Why not exclude the other because he is a Turk?

The trouble is that instead of drawing this bill by races and excluding men because of character and blood, or even by countries, you exclude them in accordance with parallels of latitude and degrees of longitude. The gentlemen who vote for this bill vote that a Turk residing in European Turkey can come in if he lives just west of the fiftieth meridian of longitude, and if he lives just east of it he can not come in.

Under this wisely prepared bill an Arabian who lives just east of the fiftieth meridian of east longitude can not come in. That is largely desert over there, but if he lives just west of that line-and that embraces the greater part of Arabia-he can come in. It is about as senseless a proposition as was ever put on paper anywhere by any set of men. As originally drawn, this map would have excluded nearly all of Persia, but the committee got together in its room and resolved that a Persian would make a good citizen of the United States. Accordingly they grouped him with the African, so that both of them may come in arm in arm. The Moors from Morocco can come in; the polite and cultured inhabitant of Algeria is welcomed with open arms; the individual who inhabits darkest Abyssinia is a highly desirable immigrant; we open our arms to embrace him; the civilized and cultured denizen of Madagascar is invited to come; the intellectual bushman of the Congo is also eagerly sought. The Egyptian, whose intellectual death occurred when the Pyramids were built, can also come. The committee have excluded the head-hunters of Borneo, but they have admitted the head-hunters and the cannibals of Patagonia and the Fiji Islands—a discrimination between the same class of people which, I think, may justly be termed "class legislation." But you will swallow it, because you are pursuing a policy here in regard to legislation that is too prevalent everywhere. What is it? A desired object is in your mind, and in the attempt to accomplish that object you lose all sight of the other features of proposed legislation.

You want to preserve the purity of our race; you want to prevent the influx of great hordes of undesirable people; and starting out with that laudable object—and that laudable object being in the senatorial mind—the Senate absolutely refuses to consider the bad propositions that are loaded into the bill.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who paid me the compliment of an interruption and then of an immediate absence, spoke of the line of cleavage between races, and insisted that the arbitrary lines drawn upon the map by the committee mark that line of cleavage. But they do nothing of the kind. Here is a little excerpt from the Encyclopedia Brittanica dealing with that question. It says:

The Caucasic or white man is best divided as follows.

Then follows a description of races, and then this:

The Mongolic or yellow man prevails over the vast area east of a line drawn from Lapland to Siam.

But the line of this map is not that line, and it does not approximate that line. The committee proceeded with about the same degree of arbitrary assumption of power and authority that old Andrew Jackson did when he went out and stuck his cane down in the ground and said, "Build it there; there is where I tell you to build it"; or the Czar of Russia, when he drew his pencil across a map and said, "Build the Siberian Railroad there," without much regard to topography or anything else, except the whim of the moment.

Mr. President, if any Senator will take this map as it is now marked out, showing the excluded areas, he will find that the line runs through the Chinese Empire or Republic—which-ever it happens to be this morning—leaving part of China excluded and part of it included; that it runs through the Russian Empire, excluding a part and including a part; that it runs through the very center of little islands in the ocean; and the man who lives north of that arbitrary line can not come in. but the man who lives south of it can come in; and that is true of islands of small extent. However, wherever the committee drew its pencil it made a line between human beings and differentiated between them; but the line that it drew was not a line between character or citizenship, but a mere arbitrary line on a map.

As to the literacy test as a test, that matter has been discussed, and I should not refer to it at all, except that I want to utter my final protest against it. This literacy test is not to be applied to our people where there are open schools and where the door of opportunity is held back and everyone is invited to enter the places of learning; but it is to be applied to people born in other climes, other Governments, and other environments. It is, as the President said in his former veto message, not therefore a test of capacity or disposition, but a test of opportunity. The man in the United States, speaking generally, who has resided here within sight of the schoolhouse and who has not acquired some education, is generally one of inferior mentality or one who does not possess the disposition which a good and progressive citizen ought to possess. That rule can not, however, be justly applied to the man born in a country where the heel of tyranny rests upon the necks of the people, where poverty with hands of steel circumscribes the development of the inhabitants, where the wolf stands snarling at the door of aspiring as the people of any race. They have passed in the test the cottages of the poor, and where the constabulary and the soldiery drive him from the schoolhouse. The man reared under such conditions ought not to be denied the opportunity to move to a country where better opportunities prevail; he should not be denied a chance in life because already he has been deprived of his rights as a human being.

What harm has ever come from opening our hospitable doors to well-intentioned men and women who have been the victims of misfortune elsewhere? They came here in the early days of our Republic, and there were then, as now, men who declared that the influx of "ignorant foreigners" would destroy this It was nevertheless found that these industrious people settled upon our soil, conformed to our laws, and educated their children with greater care than the native-born American citizen. I put in the Record during the debates of the last Congress elaborate tables demonstrating the fact. To-day it is the solemn truth, although I say it with some shame, people born in foreign countries and who came here illiterate send their children to the public schools more regularly and give them more of education than do the native-born citizens, and there is a greater degree of illiteracy to-day among the whites of the State represented by the distinguished chairman of the committee than there is among the children of the foreign-born in this country. I have made that statement before and it has not been challenged.

The grown people who come to our country unable to read or write are, generally speaking, past the meridian of life. They do not live long; but they bring with them wife and wean, and the question that confronts us is how the children are reared; how are they educated? The children are to become the future voters, the future business men, the future controllers of our country's destiny in part. When you tear aside the veil of prejudice, you are bound to admit that the children of illiterate immigrants frequently outshine in the schools of this country the children of the native-born; that the prize scholar to-day in our colleges, our universities, and our schools is very likely to have been the child of an illiterate immigrant.

What has been the fault of these people? Why are they illit-The answer can be found in that system of industrial and political tyranny from which our fathers fled and against which they later rebelled. God Almighty made this human family, and He made white men pretty much the same wherever He made them, and He made men of other colors pretty much the same wherever He made them. Wherever the white race exists men and women have been capable of setting up civilization, of achieving everything that is glorious and beautiful in civilization. But the iron bands have been riveted upon many of them by tyrants; the door of opportunity has been closed in the faces of the vast multitude. They have struggled along, bearing the burdens and subject to the tortures of their surroundings; and so they have remained poor; some of them have remained ignorant; but the history of this country and the history of every other free country shows that once you break those chains those who are the despised and oppressed of the land have crowded into every avenue of progress; they have swarmed with eager feet over the hilltops of success; they have climbed the mountains of achievement; and they have proven that in the years of their oppression and suffering they have been laying up a store of courage and of fortitude that has made them better and stronger than those who oppressed them.

There was a time, sirs, in this country when the "American aristocrat" sneered at the Irish who were coming to our land. The American aristocrat pointed to the fact that the Irish immigrants were priest-ridden and Pope driven, the same miserable cry that is to a large extent to-day responsible for this bill. It was charged that they were ignorant, and to a large extent they were, although only a century or two back of that time the Irish had been better educated than the English; but English oppression had destroyed Irish opportunity. They pointed to the fact that when these Irish came to our country they came poor; clad in tatters; that they crowded into tenements, 10, 15, and 20 living in a room. They declared that these Irish were the lazzarone of the earth; that they would pollute our civilization. Yet what happened, sir? The Irishman took his pick and shovel and went on to the railroad. He worked at anything he could get; and in a little while the Irishman was living in a little cottage of his own; in a little while his children were in the public schools; in a little while the Irishman with his pick had become the manager of the railroad; in a little while you heard his eloquent voice ring out in the forums of debate; you heard the magic and music of Irish poetry; you saw the mystery of Irish genius transformed to the deathless canvas. You find the Irish to-day as good in blood, as good in brawn, as exalted in soul, as of life those who stood sneering at them as they came. I use that one race as a type, but it is true of others.

What say you of transferring to this country that spirit of intolerance and oppression which has been the curse of Europe? Over there stands your aristocrat declaring "I was selected by God to control the earth, and these other creatures may creep around and crawl between my feet; but they shall be denied opportunity, and I shall dominate and control." Now, we, whose ancestors came but a few short years back from those same dark spots of earth, whose ancestors came bearing upon their skins the marks of masters' whips, rise in our self-adula-tion and in our assumed greatness, and say, "We join with the European and Asiatic tyrants in excluding and denying privilege to these poor people who are conditioned as were our own ancestors." So, men who themselves have struggled from the waves and gained a seat upon the raft kick back into the water's gaping mouth others who struggle for a place of safety.

Democrats, the five or six who are here, if you but read the utterances of Jefferson, to whom you pray as you go into your political temple, you will find he was a big enough man to say that no man should be denied opportunity because he was born on a particular spot of earth. But this committee takes a blue pencil and excludes all those born within one-third of the earth's surface that is not covered with water; and yet I will in the future as in the past see and hear the Democratic members of the committee invoking the name Jefferson every time they advance some proposition they can not bolster with their own logic!

I challenge any man in this body, and if it were permissible I would challenge the galleries, to name me now a single human being, who is an illiterate, who in the last 26 troublous months has lifted a hand against our Government or sought to embroil us in foreign conflict. The only trouble we have had has been, and if we are to have any trouble with any class of our people in this country in the future the only trouble we will have will be, with those who are not illiterate. Now, name me, if you can, the poor, illiterate wretch who in the past 26 months has done an act of violence against our Nation's peace, who has conspired against our land, who has given aid and comfort to those in conflict or controversy with the United States. Name me one. Aye, name me one in all this hundred million of our people who came here bearing on his back the raw scars of recent oppression who is not loyal to our land to-day.

It is not because of the poor man who can not read and write that our country needs to feel a fear. I will tell you where you will find that man. If there shall come a time when on the field of battle American valor must be called to meet the military serfs of monarchs, you will find him there. You will find upon that field where assemble the blue-blooded Americans the poor fellow from a foreign country who was so oppressed that he could not attend school, and he will fight with a double force in his soul-the love of liberty and the hatred of tyranny. He will fight as he has fought in every war of our country-the Revolution, where Irish and French and men of all races fought as valiantly as the native born; the War of 1812, when again they touched elbows and marched to the front; the War with Mexico; the War of the Rebellion, in which there were whole regiments of Irish who charged with the old Celtic yell, "Ireland forever!" Those regiments fought under Irish flags, but always with the Irish flag below the Stars and Stripes.

There is something wrong with a character of legislation that has been vetoed by three great Presidents. There is something wrong with legislation that comes under the condemnation at once of a man of the intellectual type of Grover Cleveland and a man of the opposite intellectual type, Woodrow Wilsonboth of them great giants in the intellectual kingdom, but of very different mentalities. There is something wrong with a legislative body that listens to propagandas originated by societies based upon proscription of men because of their re-There is something wrong with legislators who refuse to listen and who pay no heed to the solemn warnings of the President of the Republic in this hour when care should be exercised as never before in our history. There is something wrong when men will blindly follow their prejudice to such an extent that they will not listen or pay heed, although the State Department says to us, "This bill is so drawn that the representatives of a great foreign power with which we are at profound peace, and whose friendship we certainly desire to-day, have unofficially registered their suggestion-not a protest, but a suggestion-that the language of this bill may be very unsatisfactory." And, Senators, those of you who still remain in the Chamber, I put this to you: Is the present just the time, when the Congress of the United States ought to repudiate the President of the United States?

Sustain this veto, and all that is laudable or proper can yet be saved. This will not be the last session of Congress. A bill can be drawn that will protect the citizenship of the United States from an influx of improper foreigners, by which I mean those who, by blood or race, are incapable of amalgamation into the body and life and spirit of the American people. That is not to be done by arbitrary lines on a map, but by blood. It is the part of wisdom, in my humble judgment, to sustain this veto and to start writing an immigration bill that is to be based upon sound principles, and not upon false and arbitrary distinctions.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say upon this measure. I thank the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel very keenly and very deeply this theme, as I have said once or twice before. I opposed the bill when it was before the Senate within the past year, and I opposed it when it was before the Senate under the previous administration. To me it is repelling and repulsive. I have positive feelings and individual reasons for my opposition to this measure. I need not here state them again. I have stated them often before, and, to my mind, Mr. President, no more truly American message has been presented to the Congress by President Wilson than his veto of the socalled literacy test. I feel that it is unfortunate that he might not have been permitted to veto the literacy test and to approve the remainder of the measure, but this was impossible.

Mr. President, we cry, "Come, come to America! Come to this land, the land of the free and the home of the brave! Come to America, the haven of the downtrodden and the oppressed of every tribe; but you must read. You may be strong in body; your soul may be imbued with the love of liberty; you may stand willing to swear allegiance to your adopted country; yes, you may stand ready to bare your breast for the defense of our common country; you may love God and keep His commandments, but no! You can not touch foot on our shore, for you can not read!"

Senators, brothers, all, I appeal, do not vote to override this Christian and humane and patriotic protest against this ungenerous and un-American proposition.

Mr. President, millions of acres to-day lie in wilderness awaiting the magic touch of labor. Our laws and habits will assimilate the newcomer. Our public schools will educate him, Let him in, I pray. First let us only satisfy ourselves that he is clean and healthy and imbued with moral purposes and is willing to cost his let with the second s willing to cast his lot with us.

Mr. President, I will never vote to bar from this fair and favored land my fellow man who through accident may have been denied the opportunity to learn to read. I hear the cry that immigration must be checked. Must it? Millions of acres still lie untouched. We want the immigrant. We need him. We must have him. He has brought wealth, prosperity, law, and order to our land, and strength and patriotism as well. price of bread each day mounts. The cry on all sides, on the farm, is that we lack labor. The college-bred man does not and will not become your laborer. Our jails and prisons are filled to overflowing with men who will be able to pass the most severe of your literacy tests. Literacy is not a test of good citizenship nor of moral worth or efficiency. Illiteracy is by no means ignorance. Myriads of men who were illiterate, so called, would not be able to pass your test and yet have made the most honored and in many instances the most distinguished citizens of our land.

Cardinal Gibbons said in January:

It is disappointing to many thoughtful citizens that the immigration bill has passed both Houses of Congress. By this measure illiterates will, in the future, be excluded from entrance into this country. It is to be hoped that Mr. Wilson will act with the same good judgment as he has done on a former like occasion and veto the bill. Similar bills have been vetoed by preceding Presidents, who have been cognizant of the harmful effect of this test of literacy would have upon desirable immigration.

ILLITERACY NOT IGNORANCE.

Illiteracy should not be confounded with ignorance. There is an old axiom which reads that "intellectual attainments are not the test of virtue." Many of the most dangerous members of the community are men of keen and trained intellect but of depraved morals. The normal, sturdy illikerate has a receptive mind capable of early development. Had the United States refused such illiterates from the beginning of our Government, our country would have lost the benefit of their virtue, thrift, industry, and enterprising spirit. And the descendants of such forbears are an honor to their fathers and a credit and an asset to our country, for they have been rapidly incorporated and identified with the native population by the assimilating process of education and the common use of the English tongue. In consequence of this it would be hard to differentiate the chi-dren of foreign immigrants from those of native American parents. native American parents.

The New York Sun in an editorial says:

LITERACY TEST AGAIN.

It is growing to be a custom with Congress to send the President an immigration bill with a literacy clause to veto. The House played true to form lately in voting the literacy test into the Burnett immigration bill, that all might see how the faithful Representative stands ready at all times and in all ways to serve the native workingman.

The test now put forward provides that allens, to graduate from Ellis Island, must know how to read and write each his own hanguage. It is hard to see how ability to read the Hungarian bards will avail a laborer in a rollnig mill or how a good working knowledge of Russian script will help a New York housemaid. Very little is to be gained by the country in requiring such exotic accomplishments of intending setflers. cettlers

On December 17 the New York Sun editorially said:

On December 17 the New York Sun editorially said:

The literacy test for immigrants is a child of prejudice and selfishness, its imposition at any time in the Nation's history would have retarded the progress of the country and deprived us of thousands of loyal and devoted citizens who contributed by their own efforts and through their offspring to the upbuilding and defense of the United States.

Three Presidents—Cleveland, Taft, and Wilson—have vetoed this disastrous, unstatesmanlike restriction. To Mr. Wilson another opportunity is to be given to reject it; and that opportunity comes at a time when depleted labor markets, industries crippled by lack of workers, and commercial conditions exposing our present and future need of able-bodied immigrants must impress on the intelligence of disinterested observers the folly of locking the door to any individual of good health, honest mind, and friendly disposition.

Mr. Wilson has already given the final evidence of his understanding of this project. We hope no presumed mandate of legislative reiteration will cause him to abandon his defense of what has been and should remain a cardinal principle of American policy.

Mr. President, the fact is that this is not an effort to keep

Mr. President, the fact is that this is not an effort to keep out the illiterate. We might as well be honest with ourselves. It is an effort to keep out labor. That is what it means. can not afford to do this. Our fields and farms are crying for more help. Recent advices admonish us that we may need their strong arms to aid in the defense of our common Nation and for our country's good.

Mr. President, I most earnestly concur with the thought of the President as expressed in his message, wherein he says:

The literacy test is not a test of character, of quality, or personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. Our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate is, as such, an undesirable immigrant.

I have known in my life many who were unable to read, and yet who have carved out their fortunes, made distinguished and strong places in the body politic, and whose children have been a credit to the family of the father and an honor to our

Some one has put these few thoughts in a form that struck me very pleasantly:

Your farms are half deserted— Up goes the price of bread; Your boasted education Turns men to dudes, instead. We bring our picks and shovels To meet your greatest need; Don't shut the gates upon us Because we can not read.

I hope there will be patriotism and breadth enough in the Senate, true Americanism enough, to maintain and to sustain the President's veto of this so-called literacy test.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the friends of this bill do not feel that further debate upon its provisions is either necessary or desirable. The case is made up. The argument has already been had. The verdict has already been rendered, and at 4 o'clock this afternoon final judgment is to be entered. And yet I feel that in behalf of the Senate Committee on Immigration, and in behalf of the Senate conferees on this particular bill, a few words in answer to the President's objections to this bill will not be inappropriate.

Mr. President, in returning to the House in which it originated without his approval this bill, President Wilson observed:

In most of the provisions of the bill I should be very glad to concur, but I can not rid myself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. Tests of quality and of purpose can not be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Mr. President, the President of the United States states his side of this proposition strongly, as he always does, but it seems to me that he does not get down to the fundamentals involved in this proposition. The fundamentals upon which this literacy test rests are easy to understand, and when once understood it seems to me that the case made for the literacy test is simply unanswerable.

In the first place, we contend that no man ought to be admitted into this country unless he comes for the purpose of becoming a permanent resident of it, and is fit to become associated with our people and incorporated into our body politic That means, of course, that he must be a citizen and a voter of this Republic in the end. He can not be a citizen and a voter of this Republic unless he possesses a certain amount of intelligence, a certain amount of understanding, and in more than 30 of our own States he can not vote unless he has a certain amount of intelligence and can read and write. Now, what hardship is involved in requiring of the foreign emigrant, seeking admission into our country, seeking to eventually become a citizen and voter of this Republic, exactly the same qualifications that more than 30 American States, in one form or another, require of their own people before they can participate in the duties responsibilities, and functions of citizenship?

I understand, of course, Mr. President, that education alone, standing by itself, is never a test of virtue, of integrity, of character; and yet education always must be the test, the standard, the yardstick, for determining the possession of the amount of intelligence necessary to exercise certain duties of citizenship. The rule, of course, has its exceptions; the standard does not always secure exact accuracy; but it is the best standard that we have been able to devise for our own people when it comes to defining who are fit to exercise the functions and discharge the responsibilities of American citizenship; and there is no injustice in requiring these immigrants who come from other countries to measure up to the same standards that we requre of our own people.

So much for the fundamentals involved.

In the second place, I insist that this bill is right and that it ought to pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, for another reasonbecause we want to restrict immigration from certain countries in Europe and from certain peoples of Europe which this test will exclude-men who come here without any desire whatever to become permanent citizens of this Republic, sharers in its destinies and bearers of its burdens.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I agree to the proposition that men should not be allowed to come here who do not expect to become permanent citizens and share the burdens of government. If the Senator advocates that, will he tell me why there was cut out of this bill the clause that the Senate put in which prohibited men from coming here simply for the purpose of doing labor temporarily and going back, which was intended to stop hordes of men coming from Europe to take the place of American labor? Why was

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator very frankly. It was cut out over my objection because it was considered difficult, if not impossible, to prove the purpose of the immigrant; because we considered it impracticable to establish what the facts were in that regard, because we did not believe that the officers and servants of this Government would be able to pass on that question with any degree of accuracy.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator believe that they could have gotten at least part of the people coming in for that purpose?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I hoped so. To be frank with the Senator, I hoped that they could, and for that reason personally I favored its retention; but the majority of the conferees thought it was so impracticable, and that the percentage of good it would do was so small, that the object could be and would be best accomplished in another way; namely, in the way provided by this bill, largely by the literacy test.

Mr. REED. The Senator would not claim that these people who come here to take the places of American labor are all illiterate, or that a majority of them are illiterate, would he?

Mr. HARDWICK. I not only would claim it, but I do claim That is the fact.

Mr. REED. I should like to know from what country they

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator, if he wants me to.

Mr. REED. Because I have some figures on that point myself.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. They come from the south of Europe, from Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, from certain parts of Austria-Hungary, from Hindustan—the Hindus. Mr. REED. Only 80 Hindus came to this country last year.

Mr. HARDWICK. A large number of them have come in the past. They may have been cut down recently, but there are a large number of them in the West now, the evidence is,

Mr. REED. Last year the figures showed—
Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator the figures for a number of years?

Mr. REED. I have. There came from India last year 32 instead of 80.

Mr. HARDWICK. The figures of the Senator may be technically correct, but they are not really accurate. There is no classification there

Mr. REED. I have in my hand the immigration report and under the head, "Immigration, aliens admitted, fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, of countries from last permanent residence and races of people," I find "India 32." Mr. HARDWICK. In 1916?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I will not dispute with the Senator about that. It is a mere matter of unimportant detail. Besides, I want to call the Senator's attention to this thought. The bulk of the immigration to which this test will really be directed and which it will really exclude comes from certain countries in the south of Europe around the Mediterranean, where the people who emigrate to this country are almost entirely illiterate and belong to the class of day laborers. I think, if the Senator will examine the facts-I have not the statistics at hand, and I would not care to take up the time to put them in the RECORD if I had them—he will find in the countries to which I have made reference the percentage of the illiterates is very large, and he will find, I think, further, if he will examine into the facts, that the percentage of illiterates who come from that country into this is very large.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I have the figures here for 1914. The Senator will pardon me a moment, I have the figures here for 1914. The Senator spoke of over half of them being illiterate who came. The worst country I find is Portugal, and they are just 50 per cent, but there were only 9,647 Portuguese who came, a very small number, of course, in proportion to the great mass of immigrants.

Mr. HARDWICK. Take Italy, for instance.

Mr. BEED. South Italy.

Mr. REED. South Italy? Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. REED. As classified here this shows 40 per cent. Mr. HARDWICK. That is the country, I will state to the Senator very frankly, I have in mind.

Mr. REED. The Senator spoke of Hungary. The Magyar, which is the Hungarian immigration, only showed 7 per cent of illiteracy. So by the Senator's rule it would exclude a good many from the south of Italy, and that is all from the south of Europe. It would not exclude a good many Polish people. Now, let me ask the Senator, Does he much blame the Polander for not having an education under the circumstances he has been compelled to endure?

ompelled to endure?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator wants an answer to that question, I will say to him that I do not blame anybody for not having an education, whether he lives in Poland or America or anywhere else, unless it is the fault of that person.

Mr. REED. Exactly. I ought to put my question in a different form, whether it indicates mental inferiority or lack of good.

form, whether it indicates mental inferiority or lack of good citizenship in a Polander compelled to live under conditions he has been to be illiterate. I do not think it indicates that at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator that in setting up a standard or a rule of any sort you can not possibly set it up without having exceptions, and under the operation of which individual cases of hardship might not appear to result. The same observation that the Senator is making now would apply to every one of the State laws which require the possession of a certain amount of intelligence as a requisite for voting.

Mr. REED. The Senator has been very generous and I do not want to trespass upon his time.
Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is not bothering me.

Mr. REED. I think there is a very wide distinction between denying to men the opportunity to live in a country, provided he is well intentioned toward the country, an honest man, and so forth, and permitting a man to take part in the government of the country. In the one case we reserve the right of govern-ment to those who are supposed to be the more intelligent. In the other case you deny a human being a chance to better his condition. I think there is a very clear line there.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, of course, that takes us right back to the proposition I started with. In the first place, this country is not an eleemosynary institution for the benefit of all the world. In spite of all the beautiful platitudes that have been uttered on this floor and elsewhere on that delightful subject, this is a country that belongs to us and to our people, and it is to be governed and its laws are to be enacted in accordance with what are the wisest policies for us and not according to any other plan or principle on earth.

Now, my own view of this matter, and I apprehend it is the view of a great majority of Senators who support this legislation-I apprehend it is the view of the great majority of the Members of the other House who have supported it-is that one of the principal things we ought to require of every man who comes into this country from a foreign land is that he shall be of a character that makes him fit to become a citizen and voter in the United States of America.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

I yield to the Senator. Mr. HARDWICK.

Mr. GALLINGER. I received a letter a day or two ago from a gentleman who served 12 years in this body, and whose opinions are very highly valued. With the Senator's permission, will read a single paragraph from it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will be very glad to have the Senator

Mr. GALLINGER (reading)-

Did you ever realize that the test does not keep out of the country one single human being who cares to come? Its only effect is to delay an immigrant for a short period while he is learning to read. How long will it take him to learn? Many people can learn in from 9 to 12 months. If he really wants to come, he can afford to delay that length of time, learn to read, and then come to a country where he is expected to be an intelligent and patriotic citizen, qualified to vote in the only real people's Republic in the world.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. And on that point, once on my own initiative, I called attention to the fact that at the worst this could only delay these people for a short time, that they could learn to read in their own language, that being the requirement of the bill. It might work a hardship to a few very old men or old women; but, as a rule, the people who come here are not so far advanced in years that they could not at least learn to read 30 or 40 words, as is required of them, in their own language

Mr. HARDWICK. And if they are incapable of that it is proof positive that they are utterly unfit to become joint inheritors with us of this great country of ours.

Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. REED. The argument of the letter, it seems to me, is completely without merit, or else the purpose of the bill will never be effectuated. The purpose of the bill, says the Senator, is to exclude the peoples from the south of Europe. Now comes the Senator from New Hampshire with a letter from some distinguished friend who says it will not exclude anybody practi-cally because they can qualify in a little while. Hence why pass the bill, for the slight education necessary to read 30 or 40 words would not qualify a man for citizenship; and, according to the Senator's logic, all these people can come in by just a little extra exertion. So you will not shut them out at all, and the test of your bill is shown to be useless if the logic of that letter is correct.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, we can apply the argument exactly the other way, if it amounts to no more than that little hardship on anybody. What objection is there to it?

But the bill gets you nowhere. It comes back to that proposition. While you have made that your test it is not the right test. There ought to be an entirely different test set up. It ought to be a test of manhood, a test of It ought to be determined by races, by the ability character. of an immigrant to assimilate himself into the life of the Nation. But now you say we have set up a test which can be defeated by the most ignorant creature on earth by doing a little work for 30 or 40 days. Hence, you say, it will not do any harm; ergo it will not do any good.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is no need to argue in a circle about this.

That is what you are doing.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the Senator from Missouri is indulging in that delightful pastime. He says it does not do any harm, and yet he is utterly and absolutely opposed to it.

I did not say that it does not do any harm. Mr. HARDWICK. If it does so little harm, it amounts to nothing, and therefore you are strenuously opposed to it.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator will pardon me, because he must not state me incorrectly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to quote the Senator incor-

Mr. REED. I said it would exclude these people. The answer came back they can all defeat the exclusion by doing a few days' work. Hence the statement was made on that side, not by me, that it would do no harm. I say, if that be true it will do no good, because it will not exclude the very people the Senator wants to exclude, to wit, classes of people who happen to live in that part of Europe.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, it amounts to the same thing. No matter who is arguing in a circle, it is arguing in a circle just the same. I say it is not a hardship on these people to require of them that they must evidence the possession of a reasonable amount of intelligence before they shall be admitted into this country. I say the governmental policy of this country ought to be that no man shall be admitted into it who is not capable of being a citizen of this Republic and a voter in it, and I say the best general standard we can set up to determine that fact is the standard already set up in more than 30 American Commonwealths, namely, that the man must, at least, be able to read and write, that he must have that much intelligence before he can vote, in the exercise of those duties and in the discharge of those responsibilities.

Now, that is the thing in a nutshell. We are not hard on these people, because we do not require of them as much as we do of our own. It is a correct governmental policy to say we will not admit to this country people who are not capable of being assimilated into our body politic. It is a correct governmental proposition to say people are not capable of being assimilated into our body politic unless they are fit to become citizens and voters in this Republic. It is already an established American governmental policy that, as a rule, in most of the States the voter ought to have at least enough intelligence to read and write in the English language, and the requirement of this bill is not nearly as strong as that.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will allow me, he should not overlook the fact that in countries where the people have been persecuted along lines that have prevented them from getting an education because of religious persecution they are admitted here.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was coming to that, if the Senator please, in just a moment in connection with another part of the message.

It is a strange thing to me—yea, it is more than passing strange—that Members of this body and people out of it, distinguished men of high public position, skilled in all the polemics of governmental science, should undertake to object to literacy as a test in a matter of this sort when upon that same test rests almost every American institution and the laws of three-fourths of the American Commonwealths. Are we to establish a new dispensation on this subject? Are we to reform our views? Are we to reverse American policies? Are we to say to thirty-odd Commonwealths of the American Union you were mistaken when you said that your own people ought at least to be able to read and write before they can vote, either theoretically or practically, in your State? I do not think so. High as is my respect for his intelligence, I must dissent from the view of the President of the United States. I must dissent from the statement that this bill constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation. On the contrary, the bill conforms the policy of the Nation to existing American policies in three-fourths of the American States. I dissent from the statement that the bill is not justified in principle. On the contrary, the bill rests on the soundest of all fundamental principles, the right of a great people and a great Nation to establish its own standards at its boundaries and to say that men who do not come up to them shall not be admitted simply because the sovereign says not.

The President of the United States concludes his message as

Moreover, even if this test might be equitably insisted on, one of the exceptions proposed to its application involves a provision which might lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations. The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith."

As was suggested by my friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, and under that provision to which the President objects, people who have been persecuted because of their religious faith will be admitted to this country without regard to any other consideration. The Senator may say that that is not logical and that it is sentimental. I am inclined to concede it if you make such a contention. But the President concluded:

Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecution. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible but probable that very serious questions of international justice and comity would arise between this Government and the Government or Governments thus officially condemned should its exercise be attempted.

Mr. President, I by no means concur in that view. It seems to me that without taking issue with the policy that any Government upon the earth may establish and may maintain on the subject of how it shall deal with its own people, we can say, as our fathers have said from the beginning of this country's history, if a man is persecuted for religion's sake alone, we will admit him to this country regardless of what any other country may do or regardless of what any other country may say, without giving just cause for offense to that country

Since the day of the establishment of the Government this country has been the land of civil liberty and of religious freedom. The right of a man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience ought to be unchallenged forever within its limits. For one, even if the exception be sentimental rather than logical; for one, even if some oversensitive foreign power might, if it was seeking cause for offense, find it in this matter, I am willing to take the chances. For one I am willing to say that we still remain true to that fundamental American principle, we are still willing to say that this country shall afford an asylum for the persecuted of every faith, of every creed, and of every religion on this earth of ours.

Mr. President, I am confident, not that this bill is perfect, not that the test it establishes is infallible, not that the standard it applies is the very best that can be devised, but that it is reasonably right, that it is reasonably sound, that it is reasonably accurate, that it is based on correct fundamentals; that in theory it is right and in practice it will be better.

For one I am willing to give my vote to-day, as I have given it so many times in the past, for the passage of this measure, not claiming that it is perfect, not claiming that it is free from fault, but claiming that it is the very best that can be done, and that it is reasonably suited for the purposes that it seeks to accomplish. I am willing to vote for it to-day, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding

Mr. REED. Before the Senator takes his seat I want to get the Senator's view upon the question that I first raised. I do not know whether the Senator was here when I began my

Mr. HARDWICK. I was not. I was away upon committee work, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I called attention to this fact, I think a very serious fact. It will take a moment to state it so that the Senator will understand what I am referring to. Under our treaty with Japan the Japanese Government has contended that its citizens have the right to come to the United States without restriction; that opposition in this country was developing to Japanese immigration. So much was that the case that legislation was being attempted in certain of the Western States. Thereupon our State Department brought about what is known as the gentlemen's agreement, by which the Japanese Government assumes the duty of excluding all but a limited class of its people from the privilege of coming to the United States. Therefore, under that gentlemen's agreement and under the condition which the Japanese Government has created the greater portion of the Japanese are excluded from the country. That is now the present condition, and the bill contains the language "no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. What page?

Mr. REED. Page 8, lines 4 to 6. Will the Senator let me finish the statement so that he will have it complete?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly; I will hear the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Japanese Embassy called the attention of our State Department to this language and asked it to consider whether the language is not of such a character as to amount to a legislative prohibition of immigration whereas the gentlemen's agreement was effected for the very purpose of preventing legislation.

Understanding now that the very purpose of this gentlemen's agreement was to avoid legislation and to let the exclusion rest solely upon the good faith of the Japanese Government, is it not true that the condition has been created whereby the Japanese are prevented from coming? Does not this language has been been conditionable to the Japanese here. when it becomes a law legislatively exclude the Japanese, be-cause the language is "in any way excluded from or prevented from entering"? I will say to the Senator the State De-partment informed me this morning that the Japanese Embassy had called attention to this clause in the bill, and that the State Department requested that I should lay that matter before the Senate. I should like to ask the Senator's view about it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator very frankly about it. The Senator's question is not a new one. It is one that was carefully and accurately considered by the conference committee. I say in answer to the suggestion, coming originally as the Senator says from the Japanese Embassy, and voiced by him on this floor, there can be no possible offense to Japan provided she intends, as we have a right to assume she does, to live up to her agreement.

The law can have no possible application to any Japanese who does not come without violating the good faith of his own Government. Therefore I assume that, while technically it might be applicable to Japan as it is to every other country, it can have no practical application to any Japanese unless the Japanese Government is prepared to say it is not living up in good faith or does not propose to live up in good faith to its own agreement.

Mr. REED. Mr. REED. The Senator misses the point of my inquiry. Mr. HARDWICK. No; I do not miss the point.

Mr. REED. I can not attribute it to his lack of ignorance, but it must be due to my inability to state it. The point is that the gentlemen's agreement was arrived at for the very purpose of preventing legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. For how long?
Mr. REED. Well, at least until some arrangement was made by treaty or otherwise.

Mr. HARDWICK. This is "otherwise," is it not?

Mr. REED. Exactly. The point is that, in order to have everything smooth with the Japanese Government, we in substance agreed not to legislate but to accept in lieu of legislation the assurance of that Government. Now we are legislating; now we are doing the very thing which the agreement was made to avoid. We are putting ourselves in the position possibly, and I think quite certainly, of having enacted a law the effect of which practically is to exclude Japanese because they are already within the class prevented from coming; in other words, we make a "gentlemen's agreement" with Japan to prevent legislation, and we follow that by legislation. Is it wise for us to have any controversy of that kind just now?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator that the conferees were perfectly convinced that there was no possibility of that sort of a situation arising. I will tell the Senator why. Of course the gentlemen who made this agreement on the part of our Government some time ago were making it merely with reference to legislation that was then pending. They could not mortgage the legislative future of this country, and they did not attempt to do so. Nobody, either in Japan or in America, will so contend.

Now, we have no reason to believe—at least, I have none; there may be differences of opinion about that—but I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I have no reason to believe that Japan has violated that agreement. Some people may think otherwise, but I have yet to see any evidence otherwise. The legislation contained in this bill, if it shall become a law, would simply have this effect; it could have no effect on Japan or on Japanese immigration, unless Japan was violating the agreement which she herself had made. If Japan is violating that agreement which she herself made and is not living up in good faith to her own agreement, so far as I am concerned I am willing, be the consequences what they may, now or hereafter, to legislate on this subject as we have legislated. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from South Caro-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to make this suggestion: If this has the effect of law, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] claims and as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] says, it certainly would have no effect upon Japan unless she saw fit to take advantage of the "gentlemen's agreement" and break it. If she does not do that, but lives up to it, this is not effective; and if there should come a time when we should have some other agreement with Japan we could amend this without giving offense to either party to the

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me suggest another idea to the Senator, and I am going to be as frank about this as possible. Suppose we had left this provision entirely out of the bill; that Congress had adjourned; and that Japan had notified us within 30 or 90 days—though I believe they have an arrangement that they may abrogate it at any time within a given period—that she wanted to abrogate it; unless there had been something like this put into the law there would have been no law whatever on our statute books to control this question or to keep it within its present limits.

Then the object is to put it into positive law? Mr. REED. Mr. HARDWICK. The object is to put in such shape that, where Japan has already agreed that she will restrict and con-trol her immigration into this country in a certain way, we are going to fix it so that if she were to abrogate that agreement at any time the law would preserve the status now existing under that agreement.

Mr. REED. In other words, you propose to substitute for this "gentlemen's agreement," which was made to avoid the enactment of a law which would be offensive to Japan, a law that will do the very thing that we made the "gentlemen's agreement" to avoid.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the Senator from Missouri ought to make such a statement as that, because this is an American question. We can not have any disagreement between the Senator and myself, or between any two Senators on this floor, on that question. We have got a right to enact any sort of legislation we please on this immigration question, without regard to any other country on earth, except so far as that right is modified by treaties.

The Senator certainly—entertaining the views which he does on this immigration question—would not want to leave this country in this sort of a fix, that if Japan, the day after this Congress adjourns and after this bill becomes a law, should for any reason of her own, good, bad, or indifferent, give us the notice provided for in that agreement, that she no longer proposed to keep it, this country would have absolutely no protection on that subject. So this language is absolutely necessary. Without even our charging or dreaming of bad faith on her part, we put Japan in the position that she can change her mind, if she wants to do so, and notify us that she has changed it. That is my view of that question.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. Now, Mr. President, that clears up the matter a great deal. Let us state the case in a word; and I appeal to Senators to give this serious thought. We have a treaty with Japan, under which Japan claims the undoubted right to have her citizens come to our country. Legislation was pending which would affect that right. It was stated on the floor of the Senate by distinguished Members, it was stated generally in the press of the country, as coming from the State Department and elsewhere, that if that legislation were enacted it would be offensive to the Japanese people and Government; that it would be offensive to them because it would be the singling out of their people and the stigmatization of their people as unfit to come to America. Thereupon, to avoid that difficulty, to save the Japanese people from that implied humiliation, we agreed privately that in lieu of the enactment of any legislation we would accept the assurance of the Government of Japan that it would exclude its own people. Now, it is boldly admitted here by the proponents of this bill that they are not content to rest upon the "gentlemen's agreement," but that they propose to do just what the Japanese legation suggested, to substitute for that agreement a positive enactment of law-the very thing we have frequently been told on this floor we ought not to do, because it might make trouble between this Government and Japan. We are asked to do that now, at a time in the affairs of this world when the United States ought not to be searching for causes of dispute with great nations. It is now boldly admitted that the committee does propose to substitute a law for a "gentlemen's agreement," an agreement which was made to avoid the enactment of any law, If we do so we may create complications that may be very grave. I say to Senators who have come in since this debate started that the State Department has sent here word asking the Senate to give this matter very serious consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] has laid considerable emphasis on the fact that this legislation will supersede the "gentlemen's agreement," so called, between Japan and the United States. He also contends, I have no doubt, that it would supersede the treaty between Japan and the United States made in 1911, and which, according to its terms, can only be terminated by six months' notice; in other words, the bill which is now pending, if passed over the President's veto, would become the law of the land and would supersede this treaty if in conflict therewith.

Mr. President, I have never hesitated to disagree with the President, I have never hestiated to disagree with the President when I believed him to be wrong. In fact, I have frequently disagreed with several of his predecessors; but when the President in a great crisis sees fit to lay special emphasis on the unwisdom of this legislation, especially now, as a patriotic citizen and public servant I am bound to pay some attention to his request. When the government of a friendly power intimates, as has been stated by the Senator from Missouri, that this legislation is not in harmony with our treaty engagements, I am compelled to give heed to it. I did not favor the "gentlemen's agreement," I will say frankly. I thought it unwise to practice favoritism in the Orient, believing that China and Japan should be treated alike under our laws. Japan's marvelous advance and China's rapid evolution during the last decade has challenged the attention of the entire civilized world.

If the officers of the Japanese Government are deemed competent to pass upon the quality and character of native emigrants to the United States, then the Government of China, perhaps, might have the same courtesy at our hands, they being of equal honor.

That we must have immigration laws there can be no question; that our land should be protected from the lawless, from the criminal, from the anarchistic, there can be no question. We all admit that; but to say in statute law that because a man has not had the education which rises to specified standards he should be prevented from coming into this country, seems to me is very unfair.

I remember in this Chamber not very many years ago to have heard the distinguished Senator from Delaware recount that many of the soldiers of the Revolutionary Army who won our liberty could not even write their own names; yet they were unselfish enough and brave enough and courageous enough to give their lives for the Republic. As a Member of Congress for many years it has come to my knowledge, in the administration of the pension laws, that scores of men who were not able to sign their names had records for unsurpassable bravery in war and were helpful soldiers in the cause of the Union. Education is a very good thing; no sensible man decries it. Many of you have been more fortunate than others in obtaining it, and should thank God for your opportunities. If you go into the Vice President's room adjoining this Chamber, you can read a tablet on the wall to the memory of Henry Wilson, Vice President of the United States and a great Senator, and you will there learn that he was deprived of an education; that he had not even the benefit of a common-school education. He educated himself in the great struggle of life in the school of hard knocks. If you were to make admission to this country dependent upon the ability of an immigrant to parse a sentence, you would close the doors to much desirable immigration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Henry Wilson was born in a town in New Hampshire where there were public schools.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is true, of course, but his biographer says he did not get any of it, free as it was; he was otherwise engaged in a struggle for bread.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, I should challenge that statement; but whether that be so or not, others have the same chance for

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from New Hampshire may have had an excellent chance for self-education.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was pretty much all I got.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But I want to tell the Senator that many of us were limited in that regard not because there were no schools, not because there were no teachers, but because in our youth it was necessary to battle for existence. Some of us could not parse a sentence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, we do not require that of these immigrants. We ask them to read 30 words in their own language.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and the Senator knows, and know, scores of good people who have lived in a land of education and enlightenment who unfortunately can not read or

Mr. GALLINGER. It is their own fault.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, where it is their own fault, I have little sympathy with them, but where it is not their own fault I pity them. I think that the test of good citizenship here is the question of good character in the country from which the immigrant comes. If an immigrant has made a good citizen in the country from which he comes and comes here with every purpose of making this his home and identifying himself with our institutions, then I think he should be given the right to come; and I want to say for the President-and I do not often say much in eulogy of him-that for a teacher, for a professor, for a scholar, for a man who has led thousands of youthful feet through learning's maze to stand against this test because it is not fair, because it is not right, because it may work great hardship, is to his everlasting credit.

His veto message is brief and so full of humanity and sympathy for the unfortunate and the oppressed that I want to read from it.

I can not rid myself of the conviction-

Says the President-

Says the President—that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the allen seeking admission came. The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. Tests of quality and of purpose can not be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Now, Mr. President, for good reasons the President has seen fit to return this billMr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Sena-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the Senator from Indiana. Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator remember a lecture delivered by President Wilson when he was president of Princeton University, some four or five years ago, in which he inveighed against the exclusion of the Chinese by saying that he was not certain but that the Chinese would make far more desirable citizens than the hordes of ignorant, unlettered, vicious, and immoral immigrants who came from southern Europe through the eastern gates of our country?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No. Mr. President; I do not remember that; but I am not so familiar with the writings or the teachings of the President as is the Senator from Indiana. I am, however, familiar with the fact that during the years in which the President has been the Chief Executive of the Nation he has been privileged to change his mind a great many times upon important public questions; and if he has changed his mind upon that question I am very glad; wisdom grows with experience.

I do not believe the literacy test is fair; I do not believe it is the best test. I do not by that mean to criticize the committee who have given the question very great care. I can not believe, however, that it is the only test or the most appropriate test that can be made. I think our consular system could be utilized and would perform a great service if under American law it was made their duty to ascertain the fitness of immigrants who propose coming to the United States for citizenship here. You may say that that is a very great task. So it is, but as a general thing our consular officers are not seriously burdened with work, and if it were necessary for a foreigner to go to the American consul nearest his place of residence and before he could sail convince that officer that he was a man of character, that he had been a good citizen in the town or village or county from which he came, and that he was coming to this country because of the superior oppor-tunities and advantages which it offered him and his children, I think that that method of restricting immigration would be far preferable to this.

That it is not impracticable and that this could be done we have only to consider that something similar must be done before Japanese subjects may come to the United States under the "gentlemen's agreement." They must go to their officials and convince them that they are asking nothing but what they are entitled to, and when they get their Government's approval they may come; not before.

I am going to repeat what I said in the beginning, and then I am going to yield the floor to others, that this legislation, if passed, will, in my opinion, repeal the treaty between Japan and the United States; it will, if passed, nullify the "gentlemen's agreement." If it does, perhaps that agreement can be renewed after this legislation is passed. I have no doubt whatever that after this legislation is passed and becomes a law the President of the United States could forthwith enter into a treaty with Japan by which this very privilege which is now contained in the "gentlemen's agreement" would become the operating principle of the two Governments in the matter of immigration

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.
Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not sufficiently able to understand the bill as to the boundaries established by lines of longitude and latitude to know whether the conferees have changed the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate relative to the treatment of Japanese immigrants. Can my colleague inform me?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand there has been a change as to the geographical lines that were arbitrarily drawn, creating from it zones from which the immigrants may come, but the principle remains the same, and an absolute dead line is drawn through Russia. If born on one side of the line, an immigrant may come; if born on the other side, he can not come, no matter how excellent his character and qualifications.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, as I was one of the conferees, that we changed the lines. The lines as originally drawn, according to the suggestion of the State Department, ran directly north to the Arctic Ocean, including a portion of Siberia. Those lines have been abandoned, and a line of latitude has now been adopted which cuts out only Hindustan and Turkestan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator answer me this question? Is my colleague correct in stating that our action in adopting the conference report will practically repeal the treaty that we now have with Japan?

Mr. LODGE. I totally disagree with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Massachusetts disagrees with me, I almost doubt my own judgment about it. I would hardly want to take issue with him, such is my great respect for his knowledge in such affairs; and yet I still believe, though not quite so strongly, that this bill, if passed, will amount to a repeal of the treaty of 1911 in so far as the law is in conflict with the treaty.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. I suppose that the Senator's construction of the treaty upon which he relies in making his statement is that the "gentlemen's agreement" made three years prior to the execu-tion of the treaty itself was simply, as it has always been called, a "gentlemen's agreement"-a verbal understanding between gentlemen?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Outside of the scope of the treaty. Mr. FALL. And that in terms attached to the treaty of 1911 itself was an agreement in writing by the Japanese ambassador, for his Government, being duly authorized, that they would continue to observe the terms of the "gentlemen's agreement"? The Senator's construction, as I understand, is that it is in the nature, then, of a protocol of equal solemnity with the terms of the treaty itself?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And that this legislation will operate to repeal it if it is in conflict with the treaty; and, I suppose, to that extent at least the Senator from Massachusetts would not be in disagreement with me.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not know what construction the Senator from Massachusetts would put upon it, but I would put the opposite—that if, as the Senator contends, the Uchida declaration is a part of the treaty, the law itself simply providing in terms what the Uchida agreement provides could not be construed in conflict with it. The only proposition, in other words, is this: If the gentlemen's agreement is a part of the treaty, this law recognizing the gentlemen's agreement is not in conflict with the treaty itself.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, yes. Mr. FALL. Now, whether reducing it to a law would not only be a source of annoyance but would be possibly a cause of very serious offense to the Japanese Government is a matter about which I have my own opinion.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator state his own opinion? Mr. FALL. I will at the proper time; but I do not want to take the time of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I feel that this treaty is in conflict with the legislation we are now discussing. I think it is un-I think it is ungenerous and unwise.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COLT. While I do not like to interrupt the Senator, I should like to speak of the literacy test simply from the standpoint of my experience.

For more than 25 years I have had a great deal to do with naturalization. The aliens of all countries, in large numbers, have frequently come before me for naturalization. It has been my duty to examine them individually. I have always made character the test; never the mere fact that the applicant could read or write. From my own experience extending over a generation, seeing these men face to face, and examining them critically as to all the facts of their lives, I have reached the unalterable conclusion that a literacy test of any character is absolutely insufficient, unfair, and unjust.

For this reason, based upon my long experience, I can not conscientiously bring my mind to vote for any such un-American, unfair, and unjust test.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am very happy that the Senator interrupted me, as he has stated my own view much more clearly than I possibly could have stated it myself, and he has stated it out of the fullness of a larger experience than it has been my privilege to have. As an eminent jurist, before whom immigrants have come in the years that have gone, he has had an opportunity to study their character and fitness for citizenship; and he says that literacy is not the appropriate test.

I said a little while ago that the Senator from Delaware put into the Record about two years ago some very striking facts, which I am going to read. He then said:

Some years ago I had occasion to examine the muster rolls of the Continental line of the Revolutionary Army, and I discovered that in many companies as high as 75 to 80 per cent of the soldiers were

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is absolutely in error. We have done nothing which is in violation of any treaty or any illiterates and foreigners. If those men, those illiterates, those foreigners, were then good enough to risk their lives in assisting to obtain our independence, it seems to me that the same class of men are now good enough to assist in the development of this great country.

Seventy-five to 80 per cent of the Continental line of the Revolutionary Army illiterate! That was not their fault. They had neglected no opportunity. They were heroic and courageous and country loving.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, there has been considerable progress in the cause of education since then.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There has been in this country, but there has not been as much progress in the cause of education in some parts of the Old World.

Mr. HARDWICK. There has been a good deal since then. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Some, I grant you, but not so great as here.

Mr. HARDWICK. And most of the countries in the Old World have a very much lower percentage of illiteracy than we have.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; many of them have a much lower percentage of illiteracy than we have.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. President, that does not prevent vice and crime and disloyalty there and it will not

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can not bring myself to vote to pass this Lill over the President's veto.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Immigration, and as one who voted against this bill when it was before the Senate before, I desire to state very briefly the reasons that impel me to vote against this bill now.

In the first place, I think that it is a very inopportune time to pass an immigration bill of this kind. In the midst of an international crisis, such as we are in, I think it is wrong and impolitic to inject anything that will complicate our relations with any foreign Government. I am also opposed to doing anything that has the savor of bad faith, and I must say that, in my judgment, in the light of the understanding we have with Japan, we are trying to do by statute what we are either afraid to do or unable to do by treaty.

As I understand the situation, we have a treaty with Japan admitting citizens of that country into this country. Now, it is said that we have a gentlemen's agreement by which it is understood that no Japanese except certain classes are to be permitted to come here. The consideration for the treaty and the consideration for the agreement is that we are not to do anything in the way of enacting statutes which would change the That consideration is a substantial one, and it is based, treaty. no doubt, upon a desire not to be discriminated against. Here is a great nation that has some pride, a people that does not want to be put in a category where we could point to it and say that it is different from other peoples. The Japanese have asked us to do this thing not because they are anxious to have their citizens come here but because they do not want this great Nation to discriminate against them.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. The treaty of 1911 between this country and Japan provides that the people of that country may enter here for the purpose of trade. It is not a general immigration treaty. It is a treaty of trade and commerce. Therefore I think the Senatrial treaty of trade and commerce. Therefore I think the sena-tor is in error when he says that these people indiscriminately may enter this country under the provisions of that treaty.

Mr. HUSTING. I will ask the Senator whether, in his esti-mation, this law is not repugnant to the gentlemen's agreement that we have?

Mr. PHELAN. It is not repugnant to the gentlemen's agreement. It simply carries out the gentlemen's agreement. The gentleman who is speaking for the United States is the Congress of the United States. The original gentlemen's agreement was the gentleman in the State Department talking with the premier of Japan. Now the gentlemen in Congress are speaking to Japan. It is still a gentlemen's agreement. In this form it should be satisfactory to both parties who are honestly of one mind.

Mr. HUSTING. This is rather involved, but I think it is a fair statement to say that we are trying to do by statute something which is repugnant to the face of the treaty.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

agreement on earth, and I should like the Senator to point out either the agreement or the treaty.

Mr. HUSTING. My understanding is that, by a gentleman's agreement, it was understood that we were not to admit Japanese into this country.

Mr. HARDWICK, No. no.
Mr. REED. That we were not to legislate against them.

Mr. HUSTING. And that we were not to legislate against

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will allow me to state it to him, because I am familiar with it-

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Japanese Government agreed that it would not issue passports to Japanese laborers; and at that time, with an immigration bill pending, because of that agreement, no reference was made to the Japanese question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The gentleman's agreement was that Japan would itself arrest the immigration, in consideration of which we were not to legislate

Mr. HARDWICK. At that time, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. REED. As long as the agreement existed. Now it is pro-

Mr. HARDWICK. Can the Senator refer to the terms of the agreement? He seems to be so familiar with it.

Mr. REED. I can only refer to them in the way they are stated to me

Mr. HARDWICK. Then they are stated erroneously to the Senator

Mr. REED (continuing). By the State Department:

Though not appearing in written agreement, it is understood by both Governments that the United States will not, during the operation of the agreement, legislate against the immigration of Japanese laborers.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, we have not. Mr. HUSTING. I did not intend to enter into a discussion of the details of this agreement. I merely want to say that my understanding is that according to this agreement we agreed we would not do certain things. In doing these things now by statute we are attempting in a way that is repugnant to a certain great power to do the very things that can be done and that are being done now without discrimination against a great nation.

I do not think that this is good policy. Particularly at this juncture, when we are facing a great international crisis, I do not think we ought in any way to further complicate international situations. I want to say that I do not think that at any time, whether it is in the face of a crisis or not, we ought to do anything such as this, because what is made by a treaty should be undone by a treaty, and what is made by a treaty should not be undone by a statute.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. The Senator made a suggestion that the citizens of one country had a right to go into the territory of the other without any restrictions; but that statement seems to have been questioned, and it has been asserted that this was purely a commercial treaty. I have the treaty here before me, and I think the Senator is entirely right:

The citizens or subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses manufactories, warehouses and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

The gentlemen's agreement was reduced to a formal declaration in writing and attached to this treaty, and it modified that provision as to unrestricted travel and trade, and so forth. It is as follows:

In proceeding this day to the signature of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and the United States, the undersigned, Japanese Ambassador in Washington, duly authorized by his Government, has the honor to declare that the Imperial Japanese Government are fully prepared to maintain with equal effectiveness the limitation and control which they have for the past three years exercised in regulation of the emigration of laborers to the United States.

Signed by Y. Uchida.

Mr. HUSTING. That takes care of something that this law is made to take care of, only it does it in a way that is inoffensive to the people affected by it; while here we are gratuitously and wantonly endeavoring to do something that has already been taken care of, and endeavoring to do it in a way that is offensive to the other people. It does not accomplish anything, and it does us harm instead of good.

I am going to vote to sustain the President's veto because of the literacy test. As the President well says in his message:

It is not a test of character, of quality, or personal fitness,

I have lived all my life among people who were, or whose immediate ancestors were, immigrants to this country. Many of those who came to this country were unable to read or write, or to comply with this literacy test. That test, I say, was not one of fitness or of character, but merely one of socalled education. I think, however, we are very likely to ignore the fact that education can be other than book education and book learning. I have met many men whose education, gathered from other sources than books, gathered from experience, surpasses the education of the college graduate who is devoid of experience and devoid of many things that only experience in the school of hard knocks can teach.

Mr. President, it has been asserted here that this merely defers or delays the coming of the immigrant, because he can learn to read and write before he ultimately comes. Why, the very condition that makes him now unable to read and write is going to make it impossible for him to learn to read and write two years from now, or four years from now, or six years from now. It is a violent assumption to think that any great class of people remain ignorant through choice. Their only hope of getting an education is by being admitted into a country where the opportunity is afforded to them to get an education. I know of some people in my little city who came to this country only a few years ago and who were unable to read and write. belonged to the class at which this legislation is aimed. Not long ago I learned that 30 of them, men and women, some of them past the meridian of life, had hired the public-school teacher in the city and were taking night lessons for the purpose of learning to read and write the English language. Many men who have never had the privilege of learning to read and write are the most insistent that their children shall learn to read and write. There is a thirst for knowledge in the breast of every man who has been denied the privilege of drinking of the spring That thirst impels him, when the opportunity of knowledge. offers, to drink deep and long of that spring and to see that his children have the privileges that have been denied to him.

A Member of the House of Representatives told me only a few days ago that his father was unable to read and write when he came to this country, but that when his children-and he had a family of eight-arrived at school age he personally took them to school every morning and called for them in the evening, and told them that he wanted them to have a privilege that had been denied to him.

So I say that many of the men who built this country, who came here when the country needed men who could shoot as well as men who could read and write, proved to be the bulwark of the institutions of this country and helped to build it up. Now, shall we say: "Our people came here; some of them could not read and write; but now that we have come here, now that we have enjoyed these opportunities, there is no more room for any others, and we shall have to close down the gates. We got here, but we are not going to let any others get in here."

Three different Presidents, I believe, have vetoed this very provision in immigration bills. President Wilson has vetoed it twice. Each and every one of them has said that this is a departure from our old-time policy. This is an asylum, not to the undesirable but to the unfortunate and the oppressed. I agree with them that the bill is a wide departure in principle in that it would show that we are beginning to ring down the curtain of a stage which has been open to all the oppressed people of the globe. The literacy-test provision is a provision that has its inception in selfishness instead of unselfishness, that has not a spark of altruism in it; and I say I am going to vote against this bill because I think it is un-American, I think it is bad in principle, and I think it will be harmful in its administration. I think the time is not yet here when we should say to the people of the world that this one asylum, this one country of hope, this one country of opportunity is closed to them forever.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, some 20 years ago, when I was on the Committee on Immigration, as I am to-day, we considered very carefully the suggestion about consular examinations which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has brought forward. It was found to be impracticable, because other nations would not allow our consuls to examine their citizens, and therefore it was abandoned.

Mr. President, I am not going to argue the illiteracy test. It has been discussed here for the last 25 years. I think everything has been said about it that can be said, on both sides. Personally, I do not think ignorance is an advantage in anybody; but the illiteracy test in this bill is a method of restric-tion, and after years of discussion and investigation it has been found that, on the whole, it excluded more undesirable persons and fewer desirable ones than any other.

I merely wish to say a single word on this question that has been raised in regard to the Japanese. Two years ago we placed in the bill a provision, and worded it in a way satisfactory to the Japanese representatives, which excluded persons not eligible for naturalization, adding, except where there was other provision by treaty, convention, or agreement entered into or to be entered into. That provision was accepted by the Japanese at that time as satisfactory, with the addition of that exception. The House repeated that provision this year in its bill. Representations were then made that the Japanese objected to it because they did not like the intimation of race in-feriority, and the Senate changed it to a geographical exclusion so as to reach other Asiatic immigration, and leave the Japanese under what is known as the gentlemen's agreement.

When we came into conference there was great objection to the changes made by the Senate, and the conferees finally decided on a provision which omitted all reference to agree-ments and all reference to eligibility for naturalization, and ments and all reference to eligibility for naturalization, and simply provided that persons now excluded in any way—by law, by treaty, by convention, or by agreement—should continue to be excluded after the passage of this bill. We make no race discrimination. It applies to all the world. It does not, in my judgment, touch the treaty of 1911 at all. That treaty left out the old provisions about immigration, and we were protected by the short time of notice necessary in case the gentlemen's agreement was abandoned.

the gentlemen's agreement was abandoned.

Mr. REED. Mr. President— Mr. LODGE. I have only a minute.

We do not affect the treaty. They desired us not to make any allusion to the gentlemen's agreement. We have made none. We do not change the gentlemen's agreement in any way. none. We do not change the gentlemen's agreement in any way. We leave it standing exactly as it is, and we cast no reflection on any race, nor do we make any discrimination. The gentlemen's agreement applies only to labor. All other classes are specifically excepted in the immigration law—all those who appear enumerated in the treaty. It applies only to labor; and the provision shutting out all aliens now excluded is simply carrying out existing provisions. The gentlemen's agreement will go right on if Japan chosess to whold it will go right on if Japan chooses to uphold it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT (at 4 o'clock p. m.). The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement the question is, Shall the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

dent of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Smith], from the operation of which I am relieved on this vote. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GOMMAN]. The Senator from New York would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea." However, I am privileged to transfer my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and record my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and record my vote in the affirmative.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent on account of illness. I am paired with him for the day, but with the understanding that he would vote the same as I do on this question. I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea." Mr. LEWIS (when the name of Mr. Lea of Tennessee was called). Allow me to announce the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lee], who is detained by illness in his family. If present, he would vote in favor of the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when Mr. McLean's name was called).

My colleague [Mr. McLean] is confined to his house by illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. If my colleague were here and at liberty to vote, he would vote to sustain the President's veto and would therefore vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN (when Mr. Newland's name was called).

The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] is confined to his home by illness

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. O'GORMAN's name was called). The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is unavoidably absent.

He is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], as beretofore announced. If the Senator from New York were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the aminiative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Oliver]. He is absent, and not knowing how he would vote I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CUMMINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitch-COCK], but I understand that if present he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr.

Goff] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce a pair between the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Catron] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen], and also a pair be-tween the Senator from Maine [Mr. Fernald] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard].

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business, the Agricultural appropriation bill, be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June

RECESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 5 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, the Senate stands in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Thereupon the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). cording to the unanimous-consent agreement, House bill 9533 is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there are only about eight or nine Senators present. I stated to-day that I would call for a quorum at the opening of the session to-night. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he thinks we ought to proceed with the consideration of this measure with the eight or nine Senators who are present?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe a good many more Senators will be here, and if you consider the presence of Senators in the daytime, many bills are considered with less than the number who are now present.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to embarrass the Senator's bill. I know how anxious he is to get it through. I have no special objection to it myself. I think it is a very important measure; it affects a great many people; and I will not at this time call for a quorum if the Senator thinks it would be well to go on with Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it would be well to go on with it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. What was the statement of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I said I would not make the point of no quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Has not the Senator already done so?

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will so hold for the present; however, he does not know but that the point has been made. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The first matter that was passed over is section 29.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There were objections to points before that. I have an amendment to come in ahead of section 29.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am speaking of committee amendments. I am trying to get the committee amendments through. The first committee amendment that was passed over was section I tendered an amendment in behalf of the committee, and I ask now that that be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not want to make myself disagreeable, but it seems to me that this is a farce.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me say— Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point of no quorum, Mr. Presi-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will not do that. We have been trying for weeks and weeks to have this bill considered.

Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point of no quorum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Chamberlain Jones
Chilton Kenyon
Clapp Lane
Fletcher Lewis
Johnson, S. Dak. Martine, N. J. Sheppard Simmons Pomerene Ransdell Stone Thomas Vardaman

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, let me announce the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], caused by illness in his family.

I desire to state that the junior Senator from Mr. CLAPP. South Carolina [Mr. Smith] is unavoidably detained on account of sickness in his family, which is quite serious. He has a pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling]. I will let this statement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] are unavoidably detained by illness.

Mr. VARDAMAN. A good many other Senators are absent from some cause, I do not know what.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is manifest that we can not get a quorum on such a bitter cold night, and we would only torture ourselves by remaining here. Therefore, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, Febru-'ary 6, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 5, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God of Hosts, mighty to deliver and strong to uphold, be with us in this hour of extreme peril, that we may be susceptible to Thy counsels and guided by Thy light in the affairs of state, that we may move with calmness and deliberation, that our judgments may be in accordance with Thy will. Grant, O most merciful Father, that we may not be drawn into the vortex of war and the evils incident thereto, but be able to maintain peace and tranquillity with all the world. Unite us as a people in all measures to secure our rights and maintain our honor in right and truth and justice. In the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

REGULATION OF ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES BY CARRIERS.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 563) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

GRANTING PUBLIC LANDS TO THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15156) granting public lands to the State of Oklahoma.

LANDS WITHIN THE FORMER UNCOMPARIGRE INDIAN RESERVATION. The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 43) in relation to the location, entry, and patenting of lands within the former Uncompangre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite or other like substances, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The bill is ordered stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is getting late in the session and I think we ought to clean up the Unanimous Consent Calendar on bills that have not been on the calendar a long time in order that in the closing days of the session it may be possible upon a call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar to reach bills which have just been put on the calendar. There may be times when we would only have a few minutes, but if we have the calendar clogged at the head there is no chance of getting to those bills. Therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is ordered stricken from the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

DONATING LAND TO ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3699) to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes the tract of land known as the powder-house lot.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill was under consideration on the last unanimous-consent day, and I interposed an objection, but since then I have given the matter further consideration. I recall that some years ago we granted to the city of Baltimore the right to use the abandoned Fort McHenry Reservation upon certain conditions. the gentleman is willing to incorporate in this bill a provision that in case the War Department should at any time have need for this land, I will withdraw my objection; but I can not allow the bill to pass in its present form. And I may say to the gentleman that in the case of the Fort McHenry Reservation at Baltimore an amendment to that effect was carried as a part of the bill.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman submit the amendment that he proposes?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would suggest to the gentleman that, on page 2, after the word "purposes," in line 5, he offer an amendment as follows: "or whenever the Secretary of War may determine that the use of said ground is important and necessary for Government purposes."

Mr. SEARS. Of course I prefer that the bill should go through in its present shape; it is only for park purposes; but I will accept the amendment of the gentleman and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman that I purpose to leave out the word "important," because the word "necessary" will carry the full purposes of the amendment which I have in mind.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I may say that, having reported this bill from the Committee on the Public Lands, I have talked with a few of the members of the committee, and I am satisfied that they will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land situate in the city of St. Augustine, Fla., known as the powder-house lot, heretofore set aside as a military reservation of the United States, and lately abandoned as such military reservation, be, and same is hereby, donated to the municipality of the said city of St. Augustine, in the State of Florida, to be used by said municipality for public-park purposes.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to execute and deliver to the duly constituted authorities of the said city of St. Augustine, Fla., such conveyances as may be necessary to vest the fee-simple title to said powder-house lot in the said city of St. Augustine, Fla., attaching to such conveyances the condition that whenever the said powder-house lot shall cease to be used by the city for public-park purposes, then and in that event title to the said powder-house lot shall revert to the Government of the United States.

Mr. STALEGORD. Mr. Speaker, L. offers the following approach

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Stafford: Page 2, line 5, after the comma, insert the following; "or whenever the Secretary of War may determine that the use of said ground is necessary for Government purpose."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

UNALLOTTED LANDS IN BLACKFEET RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 793) modifying and amending the act providing for the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

CREEK NATION UNALLOTTED LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes

The title of the joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. HASTINGS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask if there was any objection on behalf of the committee to eliminating the words "or leased"?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; I object to that.
Mr. HASTINGS. The words "or leased" on line 3 of page 2, and the words "or lease" on line 5 of page 2?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; I object to that. Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that a large part of these Indians are in my district, and I am opposed to further leasing of these lands, because I believe it will delay the winding up of their affairs. I have no objection to this resolution being considered, provided those words are eliminated.

Mr. MURRAY. The gentleman can offer his amendment, but I shall oppose it.

Mr. HASTINGS. If that is not agreed to, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one:

COMPOSITORS AND BOOKBINDERS, GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6626) to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office.

The title of the bill was read,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have heretofore purchased or may hereafter purchase any of the lands of the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon, and have made or shall make full and final payment therefor in conformity with the acts of Congress of March 3, 1885, and of July 1, 1902, and subsequent acts respecting the sale of said lands, shall be entitled to receive patents therefor upon submitting satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Inferior that the untimbered lands so purchased are not susceptible of cultivation or residence and are exclusively grazing lands, incapable of any profitable use other than for grazing purposes.

Sec. 2. That where a party entitled to claim the benefits of this act dies before securing a patent therefor it shall be competent for the exceutor or administrator of the estate of such party, or one of the heirs, to make the necessary proofs and payments therefor to complete the same; and the patent in such cases shall be made in favor of the heirs of the deceased purchaser, and the title to said lands shall inure to such heirs as if their names had been especially mentioned.

was read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DIRECTORS IN BANKS ON STATE BORDER LINES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4256) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit national banks located near the boundary line of adjoining States, subject to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, to select only a majority, instead of three-fourths, of their directors from residents of the State in which they are respectively located.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

MISSOULA NATIONAL FOREST, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5082) adding certain lands to the Missoula National Forest, Mont.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following unsurveyed areas which by protraction of the public surveys in adjoining townships would probably be described as section 1, section 2, section 11, and section 12, all in township 9 north, range 15 west; and section 25, section 36, all in township 10 north, range 15 west, Montana principal meridian, be, and the same are hereby, included in and made a part of the Missoula National Forest, subject to all prior valid adverse rights, and that said lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting national forests. national forests.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 4, after the word "would," by striking out the word "probably."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Colorado think the committee amendment is important?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I do not think it is. Mr. MANN. Does not the bill truthfully state the case?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; but the committee seemed to think that to legislate for what would "probably" happen was not very good form.

Mr. MANN. It is probable that it will be so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is not certain that it will be.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. As a matter of fact, the bill is correct the way it is, but the committee seemed to doubt the wisdom of legislating on a "probability." Some one suggested that it would be better to amend the bill.

Mr. MANN. That may be; but that goes to the merits of the

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Because we are legislating on a probability.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MANN. You have not described the land, except by what its probable description will be. I do not think it is worth while to send the bill back to the Senate for an amendment that is not important.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House disagree to the committee amendment, so that the bill will not have to be returned to the Senate for concurrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question being taken, the committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question. How much land will be added to the Missoula Forest by the passage of this bill? Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The acreage is given in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, on page 2 of the report. I think about a township; that is my recollection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many acres will that be?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are usually something like 23,000 acres in a township.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain the reason for adding that acreage to this national forest?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is desired primarily, I apprehend, by the Forest Service. The land has been determined to be suitable for national forest-reserve purposes. The people there are desirous of preserving it in that manner.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do stockmen have any interest in this accretion to the land of this forest reserve?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not think so. There was nothing of that kind apparent before the committee. There is quite an amount of timber on this land that it is desired to conserve. I do not think it is a stockman's proposition at all. Both of the departments-the Interior and Agriculture-have investigated the matter, and both favor this bill; and the people up there and their representatives in the Senate and House seem to favor it

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It comes to us from the department?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; there is a favorable report here from both departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the land wooded now? Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; to some extent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it used for grazing purposes? Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It will be used for grazing purposes, certainly, but there are from 5,000 to 10,000 feet of timber to the acre on the land, according to this report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain just how it will be dealt out for grazing purposes?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The same as all other nationalforest lands. They are under the supervision of the forest rangers, and permits are granted to stockmen and farmers for a certain number of head of cattle or horses or sheep each year, and the rangers designate the places where the stock shall range. They have absolute control over the range, and they are very cautious not to allow the overstocking of the range. As a matter of fact, we think they are, in some cases, unnecessarily cautious about allowing stock on the range, because, cattle being so high, there is a great demand to put more cattle on the forest reserves everywhere for the increasing of the beef supply—a much greater demand in some cases than the Forest Service will allow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the effect of the passage of this bill be to limit the opportunities of those individuals who desire to take up land and establish homesteads on the land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Homesteaders?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. Will it limit the opportunity of homesteaders to take up lands?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I think anyone who knows the workings of the forest reserves in the West will say that the putting of land into a forest reserve does very much impede the settlement of the land by homestead entrymen, as far as that is concerned. It is a pretty hard proposition for a man to get a homestead in a forest reserve these days.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What will the Government get out of this when it is leased to the stockmen?

Mr. TAYLOR. It will get a revenue from the grazing permits, and then it sells the timber. The idea is that the land is so much more valuable for forest purposes, for grazing, and for timber sales and timber conservation than it is for possible homesteads that the departments have recommended that it be put over into the forest reserve, and the committee have acceded to that recommendation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Taylor of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, FORMER FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5612) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, there are some phases of this question about which I would like to be informed; but it would take nearly half an hour, and I do not think we should take up that time to-day. I have no objection to the bill being passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

ENLARGED-HOMESTEAD ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1061) to allow additional entries under the enlarged-homestead act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one quarter section of land may make entry and obtain title under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for enlarged homesteads," approved February 19, 1909, for such an area of public land as will, when one-half of such area is added to the area of the lands to which he has already obtained title, not exceed one quarter section: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to soldiers' additional homestead entries made under section 2306, United States Revised Statutes, or acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "nine," insert "and an act of June, 1910, entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead.'"

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question for information. Do I understand that this bill applies to all who may take up homesteads in any State in the Union? That is what the bill says. If so, it is a bad bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This is what I understand the situation to be: At the present time we have a law providing that where a man has taken a homestead of 40 acres or 80 acres, or 120 acres, he may go and take an additional homestead of enough land to make up the amount of 160 acres. In other words, every man or head of a family is supposed to have a homestead right of 160 acres of good land. If he has exercised his right on only one-quarter or one-half or three-fourths of that right, he can take an additional quantity of land under existing law sufficient to make 160 acres. What this bill provides is that where a man has taken, say, 80 acres of good land and consequently has an additional right to take 80 acres more of good land, if he can not get 80 acres more of good land, he may be given the right to take 160 acres of arid land—dryfarming land. The present law requires a man to make up his shortage out of whatever he can get. This bill allows a man, instead of making up his complement of 160 acres out of dry. land, to take twice the amount additional of dry land that he would be entitled to if he got good land. If a man has 80 acres and has the right to take up 80 acres more of good land, he can take twice that amount of the dry land. This is simply a matter of common fairness and justice. There is nothing about it that is novel.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does this apply to homesteading the dry

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is all. This bill simply carries out the principle that was established by the enactment of the enlarged-homestead law. The 320-acre dry-farming law, namely, that 1 acre of good, irrigated land is worth at least 2 acres of dry nonirrigable land.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Following up the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is meant that the man who has 80 acres in Idaho can lay claim to 80 more in New Mexico?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He can take the 160 acres of the dry land wherever he can find it vacant.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He can jump from State to State under this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He can do that now. only homesteaded 80 acres he can jump from one State to any other State in the Union in order to get his additional 80 acres of good land. He can do that under existing law. But 80 acres of dry land will not support anybody. We want to give a man twice as much poor land as he is entitled to of good land,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it mean that a homesteader could ask for 40 acres of land in one State, 40 in another, 40 in another, and 40 in another, and so get a foothold in four States?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; not at all. This applies only to those who now have under the present law a right to take an additional tract of land sufficient to make up 160 acres. A man only has one additional right. He can not exercise three or four, or even two. There is not enough of good land now left vacant, and this bill will encourage the settlement of the dry, barren, comparatively worthless land.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that the homesteader could go elsewhere and take up an additional amount of land with the 160 acres.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; he can go now and do that, but there is not enough good land that he can take.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Granted that he has the right to take the 160 acres, is there anything in existing law or in this bill that would limit his right to make a selection within a certain area of a certain State?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There might be considerable confusion if the claimant had the right to take up land in three or four States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There can be no abuse under this proposition. The Interior Department is thoroughly in accord with the bill. This is simply giving a man an opportunity to make a home, which he can not do on 40 or 80 acres of land that can not be irrigated.

Mr. FORDNEY. The act referred to here, if I am correct, requires the homesteader himself to take land adjoining his homestead or in that vicinity. This bill permits a man to take land in Colorado and then go into any State in the Union and make up the balance.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman from Michigan is misinformed as to the existing law. The existing law is that a man can go to any place in the United States wherever he can find the additional 80 acres or additional 120 acres of vacant land and homestead enough of it to make up his 160-acre homestead.

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, whether that is the law or not, this is a bad bill that permits a man to take up dry land in Colorado and then go into another State of the Union and take up enough more to make up his complement. I will tell the gentleman where he will land. He will throw this excess land into the hands of the land sharks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no. That is utterly impos-

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; a law will be passed making such right assignable, as was done in the soldiers' additional home-

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Congress will not do that any more

Mr. FORDNEY. But the gentleman and I may not be here forever, and they will do it, the same as they did in the former case. That is existing law now, so far as additional homestead cases are concerned applying to soldiers of the Civil War.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That has no application to this.
Mr. FORDNEY. That will be the result in this case if this bill is not so amended as to require the homesteader to locate the additional and in the State where he took his original homestead.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, by inserting, after the word "nine," in line 8, the following: "and an act of June 17, 1910, entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to oppose the bill at the proper time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it looks to me as if there was no good reason why this bill should pass at

The gentleman from Michigan has raised an interesting question which the gentleman from Colorado does not fully answer. Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I think I can answer the suggestion raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. He wants to limit the entries to the State where the original entry was located. If that amendment were adopted it would bar a great many worthy persons. For instance, many prospective entrymen from the State of Michigan and other Eastern States who have taken 80 acres would be prevented from going to any other State and exercising the right of additional entry which is provided for in the general law, and which is to be extended under the enlarged-homestead law, by this bill; so that the proposed amendment would work a great injustice to a great many entrymen in the older settled States where the public lands have already been entered. This law simply extends the privilege of taking an additional entry under the enlarged-homestead act to settlers who have partially exhausted their homestead rights, many of whom were settlers in the older States and who desire to go into the Western States and enter the public land.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, how much more time have I under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to decline to yield, in order that I may make my statement. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney] raises what I consider to be a very interesting question, if not a vital point, namely, that this may encourage land sharks. Gentlemen from the Western States will laugh at the notion, but it seems to me the purpose of the homestead laws is to enable a man to take up a homestead—not primarily to speculate in land. Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell me why a man who takes up less than 160 acres in Idaho should want to take up an additional number up to 160 acres in New Mexico and attempt to straddle as between the two States? It is possible this would put him in position to hold somebody up. The gentleman may say this is an unfair proposition; but if a man is honestly endeavoring to make a homestead out in Idaho it seems to me the only reason for his taking up an additional piece of land in New Mexico or Nevada or any other State would be to stop somebody else getting it. It may be a little corner 10 acres; it may be 40 acres, or whatever is remaining of the 160 acres which the gentleman indicates every homesteader is entitled to; but just to that extent he may prevent a development in the new location. The law, according to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] gives him liberty to go anywhere upon the face of the earth within the United States; and if it does give him that liberty, then he is in position, like many men who get franchises from legislatures, to prevent other people from doing

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, all of the Western States are filled with people from Michigan and Illinois and Kansas and all of the Middle States, as well as the East. They come from States where they have used their homestead rights on 40 or 80 acres, and this is especially true in Kansas and Nebraska and some of the recently settled States. They go out to the West, and when they get there they want to take up another piece of land. They may have lest out at home; they may have become broke. If they go to the Western States, and if we tell them they have to go back to the States, as the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] well said, and get this additional land from the States from which they came, it amounts to an absolute denial of right to them. If we also say to them, "You can have 80 acres of good land in this State," they say, "I can not get it and it is not here." That is largely true, and if we put them on 40 acres or 80 acres of dry land, absolutely worthless, you might say, they can not make a living for themselves and family, whereas if they can take 160 acres of this dry land they can. It will be in the State where they live; it will not be the State from which they come, but the State where their home will be. They want the land, and if they can take 160 acres they can make a living. If they are held to 80 acres, they can not; and that is all there is to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Are they required to live on this new land which they take?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Surely. I understand so. is my understanding, though I have not read the bill this morning

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the bill that requires them to live upon the land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have not read it this morning. Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. This is intended to enlarge the act of March 2, 1889, which allows a citizen from Michigan, as has been suggested by my friend, who has exercised a homestead right upon 40 or 80 acres, because there is no further land in that State, to go into the Western States and complete their homestead rights. Under the act of March 2, 1889, their right to complete their entry only went to 160 acres. If they filed on 80 acres and made proof in Michigan, they can only file on 80 acres in Colorado or in Kansas or Nebraska, where the 320-acre law obtains.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A homesteader who located in one State, as indicated by the gentleman, could not live in the other State, could he?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. He has exhausted his right in Michigan. He goes to Colorado. The law says in Colorado that he can take 80 acres under the act of March 2, 1889, but he must live upon it and comply with the homestead laws in Colorado.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point is that he can not live on these two tracts, and therefore he takes one for speculative purposes, possibly.

Mr. MANN. No; this is the question: Can he, having taken 80 acres in Michigan and then taken 80 acres in Colorado, under this bill take 80 acres in New Mexico?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. No, indeed; he can not. He has ex-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can he take it in New Mexico if he has taken less than 80 acres in Colorado? Mr. MANN. That is the point.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. He can only have one full entry. he has taken 80 acres in Michigan and goes to Colorado, under the act of March 2, 1889, he has the right under the present law to increase his entry up to 160 acres only. This law will give him a right to file on 160 acres in 320-acre area instead of only 80 acres

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman from Colorado to make clear how a homesteader in Nevada, living in good faith on the ground-less than 160 acres-he has taken up, can proceed then to take a fraction of 160 acres in some other State. I would like some gentleman to clear that up.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will permit, the act of March 2, 1889, only granted this additional right to those who have completed titles on the original entry, so that the man would have to have a complete title first.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The homesteader is obliged to live on the ground?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In good faith, Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How can he, a man of small means, live on two or three pieces of ground?

Mr. GANDY. That is the question I answered, that he can not take additional until he has completed title to the original. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How can he utilize the second piece of ground if he is living in good faith on the other? Mr. GANDY. If he has completed title to the original, then he can go where he wants to. He would simply move over to the

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can he do it by proxy?

Mr. GANDY. No, sir. Mr. TIMBERLAKE. He must comply fully with the homestead law as to residence and cultivation on the additional

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. I want to get a little information. Michigan has been referred to. Suppose a man some years ago took a homestead in Michigan of 80 acres. Does not the law as it now exists authorize him to take the balance of the 160 acres in one of the Western States?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes,
Mr. MANN. Then does not this law authorize him to take an additional 160 acres where he can find it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; this law will take the place of his right under the existing law. He can avail himself of either the present law or this one, and not both. It makes the 320-acre law applicable. In other words, he is to be given 2 acres of dry land, if he wants it, instead of 1 acre of good land. Most people would much prefer 160 acres of good irrigated land to 320 of nonirrigable land.

Mr. MANN. Suppose he has taken another 80 acres?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Then he does not get any right under this law at all. If he has already gotten his full 160 acres. right, he can not get any more. This bill only applies to those who have a right to take an additional piece of good land sufficlent to make, with what they have already taken, an aggregate amount of 160 acres. Generally speaking, those people can not find such a tract of good land, so we propose to give them twice as much poor land as they are entitled to of good land. Mr. MANN. Well, suppose he has taken 78 acres, which is not the full 160 acres. He has taken 80 acres, say, 40 years ago. He takes 70 acres in Colorado last year. Now, how much more can he take in New Mexico under this law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He can not take any. He has exhausted his additional rights and he is done; that is, this law would not give him any more.

Mr. MANN. He has already taken that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MANN. That is not apparently what the bill says.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is the practice. I think the gentleman from Colorado, my colleague Mr. TIMBERLAKE, for many years in the United States Land Office, can answer that possibly more positively than I can,

Mr. MANN. Some years ago when I first came here there were certain private, what we called soldier, rights, where a man had taken a homestead of less than 160 acres, and there were a few cases, not very many probably, where those men or their heirs were entitled to take additional land up to 160 acres. I had several cases in my district of people who had no intention of homesteading the land at all and who sold their rights. Now, Congress does not want to repeat that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; we do not want to permit that any more.

Mr. MANN. Those probably are all exhausted. We do not want ever to give them that right again.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this ought to be very clear to all. The homestead rights in the Eastern States allowed a man to take 160 acres in Michigan, we will say, and a man was only able to get 80 acres. He makes final proof of that. He may have disposed of it; he may have lost it; out he has an additional 80 acres coming to him from the United States Government under the act of March 2, 1889. He comes to Colorado. He tells the officers there he has exhausted 80 acres of his 160 homestead right. He offers to file on 80 acres. The department now recognizes that 80 acres taken of land that has been designated under the 320-acre act is not giving him his just right, and therefore they ask by this bill that he be permitted to take twice as much as he was entitled to where he exhausted his prior entry. That is just it. He must comply with all the provisions of the homestead law on this land, and there is not any chance for speculation, suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], at all, because he must comply with all the provisions of the homestead law on this land. and if he should take, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] says, 80 acres in one place he would be entitled to take twice as much some place else. The law provides he can only have one additional entry. That exhausts his right.

Mr. MANN. Let me understand that. Suppose a man took 80 acres in Michigan-using it as an illustration-and has now made another entry for an additional 80 acres in Colorado under the existing law; under the terms of this bill, then, he could simply take 160 acres of dry land instead of 80 acres that is not dry land?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Not if he has already filed on that 80 acres in Colorado, I will say to the gentleman. This bill is not retroactive, but on and after the passage of this act such cases would be entitled to take in Colorado twice the area.

Mr. MANN. Well, the bill says any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one-quarter section of land may take it, and I still think he would be entitled to the privilege in this bill, and I think that is what the bill is for.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It would be true if they were entitled to more than one additional entry; but they are not.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Timberlake] a question. Suppose the homesteader is now in Colorado and has not proved up completely on this 80 acres; must he remain on that 80 until he proves up his claim and then move to his 160, or can he remain on the 80, with the claim not yet proved up, and get his 160 somewhere else?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Under this law it does not provide for a man who is now holding an entry in Colorado or anywhere else. It is for the entryman who comes after the passage of this bill that this provision is for.

Mr. MEEKER. Well, if he now has only a part of that to which he is entitled and applies for more land under this, that does not shut that man out, does it?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. He has to make proof on whatever he is holding before he is entitled to file for additional land, except the lands are contiguous.

Mr. MEEKER. And move from the present holding to the new claim and prove that up?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MEEKER. I might say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] in explanation that if he had ever seen this land, he could understand why a New Mexico farm would be in Texas the next day. A good wind would blow it over. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have seen this land, and I have no desire to live there.

Mr. FORDNEY. This bill says "any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one-quarter section of land may make entry and obtain title under the provisions of the act entitled," and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, this bill certainly opens a way for speculators and land sharks, absolutely. A short time ago I purchased a piece of land from a party where title had never changed hands; the title was in the original entryman and never changed hands except from the Government to the original entryman, and that entry was made more than 60 years ago, and if this bill passes you are going to permit every man who took land under the homestead laws in any State of the Union to come back now and appeal to Congress to make that right transferable, as was done in the case of soldiers' additional homesteads. You are going to open the way for speculation, and not 10 per cent of the original entrymen will be benefited by such an act. Thus, the men who took up homesteads in the State of Michigan will not go to the Pacific Coast States now and take up an additional 40 acres or 80 acres, or any portion of their original claim that they did not get.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They will not get it unless they go there and live there.

Mr. FORDNEY. My friend, I will say that in a very short time entrymen who have taken land under the homestead laws will appeal to Congress, as they have in many other cases, in such volume that they will force you into passing a law that will make that right transferable.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They can not force this Congress

Mr. FORDNEY. They did it in the case of the soldiers' additional homestead entries

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, they do things for the soldiers they would not do for others.

Mr. FORDNEY. What more right has the soldier under his right to take additional land than any other entryman? cause in his original entry the service in the Army was applied on his entry of his homestead. Therefore, if the homestead laws require five years' settlement, whatever time he had served in the Army, not exceeding four years, would be applied on the homestead, and what he had to do was to live on the land for five years less what time he had served in the Army.

Therefore that benefit was given to him that was given to no other entryman, and immediately he came to Congress and asked to make that right transferable, and it is transferable to-day, in the hands of his heirs or their heirs, I will say to my friend.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I know that the soldier's additional scrip matter has caused a great deal of trouble and is one of the things that has created a great deal of adverse sentiment in public-land matters in the West.

Mr. FORDNEY. Pardon me. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. Wickersham] some time ago, in speaking of that Alaska fishery bill that was up here, where shore rights were acquired on the shore by the holders of this scrip, said those holders would take unsurveyed lands in Alaska. The gentleman was mistaken on that, but after application is made and the survey of the land has been made, then soldiers' additional homestead scrip will enter that land. You will give additional homesteads to entrymen who have taken lands that have been allotted for more than half a century if you pass this law.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. STOUT. I would like to ask the gentleman if there will be any more probability of such a contingency arising under this act than under the present act? What would make the difference?

Mr. FORDNEY. I am not clear that the present act gives the right that we are now discussing. Maybe the gentleman has read the law. I have not. I would like to have the law read before we pass this bill, because it refers to an act that we do not have before us. I know that this injustice has been done in the past and is likely to be done again and the land put into the hands of speculators.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Texas fighting this amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to strike out three words?

Mr. HARDY. Yes. I wanted to see if I understand this proposition correctly. Some time ago I had a letter from a constituent of mine, stating that his sister had gone into New Mexico under the law and made a homestead entry. She had gone into New Mexico and had been forced to leave her home before perfecting her right. It was held to be forfeited. She took it up with the department, and it is now being reheard.

Now, my understanding of it is that under our homestead law any citizen of the United States, in order to entitle himself to a homestead, has to do certain things, to live on the land a certain continuous length of time. He did not have to say he was a pauper and had no property elsewhere. He might have had twice the value elsewhere. But if he goes to this public domain and complies with the law he becomes entitled to a homestead there, and the law makes no distinction as to whom it gives the homestead.

Now, if I understand it aright, a man may years ago have taken up a homestead in Michigan. He complied with the law until he perfected his title. He sold that land for cash, and takes the cash with him and goes to the far West. As I understand it, he is entitled, just as though he had never preempted a single bit of land, to enter again and get more homestead rights. That is what I want to know about.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes. Mr. SMITH of Idaho. He can enter additional land only between 160 acres and the amount he originally entered. He can only take up the difference between what he has entered in his former homestead and 160 acres.

Mr. HARDY. Then, in order to do that, he must have perfected his right to the land that he has already got and must live upon the remaining land that he proposes to enter, so that he gets what he is entitled to under the law, and no more, and that by fully complying with the law as to all of it and each part of it.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY, Yes. Mr. NORTON, Th The gentleman is using the words "preempted" and "homesteaded" indiscriminately. If a man has made homestead entry and proof on 80 acres, under the present law he would be entitled to take up another 80 acres under the homestead law anywhere in the United States, but he would not be entitled to take any additional land under the enlargedhomestead act, which permits an original homestead entryman to make entry on 320 acres of land. That is the defect that this legislation is intended to cure.

Mr. HARDY. In other words, this legislation is intended to give the original settler the full amount of homestead he was entitled to, but he must live on the land in order to be entitled to it?

Mr. NORTON. No; that is not right.
Mr. HARDY. I would like to get a proper understanding

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. HARDY. Yes. Mr. MONDELL. A former entryman of less than 160 acresthat is, a man who may have entered and perfected title to 40 acres, or 120 acres, or 140 acres-is, under the homestead law, entitled to make an entry of enough land which, added to his original entry, will make 160 acres.

Mr. HARDY. Right there I want to ask a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. Mr. HARDY. Can he make his entry on 60 acres, the remaining part of the 160, without going and living on that 60

Mr. MONDELL. No. He must comply with all the provisions of the law.

Mr. HARDY. He can not m perfected his title to the first? He can not make the second entry until he has

Mr. MONDELL. There is a law under which he can make additional entry before he has perfected the first entry, but that would not be affected by this legislation.

Mr. HARDY. What I want to get at is: He is not allowed to just hold some land over here and at the same time take up other tracts in different places without living on it and otherwise complying with the law; so that if residence is one of the requirements, as it is, he can not homestead two pieces of land in different localities at the same time. If he could do that, he could settle and live in one place and use the rest of his claim to speculate on.

Mr. NORTON. This legislation does not contemplate that.
Mr. MONDELL. The only change that it makes in the la

Mr. MONDELL. The only change that it makes in the law that has been on the statute books for many years is that a former homestead entryman, in taking his additional land, may secure of the comparatively poor lands that are left twice the acreage that he could heretofore have secured.

Mr. HARDY. But whenever he takes any new land he has got to live on it and comply with the law?

Mr. MONDELL. That is the intent of this act, although I am frank to say that that is not very clear from a hurried reading of the act.

Mr. HARDY. It ought to be clear.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. I shall endeavor to state to the gentleman, briefly, what this legislation contemplates. For illustration, say that a man has made proof upon 120 acres of land under the homestead law. Under the existing law he has a right to go out anywhere where there is land subject to homestead entry and take up a sufficient amount to make a total of 160 acres. That is, a man who had already homesteaded 120 acres would be entitled to take up 40 acres additional.

Mr. HARDY. Yes. Mr. NORTON. This legislation permits him to take up 80 acres under the enlarged homestead act. Under existing law he is not permitted in a case of that kind to take any land under the enlarged homestead act. The enlarged homestead act permits one to take up, instead of 160 acres as an original homestead, as much as 320 acres, or twice the area. That is all this does. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] seemed to think this legislation would give room for fraud and for speculation in public lands. It will not permit this at all, because the last provision in it eliminates the question of additional homestead entries under soldiers' rights. If soldiers' additional homestead entries were included in this, it might give room for speculation and fraud.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand it, in the case used by the gentleman for illustration, the additional 40 acres, which under this bill would be converted into 80 acres, can only be obtained by going and living on that land and complying with the homestead law in every particular?

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman is right. There is no question about that.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Absolutely.

Mr. HARDY. That is what I want to bring out.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendments are withdrawn. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Morgan of Oklahoma: Page 1, lines 10, 11, and 12, after the word "when," strike out the words "one-half of" and "one quarter section" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and twenty acres."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What is the effect of that amend-ent? What is the gentleman trying to do? Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill, provided it can be amended so that it will be more liberal. I think it ought to be enlarged, so that a man who has made an entry of 160 acres should be permitted under this 320acre act to make another entry, which, with the land already entered, will not exceed 320 acres. As I understand this provision, if a man has made an entry of 160 acres anywhere, he can not make an entry at all under this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; this bill does not apply to him at all. I am very much afraid the gentleman is going to load this matter down with something that the House will not agree to, and that we ought to take up his proposition in some other bill.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I have had a good deal of experience and observation about the settlement of our country under the homestead law. I think that Congress is not pursuing the right policy. I have no sympathy whatever with the idea as expressed by the distinguished gentleman, my good friend from Michigan [Mr. Fordney], and by my friend from Pennsylvania I believe that Congress ought to-day to give every [Mr. Moore]. man who has made a homestead entry and acquired title to it under any law the right to make a new homestead entry. believe we ought to pursue a policy that will encourage the development and settlement of the western country. It is a fact known to us all that the lands still remaining on the public domain are in the arid regions. We have recently passed what is known as the 640-acre homestead act. Yet a man in Oklahoma or Kansas or Nebraska or any other State in the Union, who has made an entry of 160 acres, can not make entry under this 640-acre homestead law.

The fact of it is no class of our citizens have contributed greater service to this Nation than the men who have gone out on the frontier and made homestead entries, and improved those western lands, and made the West what it is to-day. In the debate on the revenue bill last week I called attention to the amount Oklahoma was contributing to the support of the National Government by direct taxes. That illustrates what the pioneers in a new country add to the strength, greatness, and power of this Nation. How are we going to people the great West? I think there are nearly 500,000,000 acres of public land in the arid region. When a man has rendered a service by the gentleman from Oklahoma. [Applause.] to his country by going out and entering 160 acres of land, and remaining on it for five years, he and his family enduring the sacrifices that have been necessary to make that country what it is, why should we penalize that man, and say, "You have contributed a service to your country, but you can not have another opportunity to enter land"? Where is the injury in allowing him that opportunity? Where is the wrong? Why do not the people in our great cities in the East go out into the West and take up these lands? To those who are willing to make these sacrifices the opportunity should be offered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the House could adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mon-GAN] and not go any further than it has already gone in the matter of providing second homestead entries. At the time the enlarged 320-acre homestead law was presented to the House attention was called to the fact that that law was so worded that any qualified homestead entryman might have the opportunity to make a full entry under the act. For 30 years or more—yes; for 40 years—there has been but one interpretation of the words "qualified homestead entryman." The department had held during all that period of time that anyone who had perfected his title to less than 160 acres was held technically a qualified entryman. We brought the 320-acre bill before the House with the statement that the language we were using entitled anyone who had made an entry prior to that time of less than 160 acres to make a full 320-acre homestead under the law. The bill became a law, and for something more than a year the department allowed all qualified entrymen on their former interpretation of that term who applied to secure a full 320 acres. Then the department unfortunately modified its interpretation of that definition to include all who had not secured 160 acres, even though they had secured four continuing 40-acre subdivisions. That interpretation going so far afield led some officials of the department to hold that that was an unusually liberal interpretation of the term "qualified entryman." Then the department, instead of going back to its former interpretation, swung to the other extreme, and held that from that time forward a qualified entryman should only apply to those who had never made and perfected a homestead entry of any size

The result is that since the change of the interpretation parties have not been able to make entries under the 320-acre law unless they could show that they had never perfected a homestead entry of any size. Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma proposes to give all who have not heretofore made a full 160-acre entry to secure at least 320 acres of this comparatively worthless remaining land. And he is right about it. No one makes so good a homesteader as the man who has tried, and no one makes so good a homestead entryman as the man who has tried it once among the trying conditions of Oklahoma. The man who at one time or another has gone on the public domain and met the difficulties, trials, and incidents of homesteading in a new country secures an experience that is of very great value to him when he makes the attempt, as it must be made now if at all, under still more trying conditions and difficulties than those employed in the first entry. There are many people in Montana and Nebraska and Oklahoma, in Missouri and Iowa, and in the States east of the mountain regions who, under the provisions of the act securing a 320-acre homestead, would make splendid citizens, splendid homesteaders, just the sort of people we need to conquer that remaining semiarid country and build up homes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, concerning the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, it seems to me that he is going on the hypothesis that this homesteading of Government land represents a service and not a privilege. We are perfectly willing, we are glad, to have foreigners in our country contribute to our welfare by doing work. We consider that a benefit to us, but we do not permit them the privilege of homestead entry. If we are going on to permit the duplication of this privilege of homestead entry, why not go on and generate a class of professional homesteaders? I have no doubt they would become extremely efficient, and after they had carried out the process through 15 or 20 years would be more proficient in making good their rights and selling their property than other citizens. It seems to me, if we are going to pursue the homestead policy as a right and a privilege, it ought to be broadly spread over the people of the country and not be subject to perfecting a temporary homestead to-day and selling it out to-morrow and then doing it over again, which is what is contemplated by the amendment offered

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Morgan].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 12, after the word "section" insert a semicolon and the following: "Persons who have made entry of 160 acres in what is known as the public-land strip in Oklahoma shall be entitled to make entry under the foregoing act notwithstanding any former entry they may have made."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not germane. It is clear that the bill under consideration is a general law and applies to all limited homesteaders in the country. The gentleman's amendment proposes to grant a special privilege to one class in Oklahoma. precedents are numerous that you can not tack an amendment for a special class onto a bill of a general character.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is mistaken very much in his view of what is germane. This bill provides for certain additional homestead entries. The

That any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one quarter section of land may make entry and obtain title under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for enlarged homesteads," approved February 19, 1909.

Now, this is not a general law because it applies only to persons who have obtained title to less than a quarter section of land.

The SPEAKER. It is a general law to that extent, is it not? Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. It would apply to all persons who had obtained a title to less than a quarter section, but it is not general in that it applies to all persons who make homestead entries, and it only applies to persons under certain specific acts. It only lets in a restricted number, and the amendment I offer, of course, puts an additional class into the bill, so that persons who made an entry under a certain portion of Oklahoma would be allowed to make an entry under this act.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that if he were to offer an amendment that the people of Kay County, for instance, should have an extraordinary right under this bill it would be germane?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill gives to certain men extraordinary and peculiar rights not given to other men. If you limit the bill to men who have made entries to less than one-quarter section, why could you not enlarge it by adding additional entrymen? Why could you not strike out the words "less than a quarter section" and leave it without any limitation at all? This enlarges this act by bringing in men who made entry under a certain other act.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Suppose the gentleman's amendment read that Bill Jones or John Smith should have the right. Would not that be the same thing exactly?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. No; because the men who made the entry under the public-land strip made entry under a specific and definite law, just like the man who made the entry under these acts enumerated. The public-land strip, I will say is what is known as No Man's Land. It is that strip of land that extends out into the semiarid region beyond the main part of Oklahoma, a strip 160 miles long and 35 miles wide. It is out in that western region, and the entries upon that land have been made under special act, not under the general law. My amendment proposes to give the man who made entry under this special act, which brought in this public-land strip, or No Man's Land, the rights and benefits of this law, and it enlarges their rights.
Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. Speaker, it may be true that under the rules it would not be germane to attempt to amend a general homestead law with an amendment of this kind. I am not sure about that, but this is not a general homestead law. This is a homestead law applied to certain classes of cases. It allows homestead entries under certain designated laws, not under all the homestead laws, but under certain laws that apply only to certain designated and selected regions. All that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Morgan] has done is to include another class. Clearly he could have amended this bill so as to have allowed this privilege under more of the homestead laws than the two referred to in the bill. Clearly he can bring within the provisions of those two laws another class of home stead settlers.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the trouble about this amendment is that it is not a general proposition, but applies just to people who live in four or five counties.

Mr. MONDELL. The privilege granted is not a general homestead privilege, it is a homestead privilege applied to lands that are designated under two certain laws. It does not say so, but that is the effect of it. It applies only to two certain homestead laws. It does not apply generally upon the public domain. There is a territory in Oklahoma farther west than the balance of Oklahoma where the lands were dryer, where the conditions were similar to the conditions to which these two homestead laws apply. The gentleman from Oklahome provides that a settler who lived in those arid portions of Oklahoma may have privileges that do not apply to those who made entry in the humid or semiarid portions of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think an amendment giving the people of Wyoming an extraordinary chance to get these lands will be germane?

Mr. MONDELL. It would be germane applied to certain portions of the public domain.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You could not just apply it to two or three counties.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read, The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "otherwise qualified" and in line 4 strike out the words "less than," so that as amended the paragraph will read:

"That any person who has obtained title under the homestead laws to one-quarter section of land," etc.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this amendment comes down to the real merits of the proposition. If this amendment were agreed to, it would permit any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry to make a second entry under any of our homestead laws, including the 320-acre and the 640-acre homestead act. This, I think, should be the policy of this Government. The men who have made this country largely have been the men who have gone out upon the frontier and entered our public lands. Our remaining public lands are undesirable, and in order to induce men to go out and enter upon these lands we have enlarged the homestead law so that a man can make entry to 640 acres of land. I believe he is not required to reside upon the land, as he was once. But men who have made entries in Oklahoma and other Western States are not permitted to make entry under this act.

TAYLOR of Colorado. This would simply make it a straight double-entry homestead proposition?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes. Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The House has refused to do that a good many times. Why does the gentleman want to kill a good bill that is perfectly proper by tacking on something that the House is not ready to accept? The next thing that will happen, somebody will be making the point of no quorum.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I hope we will not kill a good bill, I certainly have no desire to do that; but the mere fact that this House may have at some other time refused a right policy should not deter the gentleman from Colorado, who understands the proposition, nor any other Member of this House, from presenting what he thinks should be a correct policy for the National Government at the present time, we should on every appropriate occasion, at every opportunity, and in every way in our power advocate policies which we think are right, just, and proper, regardless of what may be the views of other gentlemen. I do not think the 640-acre homestead act was just to homestead entrymen of Oklahoma and other States of the Union. A part of Oklahoma is in what is known as the semiarid region. Men have gone out there and made homestead entries. Many of them have lost those homestead entries because of the trials and hardships they had to endure. Some have lost their lands through lack of means, for want of money, some have lost their lands through other misfortunes. Whatever may be the cause they are now homeless and landless. You now refuse to permit them to make a second entry. But leaving out the just claims of my constituents or the claims of tens of thousands of homestead entrymen, I offer this amendment and support it with all earnestness upon broad national grounds. We have 500,-000,000 acres of unoccupied public lands. These are in the main undesirable public lands. They cover a vast area of the Western States. They have been open to settlement for half a century, but have had no takers. Why should they not be offered to those who have had entries? The homestead law has been in force over half a century. So far no one who has perfected a homestead entry by five years' residence has been allowed to make a second entry. Why not extend to these men the right to make a second entry? These are extraordinary times. Dangers and perils confront us. We know not what the future may bring. We do know the lands of the West should be occupied, cultivated, and made fruitful and productive.

I am in favor of giving men the right to make homestead entries on the remaining public lands regardless of former entries. The reason for the old rule that a man should be allowed but one homestead entry does not now exist. The choice lands have been exhausted. It is not now so much a privilege to make a homestead entry. The man who now enters a tract of public land and complies with the law in acquiring title thereto is in reality assuming a burden; he is undertaking a service to the country. Why should we not permit those who have made entries heretofore to come forward now and participate in this service? The Government has nothing to lose. It has everything to gain. The time has come for the Federal Government to inaugurate a new homestead policy-a broad, liberal, comprehensive, just policy. Do justice to the homesteaders of western Oklahoma, western Kansas, and western Nebraska, and of other Western States, and at the same time adopt a policy that will promote the settlement of our millions of acres of unoccupied public lands, make them productive; and thus contribute to the growth and development of the West, and thereby add to the strength of the Republic and the welfare of its citizens.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we are considering the unanimousconsent calendar, where bills come before the House by unanimous consent. It has never been considered that it was very good practice in the consideration of bills on the unanimousconsent calendar to introduce entirely new propositions. Certainly if bills unobjected to are to get before the House by unanimous consent and new propositions are sprung on the House, there will not be quite as much leniency about letting such bills come before the House by unanimous consent as there is now, and I do not think there is any too much now. If I had not been called out of the Chamber by consultation of a matter with the Speaker when this bill came up, I should have objected unless I had been assured that just this sort of thing would not take place.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to disapprove this amendment. I do not want to jeopardize the passage of this bill. It is not proper to try to put this amendment on this bill. The committee did not authorize it or warrant it or desire any modifications of the bills we bring in here under unanimous consent; and, regardless of the merits of the matter, the House is not in favor of this proposed legislation, and Congress is not at this time, and I ask that the amendment be disagreed to:

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, IN THE STATE OF MONTANA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1059) to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD: I object.
The SPEAKER. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

PATENTS ON RECLAMATION ENTRIES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5014) to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes,

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause:] The Chair hears none,

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso to section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat., 265), entitled "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes," be amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That no such patent or final water-right certificate shall issue until after the payment of all sums due the United States on account of such land or water right at the time of the submission of proof entitling the homestead or desert-land entryman to such patent or the purchaser to such final water-right certificate."

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LANDS FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES, TWIN FALLS, IDAHO.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1740) to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cox). Is there objection?

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the grant thereby made to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, for the benefit of said city is hereby revoked and declared of no effect.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC ROADS IN COLORADO.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11258) to provide for the sale and development of certain public lands and for the construction and maintenance of public roads.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Just a moment. The Senate on the 2d of this month passed a bill, S. 865, which is the substance of this act. It is pending now, I presume, on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct about that. This gives away only 250,000 acres to the different States. The Senate bill, I believe, passed in a moment of generosity, gives 500,000 acres to the different States. They do not include the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is the same kind of a bill, I

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, who is always well informed, I presume the bill will be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAY-LORI is altogether too modest.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think I am, for that matter; but we have to be very modest in order to get anything from this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

NONMINERAL ENTRIES IN ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1064) to provide for the nonmineral entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing coal, phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals in Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

STOREHOUSE AT BENICIA ARSENAL, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 762) providing for the construction and equipment of a storehouse at Benicia Arsenal, State of California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection in order to permit me to make a statement?
Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold the objection,

Mr. CURRY. The Benicia Arsenal is the only arsenal west of Rock Island, Ill. It is the depot of supplies for one-third of continental United States, for the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and for the Province of Guam and the Philippines. Last year there were received nearly 6,000,000 pounds of ordnance supplies. and over 5,000.000 pounds were dispersed. They have not the storehouse facilities to properly protect the ordnance supplies from the weather and from fire. In 1912 a fire destroyed the warehouse at the Benicia Arsenal, and $1,600,000 worth of ordnance supplies were destroyed. Since that time the department has been trying to have a new warehouse constructed. The old warehouse is situated on a hill half a mile from the railroad and 150 feet high. All of the ordnance supplies have to be hauled from the railroad up this hill to this warehouse and over the arsenal to different places of deposit, and with no proper warehouses to receive it. This bill authorizes the construction of a $200,000 fireproof warehouse to be built down on the flat, where the spur track of the railroad can run up to it and where the supplies can be taken from the railroad cars and put into the warehouse, and from the warehouse onto the cars and onto the ships by machinery. The ordnance supplies at the Benicia Arsenal are still unprotected from fire. A fire is likely to occur there at any time that will destroy five or six hundred thousand dollars' worth of United States Government supplies. struction of this warehouse is a cheap and economical proposition. It has been approved by the department; it has been recommended unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this proposal is a matter that has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations. It is one that properly belongs to that committee and not to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, therefore,

Mr. Speaker, I will have to object.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced an identical bill two Mr. CURRY years ago on this very proposition, and I wish to explain that I had the bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and asked for a hearing before that committee, and the chairman told me he would not give me a hearing because the bill had no right there; that the appropriation was not authorized by law, and they could not make the appropriation, and suggested this very course.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] will permit, the Committee on Appropriations does not have jurisdiction.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has the jurisdiction over the appropriation but not over the authorization.

Mr. MANN. Such an item in the Committee on Appropriations would be subject to a point of order. So the Committee on Military Affairs has proper jurisdiction of the bill. Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from California is probably aware that the Chief of Ordnance, who has charge of this Government arsenal, has a comprehensive plan in regard to the enlargement of the arsenals?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. And that comprehensive plan does not embrace the enlargement of arsenals that are very close to the seashore?

Mr. CURRY.

Mr. BORLAND. It embraces the gradual bringing of our arsenals and our storehouses into the interior of the country?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. And for that reason does not the gentleman think it would be better to consult the plan of the Chief of Ordnance rather than to introduce these bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. CURRY. I not only consulted the Chief of Ordnance, and not only submitted this bill to him before introducing it, but it was also sent over to the War College and was approved unanimously by the War College. The proposition of the new plans as to arsenals is for the manufacturing arsenals. This is a storehouse.

Mr. BORLAND. Also for the storehouses.

Mr. BORLAND. Also for the storehouses.

Mr. CURRY. This is for the storehouse, unanimously approved by the War College, approved by the Chief of Ordnance, approved by the Secretary of War, and unanimously approved by the Committee on Military Affairs. It is simply a storehouse. You have got to have a storehouse out there to receive and disburse munitions and ordnance supplies. There must be a storehouse there. The United States Government owns 339.7 acres of land. They have the organization to handle this stuff. It is being handled; it is being shipped there; it is being stored there. It is subject to the weather and is not protected from This would protect it from the weather and protect it from the fire, while it was there waiting to be shipped to Alaska, the Philippines, Guam, Hawaii, and to Arizona, Nevada, California, Oregon, and other States.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is still arguing the merits of this bill, dissociated from any plans of the Ordnance Department. I simply suggest to the gentleman that the bill or over the order was well been to be best to the gentleman.

Otherwise we will have to object to it.

Mr. CURRY. This is the third time the bill has been reached without being called up for action by the House. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. BORLAND. There will gentleman allows it to go over. There will be objection to it unless the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it go over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next GAME SANCTUARIES IN NATIONAL FORESTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17381) to establish game sanctuaries in national forests, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, want to say that when a similar bill to the one now before us was introduced I objected to certain provisions in it and a hearing was had. Later on the bill now before us was introduced and the former bill withdrawn or abandoned. This bill omits the provision which constituted the principal objection I had to the legislation. The original bill provided for the creation of game sanctuaries in the forest reserves upon the approval of the governors of the States. I objected to that, and the present bill provides for the creation of game sanctuaries only upon the approval of the State legislature through joint resolution.

In view of that change in the character of the legislation I should not feel under obligations to object to its passage were it not for the fact that the legislature of my State has recently passed a resolution in the nature of a memorial to Congress against any legislation of this character.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. Yes. Mr. HAYDEN. Was your legislature opposed to any kind of sanctuary bill, or was it where a sanctuary could not be established in the State of Montana unless they passed that legisla-

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know anything about the State of Montana

Mr. HAYDEN. I mean the State of Wyoming-

Mr. MONDELL. But I made it clear to the members of our legislature that, so far as I was concerned, the matter being now left to the legislature under this bill, I should not feel that I was justified or warranted in strenuously opposing the legislation, though I doubt its wisdom. But with full knowledge of the change in the bill and of the provisions of the present act, our legislature memorialized Congress against any legislation of this kind.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will extend his remarks, and print that memorial in the RECORD, I would like to read it. Mr. MONDELL. If I receive it to-day, I will ask unanimous consent to print it in connection with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS ON UNSURVEYED LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1792) for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there is no adequate report on this bill to give any person a clear idea of what its purpose is. The letter that is printed here from the Secretary of the Interior refers to a report on a Senate bill of a prior session, but the report is not inserted. I suggest that the matter go over without prejudice. The report is very inadequate to convey any clear idea of the purpose to be accomplished by the bill. The letter referred to a report in prior Congress, and yet the report is not incorporated.

Mr. FERRIS. The report is quite full here, and the committee is unanimous in its favor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the House entitled to know the facts, and should not the report give a full idea of the purpose of the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentlemen from Washington are very anxious about it, and the report is very full and complete.

will say I did not report the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, there are two reports, and the report which was made in connection with the bill now pending refers to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which was made on February 15, 1915, at the time Senate bill 6268 was under consideration. The necessity of this legislation is that it affects a number of men located on certain wrong sections in a tract granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. before that tract was surveyed, and who, after it was surveyed, found themselves on the wrong sections. The necessity for some form of relief has long been apparent, and the department itself suggested a form of bill, which is, in fact, the bill which has passed the Senate and is now here for consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Congress passed some years ago a similar provision, if the gentleman will permit, that relieved settlers who entered prior to February 1, 1908. Relief is now sought for settlers who located since that time, up to July 1, 1913. But there is nothing in the report to give any Member any idea of what is the need of this relief. If the report is comprehensive, I suggest that the gentleman insert it in the RECORD.

Then the bill will be reached two weeks hence.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. By oversight, but through no fault of my colleague, Mr. La Follette, who presented this report, but who can not be present on the floor at this hour, the first letter from the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, made during the Sixty-third Congress, was not added to the report on the bill now pending. The report refers to it, and if the gentlemen will indulge me I can read it in less than five minutes. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 15, 1915.

Hon. Henry L. Myens, Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

Hon. Henry L. Myers,

Chairman Committee on Public Lands,

/ United States Senate.

/ My Dear Senator: In response to your request for a report of S. 6268, I have the honor to submit the following:

The bill proposes to so amend the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat., 597-620), that its provisions shall apply in all respects to purchases, settlements, and claims made prior to July 1, 1912.

During the present Congress there have been introduced and are now pending several bills having for their object the relief of persons who settled after January 1, 1898, on lands claimed by the Northern Pacific Rallway Co. under its grant. The first of these bills, S. 2801, in its main features, was the subject of an adverse report by this department on December 18, 1913, but in one respect the propriety of an amendment was recognized therein, it being said:

"Instances have occurred wherein settlers since this date (Jan. 1, 1898) have gone upon unsurveyed lands within the company's grant in entire good faith and made valuable improvements without any means of knowing that they were on railroad sections. In such cases, if the company refuses to relinquish, the claimants are without means of relief. This class of settlers, whose claims rest upon settlements prior to July 1, 1913, should be given the same right of election as is now provided under existing law in cases of settlement prior to January 1, 1898; and that is the extent to which legislation in its nature supplementary to the act of July 1, 1898, supra, as the present bill is, should be enacted."

A similar report and recommendation were made on S. 3087, which was substantially identical with S. 2801.

On April 8, 1914, S. 5181, "For the relief of settlers on Northern Pacific Railroad lands, and for other purposes," was introduced. This bill, which is identical with the act of July 1, 1898, with the exception that the words "to July 1, 1913," are Inserted in place of the words "to Junuary 1, 1898," where they occur therein, was recognized as accomplishing the purpose cont veyed lands after January 1, follows:

"That whenever any qualified settler shall in good faith make settlement in pursuance of existing law upon any odd-numbered sections of unsurveyed public lands within said railroad grant to which the right of such railroad grantee or its successor in interest has attached, then upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, and a due relinquishment of the prior railroad right, other lands may be selected in lieu thereof by said rallroad grantee, or its successor in interest, as hereinbefore provided, and patents shall issue therefor."

Construing this language, this department held that—

"To these individual claimants the act does not extend the right of election and transfer of the claims to other lands, and it seems clear that they are not of the class required to be listed with a view to demanding relinquishment of the railway company. The contention of the company that to hold it bound to relinquish in favor of such settlers would amount to an open invitation to settle upon its unsurveyed lands with a guaranty of protection, with a resulting cloud upon the company's fitle, and, perhaps, a bar to the disposal of its lands, is not without force, and after a most careful consideration of the entire act the department is of opinion that the proviso above quoted merely extends a privilege to the company to select other lands for such as it may relinquish, upon such favorable terms as should reasonably induce the relinquishment, and thus protect the settlement made at a time when it could not be reasonably told whether the settler would fall upon an odd-numbered or even-numbered section."

It was this inequality in the right of transfer, as between the settler and the company, which the department undertook to remedy by the proposed amendatory legislation, believing that the principal argument found in support of the doctrine announced in the Violette case would be removed if the act should be limited to settlements made prior to its enactment.

It is now believed, however, that the general extension of the act of proposed amendatory legislation, believing that the principal argument found in support of the doctrine announced in the Violette case would be removed if the act should be limited to settlements made prior to its enactment.

It is now believed, however, that the general extension of the act of 1898 was not, and is not, necessary to secure this result. If the amendment be restricted in terms to the third proviso as above quoted, make the same applicable to lands in the primary limits only, giving the right of election to the settler and an equal right of transfer to both parties, ample relief will be secured to bona fide settlers prior to survey. For, as pointed out in the report on 8. 2801, there is no occasion for extending the right of election to the settler in cases of settlement prior to survey on lands within the indemuity limits, for unsurveyed lands being subject to settlement the homestead claimant is protected in his right, while under its grant as now construed such lands are not open to selection by the railway company; and consequently no conflicting claim of the company can arise that would jeopardize the right of an actual settler prior to survey.

Even a restricted extension of the present provisions of this act as above suggested carries with it possibilities in the way of speculative claims which should not be overlooked. The original act was addressed to conditions existing at the time of its passage, Humbird v. Avery (195 U. S., 480), and offered no inducement to settlers to occupy unsurveyed odd-numbered sections under the belief that they might in some manner secure a right thereby. This line of legislation, however, unavoidably suggested a possibility of its later amendment to include claims arising since the passage of the original act, and hence not within its provisions. Claims of this character can not be regarded as initiated in good faith, for it is not believed that the intention of Congress went beyond the purpose of protecting the settlement. Cases have been brought to the atten numbered sections of land, surveyed and unsurveyed, within both the first and second indemnity limits of its grant, accompanied by a purported "selection" in bulk of said lands without any specific designation of loss.

The basis of this claim is a resolution of the board of directors of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., adopted September 23, 1913, wherein it is recited that, due to the "unjust and unauthorized" regulations of this department, selections of surveyed lands only can be made in satisfaction of losses within the primary limits and due to the delay of the Government in the prosecution of its public land surveys, and the consequent diminution of the public domain, there is not now sufficient vacant public land within the indemnity limits to satisfy the losses within the primary limits of its grant, and for these reasons it was—

"Therefore resolved, That the president be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be presented to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior the company's claim to all public lands within the limits of its grant, in satisfaction of its place losses, and to press such claim in the courts, should that be necessary and possible."

While this department has never recognized the right to select unsurveyed lands as indemnity, it is evident that the company intends, by the present assertion of such right to initiate a record claim that will "attach" to the lands thus applied for. A "selection" thus made, though finding no warrant in any construction of the grant to this or any other railroad company, might well be used in support of an assertion that by such purported selection a right "attached" to all the odd-numbered sections in the indemnity limits.

The conflict thus resulting between the company and any settler on these indemnity lands would "ill literally within the terms of the act, if it were extended by the proposed amendment, for it would be a case wherein the right of the company is "claimed to have attached" by selection. The validity of such claim und

A bill for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed rallroad lands.

A bill for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed failroad lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That where, prior to July 1, 1913, the whole or any part of an odd-numbered section within the primary limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Co., to which the right of the grantee or its lawful successor is claimed to have attached by definite location, has been settled upon in good faith while unsurveyed, by any qualified settler, the same shall be subject to all the provisions of the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L., pp. 620-622), relating to lands in said primary limits so settled upon prior to January 1, 1898, and said act is hereby amended accordingly.

Now, this is for the benefit of those who made that settlement in good faith, and none others. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection further.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think the gentleman has furnished me with any information that I did not have before, because I looked up the law that is sought to be amended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have furnished what the gentleman said was lacking.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire what right for part the railroad company has in the selection of these lieu lands when these entrymen on the unsurveyed lands of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. are allowed to take patents to the same?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The provision in the act of 1898 in respect to settlement on unsurveyed lands after January

1, 1898, is found in the third proviso, as follows:

That whenever any qualified settler shall in good faith make settlement, in pursuance of existing law, upon any odd-numbered sections of unsurveyed public lands within said railroad grant to which the right of such railroad grantee or its successor in interest has attached, then upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, and a due relinquishment of the prior railroad right, other lands may be selected in lieu thereof by said railroad grantee, or its successor in interest, as hereinbefore provided, and patents shall issue therefor.

Mr. STAFFORD. What character of land is the railroad company privileged to accept as lieu land? Is the Government going to be filched out of any rights as to lieu lands that will be accepted, or will the railroad be obliged to take merely lands of approximately the same value? There is nothing in the bill saying that they shall be of approximately the same value.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is limited to the State of Washington, and they will not find any lands anywhere of the same value that they can take. Instead of the railroad company being the beneficiary, this is to establish the equity of some original settlers who were advised by the then Secretary of the Interior that they were fully within their rights.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; who entered upon unsurveyed lands which proved later to be included in the land grant.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the survey was made the ections that they were entitled to go upon turned out to be not the sections intended but railroad sections. The checkerboard plan did not work out the way the original locations were made, and they found themselves on railroad lands instead of on the

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to this bill going over, but I would like to have full information about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the bill going over.
Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report which the gentleman from Oklahoma has may be printed in the RECORD, in order that the information may be available to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Does not the gentleman think it might be better to recall the report and to make an amended report?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; that would be much better if it can be done. I read all of the statement aloud just now, and it will appear in full in the RECORD. An amended report from the Committee on the Public Lands will make the situation entirely clear, I think,

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. La Follette], who reported this bill, have authority to withdraw the present report, and to introduce in lieu thereof a new one, without the bill losing its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

CERTAIN LANDS IN PORT ANGELES, WASH,

The next business on the calendar for unanimous consent was the bill (8. 5900) providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 69, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, granted to the city of Port Angeles, in the State of Washington, for municipal purposes, lots 1 and 2, 17 and 18, in block 69, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patent to the proper city authorities for said lots, conditioned that the same shall be used for municipal purposes.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "at." strike out the words "there b Interior."

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "granted" and insert the words "authorized to reappraise and sell at the reappraised price."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether, if we pass this bill with the amendments proposed by the committee, they will remain in the law if the bill becomes a law?

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask that the bill be passed without prejudice. I wanted to consider a matter that has come up since the report of the committee was made, which changes somewhat the situation of the parties in interest. The property involved is in my district, and I would like to have the bill passed over without prejudice until I can look into the matter further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill be assed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5788) to create two additional associate justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether the committee has considered a rearrangement of the jurisdiction of the court and of the lower courts, so as to prevent appeals from the municipal court in cases involving small amounts of

Mr. WEBB. I can say to my friend that we have not considered that recently; but, of course, that matter has been carefully considered for 36 years. The last arrangement to relieve this court was the creation of the Court of Appeals, which took some work from the District Supreme Court, but there is no court in the United States that is so overwhelmed with work as the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at present. There has not been a judge added to that court in 37 years. The court is two years behind its calendar. A suit started to-morrow can not be tried for two years, and the criminal cases that are appealed to the District Supreme Court are almost forgotten before they are reached for trial. Chief Justice Covington, Justice Gould, Justice Siddons, and Justice McCoy, as well as a committee of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, all state, as the gentleman will see by reading the report, that it is impossible to get a trial of an appeal case sooner than two years, and often the witnesses are gone

Mr. GARNER. That means a denial of justice.

Mr. WEBB. It means not only a denial but a miscarriage of Mr. STAFFORD. The same condition that confronts this court has confronted other trial courts throughout the country. The same conditions confronted the circuit courts of my home We were confronted with that very condition of facts. The circuit courts were burdened with appeal cases from justices' courts involving $100 or $200. The remedy we found—which is suggested in the report on this ill—was to confer greater jurisdiction on the municipal courts in our city, the civil court, thereby relieving the higher court of that appellate jurisdiction. Not only was the court relieved, but it resulted in the expedition of the trial of cases; because gentlemen will agree that these little, measly cases, involving sums of $25 or $50, when once tried in a minor court should not be subject to trial anew in an appellate court.

Mr. WEBB. Such cases are very rarely appealed to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report states that that is one of the burdens on the court which confronts it.

Mr. WEBB. Only one, and the smallest of them all. Mr. STAFFORD. To remedy that condition I would suggest that some effort be made first to enlarge the jurisdiction of the lower courts.

Mr. GARNER. Giving them final jurisdiction in small cases. Mr. STAFFORD. Enlarge the final jurisdiction of the lower courts, as is done not only in Wisconsin and Illinois but in other States, and then only permit reversals in the higher courts for obvious manifest injustice done by the judgment.

Mr. WEBB. Then we will have to increase the number of municipal court judges and police judges.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would be far better to do that, and then you would have a finality in the decision of the cases, but here you keep going on and on with cases that involve only $30, $40,

Mr. WEBB. I do not agree with the gentleman. A man who has $300 or $400 involved has a right to have it settled by a higher court, and you can not take away the right of appeal and trial by jury

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the opinion that was held prior to the inauguration of the new system in my own State, but it has worked so satisfactorily that even in personal injury suits involving up to $2,000 there would be no attorney now, I think, who would go back to the old practice.

Mr. WEBB. If you were to cut off the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the District the Supreme Court of the District would still be the most burdened court in the United They now have 900 original cases pending on the civil side alone.

Mr. STAFFORD. And a considerable number of them are appeal cases from the lower courts.

Mr. WEBB. No; I mean the original cases filed last year. Mr. STAFFORD. The Supreme Court of the District has original jurisdiction in these cases involving small amounts.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Yes. Mr. WEBB.

Mr. MEEKER. Does not the gentleman believe that a man who only has a small amount in controversy should have the same right of appeal as the man who has the larger sum?

Mr. STAFFORD. He has the same right of appeal. It is just as it is in the State of Wisconsin. If the case was initiated in the circuit court, when it came to the supreme court the supreme court does not grant a trial de novo, but passes upon reversible errors. That should be adopted here. In the case of the civil court to which I refer there is the right of appeal to the circuit court; but when the supreme court passes upon these matters they are only for reversible errors. The courts do not grant a trial de novo as in these cases in the District.

Mr. WEBB. The police court can put a man in prison for a ear. Would you enlarge it so that the defendant would have no right of appeal?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not directing my criticism to the criminal side of the court, but to the civil cases. I am inquiring whether anything is being done in that direction, and the gentleman says there is not.

Mr. WEBB. The civil docket of the court is enough to occupy all the time. There was one suit that required the absolute attention of one judge for six months. They have to hear all the mandamus suits that are brought against the heads of departments. They are two years and a half behind, and I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill. The judges often work from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6 or 8 o'clock

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. MEEKER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there has been no increase in the number of judges of this court for 36 years?

Mr. WEBB. Not since 1879.

Mr. MEEKER. What has been the increase in population of the District during that time?

Mr. WEBB. From 60 to 80 per cent; and the business has increased 200 per cent.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Webb was given leave to print as a part of his remarks the following:

"I would like to submit the following brief of reasons why two additional associate justices should be appointed for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia:

"This court was created by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1863. It then consisted of a chief justice and four associate justices-only one associate justice less than now. The act of Congress approved February 25, 1879, increased the associate justices to five, making the court the same size that it is to-day. The only other relief this court has received from Congress since 1879 was in 1893, almost 24 years ago, when it was relieved of its appellate jurisdiction by the act of February 9, 1893, creating the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

"The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia still has, however, a broader jurisdiction than that of any of the other Federal courts, excepting the Supreme Court of the United States. It has jurisdiction in all criminal cases, in all civil matters at law, and in all civil matters in equity; is required to hear and determine appeals from the municipal court of the District of Columbia in cases involving more than $5 and not exceeding $500; is required to remove from the municipal court by certiorari, upon request of defendant, cases involving more than $100; has jurisdiction of all bankruptcy cases, of all probate matters requiring the action of a judge either with or without the intervention of a jury; hears all lunacy proceedings; hears all condemnation cases, both Government and municipal; disposes of all habeas corpus proceedings; disposes of all naturalization petitions for the District of Columbia; is the only court that can have original jurisdiction of cases involving mandamus proceedings and injunction suits against heads of departments and bureaus; and, on account of the absence of an executive in the District of Columbia, this court, through its chief justice, is required to perform the same functions as the governor of a State in respect to extradition

"Two of the six justices of this court are assigned to the trial of civil cases before a jury. For the last 10 years these two justices have been unable to keep up with their calendars. At no period within that time has it been possible for a litigant to get an actual jury trial in less than from 14 to 18 months after beginning suit. Very often two years elapse before trial. In that same 10 years, 1906-1916, the number of civil cases on the calendar for trial have about doubled. At the end of the court year 1915-16, on June 30, there were of 824 cases calendared for trial nearly one-half still undisposed of. On October 1, 1916, there were approximately 900 cases on civil calendar for jury trial.

"Two other of the six justices are assigned to the trial of civil cases in equity. The volume of work in the equity divisions steadily increased in spite of the continuous work of these two justices. The new rules of equity procedure require that the actual witnesses shall be heard in open court, which necessitates many times the amount of time required formerly for the justice to read the evidence after it had been taken before an examiner in chancery. Moreover, preliminary motions and other interlocutory proceedings, which require disposition after the hearing, now average 30 a week for the equity court.

"And further, because of the restricted number of justices, the justices sitting in equity have necessarily been compelled to take certain branches of work not ordinarily incident to an equity court. For instance, the justice of equity division No. 1 has assigned to him for disposition all of the bankruptey business of the District of Columbia. In the court year of 1915-1916, in addition to his other regular equity business, he was required to dispose of 52 bankruptcy cases. On the other hand, the justice sitting in equity division No. 2 has assigned to him all matters requiring the action of a probate judge without the intervention of a jury. Even under a new rule of the court which submits all nonjury probate matters first to the register of wills in order that he may save to the justice the time required to receive explanations of counsel, still, nevertheless, the justice has to make some examination of such matters before affixing his signature, and as a result in an average month such justice affixes his signature to 527 probate orders; that is, after a day upon the equity bench the justice has to consider and sign 22 probate orders daily in chambers.

"The general result of these greatly overburdened equity divisions is that for the past two years the justices presiding in each of them has had to continue to sit in his court many days from 10 o'clock in the morning until nearly 6 o'clock in the evening in order to dispose of the equity business before him, and still the equity trial calendars are getting further and fur-When, in addition the equity business which has required such long hours, there still remains for disposition the bankruptcy and probate matters to which reference has been made, it can readily be seen that these divisions must be relieved of that extra work in the bankruptcy and probate matters in order that the true equity causes may have an opportunity at all to be disposed of with the necessary promptness demanded by real justice.

"The remaining two justices are assigned to the handling of the criminal business of the supreme court, and owing to the rapidly increasing population of the District, the business of the two criminal divisions has greatly increased. In 1906 there were 328 cases disposed of in these two divisions. In the year 1915–16 there were nearly 1,000 cases disposed of. The result has been the taking of all the time of criminal division No. 1 for criminal business, as well as the greater portion of the time of criminal division No. 2. This has been done because the rights of persons charged with crime are considered greater than the rights of any other class of litigants. However, on account of the restricted number of justices it has been necessary to assign other important classes of cases to criminal division No. 2, including appeals and certiorari cases from the District municipal court, and also all will contests. great volume of the municipal appeal and certiorari cases, for under law any municipal court case involving over $5 and not exceeding $500 may be appealed to the Supreme Court of the District; and also the supreme court is required, upon request of defendant, to remove for trial any municipal case involving more than $100. Only a very small proportion of these cases were able to be heard during 1915-16, because the other business of criminal division No. 2 crowded the municipal appeal and certiorari cases out. It takes from 12 to 18 months for an appeal or certiorari case from the municipal court to be tried in the supreme court. Probably the greatest seriousness in this situation lies in the fact that in the average municipal appeal case there is involved some humble litigant to whom a speedy trial is of the most vital interest. The well-known saying, "Justice delayed is justice denied," applies with wonderful appropriateness in this connection.

"And as to the will contests mentioned as being referred to criminal division No. 2, very few of them have been tried at all. The issues upon any caveat to a will can not tried before a jury under two years from the time the caveat is filed.
"In addition to these onerous burdens upon criminal divisions Nos. 1 and 2, it is necessary that these divisions dispose of a large number of lunacy adjudications. In the year 1915-16 there were in the District of Columbia 408 lunacy cases tried with the intervention of a jury.

"And, further, criminal division No. 2 is the only court available for hearing District condemnation cases. The volume of these, both Government and municipal, has greatly increased, especially on account of various acts of Congress providing for both governmental and municipal improvements. In the year 1915-16 there were 126 condemnation cases, "Again, habeas corpus proceedings in the District of Columbia may be heard before any of the six justices of the District Supreme Court. In the year 1915–16 there were 28 such pro-ceedings, a considerable increase over the number existing 10 years ago. "Likewise this court is the only court that may dispose of naturalization petitions in the District. These applications have increased from 4 in October, 1906, to an average of 25 each month at the present time. These cases go alternately to the justices of the two already overcrowded and overworked equity divisions.

"As has already been said, the District Supreme Court is the only court that can exercise the most important and the most delicate jurisdiction in proceedings to control the heads of governmental departments and bureaus—in effect the Federal Government itself—by mandamus or by restraining order. In the year 1915-16 there were 20 mandamus proceedings against heads of departments and bureaus, while within the same period there were 24 injunction suits. The very magnitude of such proceedings compels the court to give a great deal of time to them, and as a result the justice is rendered unavailable during such time for any other business of the court.

"And, finally, as also already mentioned, extradition cases, by act of Congress, are required to be handled by the chief justice of the District Supreme Court, a duty usually performed in the States by the governors.

"Justice Ashley M. Gould, of the District Supreme Court, made the following statement in a letter last July with reference to the tremendous volume of business that is overwhelming the two divisions which try law cases before juries:

"During the two court years last past, to wit, the two years beginning on the first Tuesdays in October, 1914 and 1915, Justice Stafford and myself have sat in these two circuit courts. I have been on the bench 14 years, and Justice Stafford's appointment shortly followed mine. I mention this merely to point out that we have had an extended experience in trying cases, which ought to facilitate our disposition of them. During these two years neither of us has been disabled from performing our duties by Illness for any considerable period, possibly for not more than a couple of days in each year, so that our labors have been practically continuous. The result of our work during these two years is as follows:

years is as follows:

"At the beginning of the October term, 1914, there were 819 cases at issue on the trial calendar of the two circuit courts, of which 596 were disposed of during the trial year by settlement, dismissal, or actual jury trial, leaving a balance of 223 cases to be carried forward to the trial calendar for the year beginning on the first Tuesday in October of 1915. At the beginning of this last year 601 new cases had been added to the calendar, making the total number for trial at the beginning of the year 824. Of these, 254 were disposed of during the year, there being many less settlements and dismissals than in the preceding year, so that the calendar for the year beginning the first Tuesday of the next—

"The past-

"October will start with 570 undisposed of cases, to which, up to May 15, 1916, 221 new cases had already been added, making a total of 791 by committees of three different Congresses.

cases already calendared for the coming year, to which at least 100 more will be added during the summer—

"The past summer-

"which will start the next calendar with 891 cases for trial.

"To state the situation in another form, a plaintiff who files a law case to-day can not expect an opportunity for trial before a jury in a shorter period than 18 months or two years on account of the congestion of the law docket. In many cases this results in a practical denial of justice.

"And Justice Gould further says:

"I may add that the present number of judges for the court was fixed by Congress in 1892, 24 years ago. The great growth of the capital during this period, and the consequent increase of business for the courts, would indicate that if six judges were necessary at that time to dispose of the litigation, a larger number is now necessary.

"Chief Justice J. Harry Covington, of the District Supreme Court, in a letter of July 31, 1916, speaks as follows of the situation in that court:

"The conditions in the Supreme Court of the District are at the present time most serious because of the lack of sufficient justices to perform the work of that court. It is an absolute impossibility to keep the work up with that degree of promptness which is required in the satisfactory disposition of both litigated and routine court business. The fact is that because of the excessive hours of daily service and the strain incident thereto, two of the justices of this court were considerably impaired in health during the court year just ended.

"And referring to the letter of Justice Gould, already quoted from, Chief Justice Covington speaks thus:

rrom, Chief Justice Covington speaks thus:

"I have also read a letter recently transmitted to you by Associate Justice Gould, of this court, respecting the horribly congested condition of the calendars in the two divisions for the trial of civil causes before juries. I think I may be permitted to say that, in order to try to meet the situation as best it could be met with the number of justices at this time available, Justices Stafford and Gould, because of their long experience and facility in the trial of jury causes, have served each of them two years in these divisions in the hope that some relief might be gotten for litigants whose cases were pending on the trial calendar. Notwithstanding these extremely beneficial assignments of justices, the conditions are congested to the degree stated by Justice Gould in his letter * * *.

"I ustice F I. Siddons of this court speaks as follows of the "Justice F. L. Siddons, of this court, speaks as follows of the regrettable delay of justice:

"* * * And once again we have reached a condition when the citizen has begun to complain, and rightly so, of these delays in justice that too often mean also denial of justice.

"My deliberate opinion is that we need two more judges in our court. To one I would assign a division that should take care of divorce, probate, and, say, lunacy business. This would bring relief to the equity courts and criminal court No. 2. The other should be assigned to circuit-court business, and could take care of at least some of the appeal and certiforari business, thus further relieving criminal court No. 2, which could then take over a larger share of the criminal business than is now possible; and, what is of immediate importance, the present accumulation of business could in the course of a year or so be dispatched to the great relief of litigants, bench, and bar."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. Mr. STAFFORD. I object.
Mr. MEEKER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FISH HATCHERY, LINCOLN COUNTY, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent The next business on the Catendar for Chammous Consent was the bill (H. R. 305) to establish a fish-cultural station in the county of Lincoln, in the State of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMONDS. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to say that this bill has been recommended by a committee in three different Congresses. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries had it up when we passed the omnibus bill, and agreed to put it in but overlooked it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I find in the omnibus bill a provision, evidently put in on the floor of the House, for $40,000 for the State of Tennessee. Does that cover the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. HOUSTON. No: that was an amendment put on the bill in the Senate.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There were two cases that were brought to the attention of the House as being fairly or quite meritorious. One was Tennessee and the other Wisconsin. Of the two I think the Wisconsin was decidedly the more meritorious, if there could be a difference. If the committee is torious, if there could be a difference. If the committee is going to recommend the passage of legislation favoring Tennessee, I think it ought to include the same thing for Wisconsin.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee has not done that. The committee say they made a mistake in not including this in the former bill, and they had a meeting called to rectify that mistake and recommended the bill as it has been recommended

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I used to introduce a bill for a fish hatchery in or near Chicago. I think it was reported favorably once or twice, but whenever I think a fish hatchery bill has any chance to pass I shall introduce that bill again and have it included, whether it is an omnibus bill or not. think the country ought to save the money on these bills, and not only ought to but will.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to Tennessee having a fish hatchery, but I think Tennessee is entitled to take its chance along with the rest of the States; and as the Senate has amended the omnibus bill and given a fish hatchery to Tennessee, I think it ought to go along with the them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF EARLY COUNTY, GA.

The next business on the calendar for unanimous consent was the bill (H. R. 17814) to transfer Early County from the western division of the northern district of Georgia to the Albany division of the southern district of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Early, now in the western division of the northern district of Georgia, be detached from said district and attached to the Albany division of the southern district of Georgia.

SEC. 2. That all civil suits and proceedings now pending in the district courts which would, if instituted after the passage of this act, be required to be brought in the Albany division of said southern district of Georgia be, and the same are hereby, transferred to the Albany division of the southern district of Georgia, to be there disposed of in the same manner and with like effect as though the same had been instituted therein, and all processes, writs, and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as belonging to the term of the court in the Albany division of the southern district of Georgia in the same manner and with like effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto originally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 386) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar and be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAMES. I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

MISSISSIPPI CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 253, authorizing the President of the United States to invite the Latin-American countries to participate in the Mississippi Centennial Exposition to be held at Gulfport, Miss.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I might say to the gentleman that this carries no appropriation. The exposition is to be held in December of next year, and if we do not pass this bill at this time these gentlemen will not be invited. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] very kindly assisted me in the last session of Congress, I think it was, in passing a law so that the Government exhibits might be transferred from San Diego to Gulfport, Miss. That matter has progressed very rapidly, and I sincerely hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think this exposition, for which the legislature has appropriated $125,000 and the county in which it is to be held $125,000

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. And the city $125,000. Mr. STAFFORD. And the city $125,000, will be of such pretentious proportions that it warrants the invitation of representatives of the Latin-American countries to come to it as our guests. I do not wish in any way to interfere with making this exposition a success, and in so far as transferring the Government exhibits from San Diego to Gulfport, which will cost several hundred thousand dollars

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Oh, it will cost only $75,000. Mr. STAFFORD. I think it will be beyond that. As there was no further need of that exhibit, I did not desire to stand in the way of making the Gulfport Exposition a success to that extent. However, to invite to a little local exposition, with all due respect to the great city of Gulfport, Latin-American representatives I hardly think is warranted.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not call this a little local exposition.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Indeed not.

MANN. The State of Mississippi came into the Union about the same time that the State of Illinois did. We are going to have a centennial celebration in Illinois, though I have said that I would not favor a resolution asking the President to invite foreign representatives to come to the celebration in Illinois. I may be wrong in that, and we think we are some pumpkins in Illinois.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. You are. Mississippi is not the only State that has appropriated money for this purpose, and the amounts to which the gentleman from Wisconsin alluded are not the only amounts raised for the purpose of this exposition. The State of Louisiana has already passed a law to cooperate in the matter and is going to send an exhibit there. We expect other States to do the same, Alabama and some of the adjoining States, and we are peculiarly anxious to get the Latin-American countries interested in this exposition, because of the proximity of Gulfport to those countries.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the gentleman that I have been to Gulfport. I used to be very fond of going down to that section of the country in the wintertime for a short vacation before I was sent to Washington. It is the most delightful place in which to spend a few weeks or days, or you might say months, I think, there is in the United States, not barring Florida or California.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I thank the gentleman and I hope the gentleman will come again. He will always be a most welcomed visitor there.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that what they want to do down there is to advertise to the North that they have accommodations to take care of the people, and you will get lots of northerners to go down there in the cold winter weather, and you will get a great deal more benefit from them than you will if you invite these distinguished gentlemen from South America.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the contributions to which the gentleman from Wisconsin referred are not the only amounts to be devoted to this exposition. In addition to those, the various counties interested under authority given them by the legislature are going to make appropriations. Each of the counties is appropriating considerable sums of money, so that the amount of money locally appropriated is very much larger than that indicated by the gentleman from Wisconsin. If it is upon the theory that only $375,000 has been contributed by local interests that he predicates his objection, I hope he will withdraw it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I seriously question whether we should invite the diplomatic representatives of Latin America to this exposition, and I object.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit this to be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I do not wish to be called upon again to do this very unpleasant task. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the resolution is stricken from the calendar.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. RAKER was granted leave of absence for one day, on account of illness in his family.

TO PURLISH STATISTICS OF MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 107, authorizing and directing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics marriage and divorce.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the joint resolution is ordered stricken from the calendar.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object. Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing that is engaging the attention of and appealing to the public as much as the betterment and the advancement of social conditions. Now, this Senate joint resolution now under consideration authorizes the Director of the Census to gather statistics relating to marriage There is already a provision authorizing the exand divorce. penditure of $40,000 for that purpose. There is a provision in the present legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill authorizing the expenditure of an additional amount that will be necessary to gather these statistics. To me it seems to be a very important measure of legislation, if it may be so termed. The members of the committee are aware that there are organizations throughout the country agitating a constitutional amendment looking to uniform divorce laws. No one present will deny the fact that there is too much laxity in this regard, and any movement or effort along that line is a wholesome step in the opinion of a large number of people. Now, these records of marriage and also of divorce

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. With pleasure.

Mr. GARNER. As this is unanimous-consent day, may I suggest to my friend that I just made inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who said he was going to object, and he says it makes no difference what statement the gentleman makes he is going to insist upon his objection? Now, if that is true, is not the gentleman taking up the time on unanimous-consent day-

Mr. HELM. I am only going to talk a few minutes, just a few minutes. I would like for the House to understand the purpose of this joint resolution. It looks to me as if it did not deserve the fate the gentleman from Texas says it is destined to

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. COX. If this should become a law how much will it cost, has the gentleman any idea?

Mr. HELM. The estimate is something over $200,000.

Mr. COX. How long will it take to complete the work? Mr. MANN. That is each year.

Mr. COX. Each year?

Mr. MANN. Yes; each year. Mr. HELM. Let us get this clear. There have been statistics of this kind taken.

Mr. COX. When was the first time it was taken?

Mr. HELM. The first one was in 1887, the second in 1907, 20 years, and this one is proposed to be taken to cover the period extending from 1907 to 1918.

Mr. COX. The period between 1907 and 1918?

Mr. HELM. Between 1907 and 1918. Now, let me proceed just for a moment. It is an important thing for a man to know something about the record of his birth and the record of his parent's marriage. Take the case of one of the greatest Presidents that this Government ever had; it was years and years, owing to peculiar conditions, before the marriage certificate of the parents of that President of the United States could be found. Courthouses burn down and municipal divisions, counties, are changed and the records are lost or become confused, and the longer time the delay in gathering those statistics the more difficult and the more expensive it becomes.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is this to be a sociological study or basis-

Mr. HELM. It is to be taken under rules and regulations by the Census Department that will deal with marriage and divorce, the effect of divorce, the number of children born during that wedlock, the condition of those children and the fate, the result and effect of divorce upon the lives, character, and development of those children born during that wedlock, and I submit-

Mr. FESS. The gentleman spoke about a uniform law. Mr. HELM. I said there was agitation, and a very wholesome one I think, to secure a uniform law.

Mr. FESS. Does this go to that?

Mr. HELM. Perhaps not immediately and directly but incidentally, and I believe it is very wholesome legislation; and the fact it is to cost something, anything of value that is worth anything necessarily costs something.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HELM. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Wisconsin has announced his intention to object and there are a good many gentlemen here who want to get their bills up; I know I can not get mine up, but I notice some others can, and I would like to ask the gentleman whether—

Mr. HELM. I submit there is hardly a Member of the House who takes less of the time of the House than myself, and I believe I have a meritorious proposition, and I believe the membership of this House

Mr. BORLAND. I think that is entirely true-

Mr. HELM. Do not understand what this bill is and where it reaches, and other gentlemen here who are now undertaking to throw this House on the high gear must remember that I have occupied but a little portion of time, while they have consumed a great deal of the time of the House, and sometimes rather captiously

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount that will be required to take these statistics?

Mr. HELM. The statement came from the Director of the Census that it will cost something over $200,000, and that is one thing I want to bring out.

Mr. STAFFORD. If not, I can furnish the information which the Director of the Census gave to the subcommittee of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is embodied in his estimates, that the annual cost will be $60,000

Mr. HELM. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. Mr. STAFFORD. I have it right here in the estimates, and that the cost of the decennial census will be nearly $200,000.

Mr. HELM. There was a census taken during the adminis-

Mr. STAFFORD. And does the gentleman think at this time we should enter upon such an extravagant policy?

Mr. HELM. There is just where the gentleman has fallen There was just one census of this kind taken, under President Roosevelt. It cost $200,000. And that, if I am not mistaken, was a 10-year proposition. Now, it is my opinion and my belief that the cost of taking these statistics from 1907 to 1918 has already been included in the appropriation billget that clearly in your head-that these appropriations are now included in the appropriation bill, and that is to cover the period from 1907 to 1918. Thereafter the work is to be done annually, and can be done more easily and readily and kept up to date, without any cost, and can be done by the regular employees of the Census Bureau without any additional annual cost for the taking of them.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. I will.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to ask the gentleman if the plan adopted for taking this census annually will not make it cost but very little more than it will to take the decennial and quinquennial census and that the information will be much more accurate and much more easily taken?

Mr. HELM. The information will be certainly much more accurate and up to date, and my information is that the Director of the Census says, also fortified by the Secretary of Commerce, in whose department the Bureau of Census is, that after these statistics have been brought up to date there will be virtually no annual expense thereafter.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. Was I correct in my understanding that the gentleman stated some little time ago that this matter is also provided for by an item in the legislative appropriation

Mr. HELM. No. I have been unfortunate in my statement. The cost incidental to the assembling of these statistics is provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, including an appropriation of $40,000 in last year's bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELM. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Unless the information obtained by the census is made the basis of a law to be enacted, of what use is the information?

Mr. HELM. I do not believe I follow the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Unless it is intended to follow up the information by the enactment of a Federal law, of what use is the

Mr. HELM. Well, I can see that it can be of no substantial benefit. But it is to be followed up by such law, and that is the purpose of this act. I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would just like to make a very brief statement. There are a great many expenditures of the Government which must be met, a great many activities of the Government which can not be dispensed with under any circumstances. There are a good many things which ought to be done which can wait until tomorrow to be done. The world was not made in a day, and it will not be completed in another day. Everything that ought to be done will not be completed to-day, and it will not be com-pleted to-morrow. But just at present, under the present conditions, which it is not necessary to enumerate, we ought to be very careful about expending money which is not absolutely required. We know that in all probability we will be called upon without controversy, without much debate, with very little consideration, to appropriate large-I might say, huge-sums of money. We have got to draw the line on these things we can do without. I think the census on marriage and divorce which was taken the last time is absolutely valueless.

The only people who want this census—maybe "the only peo-ple" is not correct—are those who want a constitutional amendment providing that the National Government shall regulate marriage and divorce; but I am opposed to that. I am opposed to appropriating any money to find out whether it can be done or not; I am opposed to appropriating any money to-day which can properly wait until to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

STATISTICS OF FOREST PRODUCTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12417) authorizing and directing the Director of the Census to collect and publish the statistics of forest and State finance

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit it to remain in its present place on the calendar?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not see any advantage that can be gained in that. The matter has been considered. I will reserve my objection, however.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Gentlemen, this will not take more than four minutes.

When our fathers struggled for their independence in this land there were royalists abroad. When the dark days of the Civil War were here there were "copperheads" in the North. To-day England has her pacifists. In this hour of great peril to our land we have William J. Bryan.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that the meeting which he fathered in New York but a few days ago, the meetings which he fathered in this city more recently, are not calculated to aid our Nation in this great hour, but are calculated to do the public great harm. I therefore wish to raise my voice against such conduct. This is a time when there should be neither creeds nor politics, just plain American citizens. Our President, yours and mine, has passed the hour for deliberation, has passed the hour of doubt. He has taken a position, and there can be no steps backward. It is the duty of every man in the United States to back him up to the uttermost. [Applause.] And I decry those who see it their duty to work against the commonweal by trying to create a public sentiment opposed to the President's course. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is free speech in the United States at all times, and there should be. When we are striving to arrive at a policy, free speech is welcome and should be had. But when the time for deliberation and doubt is passed, when our country is dedicated to a purpose or a plan, then the time has come to act, and the only way that a patriotic citizen can act is to follow the great leader, the President of the United States.

Free deliberations and free discussions are born of a legal place. But I for one believe at this time they begin in skimmedmilk patriotism, and, if continued, they are destined to end in the shadowland of treason. We need a united, a harmonious, a perfectly organized Nation of men and women in this hour, Let there be no division of sentiment, no diversity of purpose, and no stragglers from the ranks.

The public press of our land has always been patriotic, perhaps never more so than now. Let me urge them to one fur-ther act of exalted patriotism. I urge the press to close their columns against this Bryan back-fire, and until he joins the ranks of patriotic Americans, that he be consigned to the shades of oblivion.

I have just received a letter from a constituent of mine in whose veins flows the blood of Puritan sires, whose forefathers fought in the colonial wars of the land, in the great Revolutionary struggle of our country, and in every war since, and I want to read to you what he says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4, 1917.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4, 1917.

Hon. Clarence Miller,
House of Representatives.

My Dear Sir: Mr. William Jennings Bryan asks the people to advise their Representatives in Congress of their wishes in this crisis. In accordance therewith I would say to you that it is my opinion that the interests of our country would be conserved by the immediate internment of the said Bryan.

Yours, sincerely,

WM. E. Richardson.

Applause.]

I hope that sentiment will find a responsive echo in the heart of every true citizen of this land. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I most earnestly ask that gentleman do not interject these speeches that have no reference to unanimous consents now. Other gentlemen have a lot of bills to be acted upon. Please do not put these remarks in when they are out of place, but regard the rights of other Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object. Mr. HUDDLESTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I rise to ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hub-DLESTON] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ANNUITIES TO MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA (SANTEE) SIOUX INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 135) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to speak for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson] I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been up several times. I hope there will be no objection to its being passed over.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman intend to try to pass it later under suspension of the rules?
Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the object?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

INSPECTORS OF HULLS AND BOILERS AT TAMPA, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17605) to amend the first and seventh paragraphs of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United right. We can not cry out against them when they are in their | States, as amended by the act of April 9, 1906.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sparkman], who, I have no doubt, is detained by very important committee business, I am going to ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the suggestion I was going to make in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE IN SAN JUAN COUNTY, N. MEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5424) to construct a bridge in San Juan County, State of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. Alexander]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, if the House passes this bill with the amendment of the House committee, is it the intention of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. Hernandez] to have the law conform to the House amendment?
Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Making this reimbursable? Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection. Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if the proposed bridge is across territory owned by others than Indians?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I will say to the gentleman that white people live on one side of the river and Indians live on the other side. It is a sort of cooperative bridge, whereby whites and Indians both are going to be benefited.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand; but the entire cost is to be borne by the Government, but the expense is ultimately to be borne by the Indians?

Mr. HERNANDEZ.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that these Indians would bear the ex-

Mr. HERNANDEZ. There was a bridge there heretofore, but that bridge was washed out three years ago by a flood, together with other bridges throughout that part of the county and section of New Mexico. The county is practically bank-rupt now. The State has built a road up to the site that has been selected for the bridge and has expended over $1,136,000 in building this road up to that point.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that as I understand the gentleman, his county is not in a financial condition at the present time to contribute toward the expense of this bridge?

Mr. MANN. As to that, they have not finished paying for the bridge that was washed out yet.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that this bridge is more necessary for the Indians than for the citizens of New Mexico living in this county.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is some distance from the railroad, and in order to reach the trading point the Indians have to cross this river. It is a dangerous river, filled with quicksands, and the Indians are entirely cut off from the railroad for the carriage of their wool, which they have to bring to market, and for the carriage of the stuff that they buy and take back with them after they have sold their wool; so that it is more necessary for these Indians, as our committee found in our investigations, than it is for the white people. The people are poor in that part of the country. They are frontiersmen, and they are not able to build this bridge themselves. The San Juan River is one of the main tributaries of the Colorado River of the West.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the circumstances as stated by the gentleman I am not going to press my objection, but as the substitute amendment is drawn there is no limit of cost fixed for this bridge. I assume the gentleman will have no objection to an amendment substantially as follows:

On line 10, page 2, following the word "State," to insert "at the cost of the Government of the United States, not to exceed $25,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I have no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from New Mexico a question.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. By whom is this bridge to be paid for? Mr. HERNANDEZ. It is to be reimbursable from any funds that may come into the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians.

Mr. BORLAND. Have the Navajo Indians any money or property?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. They have property, both timberlands and coal lands.

Mr. BORLAND.

Mr. BORLAND. Ample to pay for this? Mr. HERNANDEZ. Oh, yes. Mr. BORLAND. So that the expense will eventually fall upon their tribal property?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is no question about that. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, where is this bridge to be constructed, and by whom?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It is to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SABATH. By whom? Mr. HERNANDEZ. By the Indian Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SABATH. Who is going to pay for it?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The Government.

Mr. SABATH. I am asking these questions because I have not had a chance to read the bill, and I could not hear it read.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The expense is to be reimbursable from any funds that may come to the credit of the Navajo Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Let the bill be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. First I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a steel bridge over the San Juan River in San Juan County, State of New Mexico, at the best and most available location west or southwest and near to the town of Farmington, in said county, said bridge being absolutely necessary to enable a large portion of the Navajo Tribe of Indians to market their products of sheep, cattle, wool, manufactured blankets, jewelry, and other commodities belonging to them, so as to avoid great loss and inconvenience to them in their efforts to market such products to the north of the San Juan River. For said purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $52,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expense and cost of constructing said bridge.

With the following committee amendment:

With the following committee amendment:

Amend by striking out all of section 1 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a steel bridge across the San Juan River in San Juan County, State of New Mexico, at the best and most available location west or southwest and near to the town of Farmington, in said county and State; and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expense and cost of constructing said bridge: Provided, That said sum is to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians of the State of New Mexico."

Mr. STAFFORD. I think I have been recognized to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama a little later.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out, in line 10 of the committee amendment, after the word "State," the words "and there"; after the word "appropriated," the word "the"; in line 11 strike out the words "the sum of $25,000"; and in lines 12 and 13 strike out the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary"; and insert, after the word "State," in line 10, the words "at a cost to the Government of the United States not to exceed $25,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by striking out, in line 10, the words "and there" and, after the word "appropriated," the words "the sum of $25,000." In lines 12 and 13 strike out the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary " and insert, after the word "appropriated," in line 12, the words "at a cost to the Government of the United States not to exceed $25,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] to the committee amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to protest against the cowardly communication that has been read into the Record attacking that splendid American, William Jennings Bryan. [Applause.] He needs no defense from me, but the dignity of the American House of Representatives demands that such a pusillanimous attack upon him should be resented. He has been three times the nominee of a great party for President of the United States and has received the suffrage of American citizens to a total aggregate greater than any other man who ever lived in America.

This is not the time for cowards; it is not the time for jingoes; it is not the time for swashbucklers, bluffers, and braggarts. This is the time for men, and William Jennings Bryan is a man. [Applause.] In a time like this moment of the Nation's peril it takes a lion-hearted courage for a man to stand up on his feet and dare to speak for peace; but let us not forget that peace should be spoken for and that, after all, the great American people are the real rulers of this country, and it is their will that should be done, not the will of any Executive nor of any other one man.

The American people are entitled to say whether they will go to war or whether they will stay out of war, and the most dis-tinguished private citizen of our country has the right to say that he thinks this question ought to be submitted to the people. I want to say that if we are not to have free speech, if it is not to be tolerated that men shall give cool counsel in moments like this, all our teaching has been in vain and Americanism is not what we have thought it was, and is scarcely worth fighting for. If the time has come when a great man may not speak earnestly, truthfully, and wisely, even though it be in opposition to the views of the highest official authority, if that time has come, then what is it that our flag stands for and what are American liberties?

I protest against such an attack. I protest against it because it is unfair. I protest against it because it is inspired by the despicable principles, the vicious qualities, that have been so falsely ascribed to Mr. Bryan. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask that no gentleman follow this up?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. BURNETT. Regular order!
The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order. Mr. SLOAN. I move to strike out the last two words of the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to strike out the last

Mr. BURNETT. I give notice that I shall make a point of order against any man who goes away from the bill under consideration to discuss either side of this question. It is unfair to men who want business transacted.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the House for five minutes, if the gentleman from Alabama will pardon me.

Mr. BURNETT. I object. Mr. SLOAN. An attack has been made on a distinguished citizen of my State, Mr. Bryan. As soon as the author of the attack had taken his seat I was on my feet desiring to defend a man whom I never defended before; a man whom I have opposed in all his political views for years. He has actively opposed every political ambition I ever had with all the force of his matchless eloquence. But whether his views then or now agree with ours it matters not. Affairs have not gone so far that either Mr. Bryan or any other American citizen can be charged with a lack of patriotism for advocating peace. He comes from my State, and is the idol of a large number of people of that State regardless of political affiliations. He has spoken to more people in the United States and in the world than any other living man. I protest against men on this side or that side coming in and branding as treasonable the fairly considered words or sentiments of any man, no matter how much he may differ from me.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Nebraska is out of order and not discussing the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may proceed for three minutes more, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GARNER. Will that close it up?

Mr. MANN. I hope so.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may proceed out of order for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. I think it is time that we all should be calm and dispassionate. The test of patriotism is not whether we are opposed to the President of the United States or whether we support him. If there is a crisis, we know that it will come without action of the President of the United States. He has exercised his right and prerogative of severing diplomatic relations between us and one of our old-time friends. It can only be precipitated when the Congress of the United States, after deliberation at both ends of the Capitol, shall declare that we are in a state of war. It is not for gentlemen to talk of patriotism or nonpatriotism now; but when the Congress has had the issue before it and made its deliverance that we may draw strictures in speech. Until then I think that men on either side of this Chamber would do well to withhold their epithets and their compliments. [Applause.]

NATIONAL INSURANCE.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 250, to provide for the appointment of a commission to prepare and recommend a plan for the establishment of a national insurance fund and for the mitigation of the evil of unemployment.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House joint resolution 250.

House joint resolution 250.

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Commission on Social Insurance, hereinafter referred to as the commission. The commission shall be composed of five persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, two of whom shall be employers of labor and two of whom shall be representatives of organized labor, the Secretary of Labor to be the fifth member of the commission and the chairman thereof. It shall be within the power of the Secretary of Labor to select a representative of the Department of Labor to act in his stead in any hearing or investigation in which the Secretary himself may be unable to participate, and said representative shall have full power to act in the name of the Secretary of Labor; but the position of the Secretary of Labor as the fifth member and as chairman of the commission shall in no wise be impaired, and in the report, findings, and recommendations of the commission his name and title shall be appended.

SEC. 2. That the members of this commission shall be paid actual traveling and other necessary expenses, and, in addition, the members of the commission, other than the Secretary of Labor or his representative appointed by him pursuant to section 1, shall receive a compensation of $15 per diem while actually engaged in the work of the said commission is authorized as a whole or by supcommittees of of the said commission and while going to or returning from such work.

The commission duly appointed, to hold sittings and public hearings anywhere in the United States; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and to compel testimony; to employ such secretaries, experts, stenographers, and other asistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which said commission is created; and to rent such offices, to purchase such stationery and other supplies, and to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary to carry out the purposes for which the commission is created; and to authorize its members or its employees to travel in or outside of the United States on the business of the commission.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the commission to inquire into the causes of unemployment; to inquire into the subject of systems of insurance, voluntary or obligatory, contributory or noncontributory, now in vogue to meet unemployment, invalidity, and sickness, and to what extent the Government of the United States may aid by establishing a Federal insurance system for the benefit of the wage earners of the United States when in need by reason of involuntary unemployment, whether the unemployment be due to lack of work, to disability arising by reason of sickness, or to the impairment or destruction of earning capacity because of old age. If the commission shall recommend that a Federal insurance system or fund be established by the Government of the United States, it shall prepare and recommend the regulations that would be necessary for the successful administration of a national insurance system or fund, the amount of said fund, and the method of cooperation with existing insurance said fund, and the method of cooperation with existing insurance systems.

Szc. 4. That the commission shall submit, through the President, to Congress a report containing the testimony taken, its findings, and its recommendations on or before one year from the date of the appointment of this commission.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the commission for the period ending one year from the date of the appointment of the commission: Provided, That no portion of this money shall be paid except upon the order of said commission signed by the chairman thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois has 20

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the title, Social Insurance, will not frighten you. The title to the bill is somewhat misleading. Instead of asking for the appointment of a commission to prepare and recommend plans for the establishment of a national insurance fund, I ask for the appointment of a commission which is to inquire into the causes of unemployment, to inquire into the subject of unemployment insurance, voluntary or obligatory, contributory or noncontributory, and into the subjects of old-age pensions and health insurance. The commission is also to study the feasibility of establishing a Federal insurance system.

Four years ago, or rather in the platform of 1912, the Progressive Party put in a specific demand for social legislation. for unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, and so forth: but, strangely enough, the demand was dropped in the platform

Several years ago the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill carried an appropriation in connection with an international conference on social insurance which was to be held in this city in the year 1914. The conference did not take place on account of the war.

I have not the time, nor will I attempt to go into an exhaustive analysis of the subject. I ask for a commission of inquiry, I ask that the American people and the American Congress study this problem, I ask you to study the experience of other countries, and I ask that the experience of other countries guide you only in so far as legislation of other nations can be made applicable to American conditions. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentle-man from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill ought not to pass the House of Representatives. It strikes at the very foundation of existing insurance organizations of the United States whether they operate by authority from the State or upon the voluntary plan. There are fraternal organizations of one sort and another which good citizens have built up with a view of taking care of themselves and their families against old age, and this bill strikes at every one of them.

A few days ago, when we were discussing the revenue bill, the question of taxing insurance companies was up. It developed that from almost every corner of the country protests came, in the name of labor itself, against the unfair taxation of mutual organizations and societies that have performed a long and honorable service in protecting their members against old age

Everyone sympathizes with any movement that looks toward the relief of those who are incapable of taking care of themselves, but not by the overthrow of existing agencies of a beneficial character. We have recognized the wisdom of encouraging or-ganizations formed for the purpose of inducing men and women to be thrifty, and to guard against the possibilities of poverty and distress in their older years, but we are not yet prepared for complete socialism in this regard.

The theory as to existing insurance associations has been that the State relieves itself of caring for the unfortunate or the improvident by encouraging those voluntary efforts of the people to take care of themselves. Now it is proposed to put the burden on the State. The suggestion comes from the able but the sole Socialistic Member of this body who asks that this House take the first real step, not toward Government ownership and control of insurance only but toward the introduction and adoption of a socialistic program in the United States.

First of all, this proposal means a charge upon the Treasury and an appropriation for a commission which is to inquire into and investigate the affairs of business men and particularly fraternal and insurance associations. For an indefinite period these worthy bodies of public-spirited men and women who have accumulated funds are to be dragged into the limelight of publicity and are to be put upon the rack with respect to the methods of caring for their members in their infirmities.

We have a Department of Labor that is less than one decade old that might make this inquiry without an expensive commission, if Congress decided to embark upon this new under-We are appropriating large sums of money annually to this department for all kinds of inquiries and investigations, and our desks are loaded every week with volumes of reports which doubtless contain as much information affecting insurance, affecting those in poverty and in distress, as we would obtain from a commission; yet to satisfy our friend of the Socialistic Party-able, ingenious, and earnest as he may bewe are asked to discard the Department of Labor, to employ a lot of new and expensive machinery, and create a new commission to go abroad and sensationalize, if not disturb to their detriment, a great number of legitimate beneficial organizations that now exist. We ought not do it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the Mr. LONDON.

gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will adopt this resolution, and I trust the Members will not be influenced by the appeal made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] that this is a socialistic experiment.

It is true that the resolution was introduced by the one Socialist in the House, but it is also true that it was unanimously reported to this House by the Committee on Labor, which is made up of Democrats and Republicans and which has only one Socialist member.

The fact is that social insurance is no longer the exclusive ossession of the Socialist Party. It has been advocated in this country in a national way by at least one of the great parties. It has been advocated by Republicans, as was evidenced at a recent Republican caucus when distinguished members of the minority party, so I am told, urged upon their party the necessity for taking up this kind of legislation, and I think the suggestion made by those gentlemen was a

As a Democrat, I hope my party will have the wisdom to beat the Republican Party to it, because social insurance is coming in this country just as surely as rural-credits legislation came. All that was necessary in the latter instance was that the American farmer should discover what was being done across the sea, and then he insisted that he should secure similar legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KEATING. I can not yield now. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would have us believe that only Socialists advocate social insurance. I call his attention to the fact that the great Bismarck and Kaiser Wilhelm have been among the leading advocates of social insurance, and no one, so far as I know, has ever described either of those gentlemen as a Social-I hope this resolution will pass, not by a party vote, but by the unanimous vote of this House.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, personally I am sick and tired of these commissions. I have had a service here now of 20 years on the 4th of March next. I do not recall any commission created by Congress which has been of any real service or value unless it consisted of a joint committee of Congress, which some-times does effective work. We create commission after commis-Nobody reads the reports-nobody in Congress, at least. ston. Sometimes people outside read them to hunt for an argument in favor of some belief already firmly fixed. It is here proposed to create a commission of five persons, the Secretary of Labor being named nominally, but not being expected to serve, which will run on indefinitely, with no limit as to what the expenses shall be, with no limit of time; and the purpose of the commission, as suggested by the resolution, primarily is to visit foreign countries. What man in his same senses believes that this is a very good time to visit foreign countries to obtain information there? I may be mistaken, but it does seem to me an inopportune time, even if you wanted to do it at any time. The truth is that all the information that could be acquired under the terms of this joint resolution could be acquired within a reasonable time by a man sitting in the Library of Congress, because he would not have to listen to the wild opinions of crazy men who want to advertise themselves by getting into the headlines in newspapers as the result of making wild statements as witnesses before some commission. That is what most of the testimony before these commissions consists of. Of course, the men who are appointed on a commission, even at a compensation of $15 a day and expenses, will never see the time when their work is closednever. We created a joint committee of the House and Senate last summer with directions to report by the 1st of January. was not in favor of the proposition, and I called attention to the fact that it would not be possible for that committee to make a report by the 1st of January, considering that there was a political campaign then in progress and that every member of that committee would be in that campaign. But we were told they would be ready to report. The 1st of January has long since passed, and they really have not yet commenced work. They have had their time extended after two efforts, and purely as a matter of good nature by the House and Senate because of the individuals who were involved.

You commence these; you never end them. It is not the way to get legislation if you want legislation. Of course, we all know that the Government of the United States, under the Constitution as it now exists, has no power to do what is desired to be done under the terms of this resolution, and I doubt the advisability of Congress creating a one-sided commission for the purpose of getting amendments made to the Constitution. little while ago we had up a proposition to obtain information relative to marriage and divorce, the main purpose of which was to get a constitutional amendment to give Congress control uniformly throughout the United States over questions of divorce if not marriage. If people believe in propagandas to amend the Constitution let them work it out as all such things have been worked out in the past, by the diffusion of opinions and information among the people from person to person. It is not the mation among the people from person to person. It is not the duty of the General Government, every time some man wants to amend the Constitution, to hunt information in favor of the amendment. A commission like this appointed will necessarily be a one-sided commission. If it is not, it is of no value. I am against the creation of any more of these commissions. I think that the Members of the Congress who draw $7,500 a year which is more than $15 a day—ought to know something. I do not mean to say we do [laughter], but that is what we are sent here for, and that is what we are paid for. Every time a Member of Congress, who ought to investigate and study for himself, ber of Congress, who ought to investigate and study for himself, who ought to work himself, who wants to bring information which he requires before the Congress, proposes a commission I think he ought to quit the business and let some one competent to fill his job come in his place. [Applause.] We constantly go on the theory that we do not know anything, that we are not qualified to learn anything, that a body of 435 men in this House, drawing $7,500 a year, can not do anything, can know nothing unless we appoint some clerk to gather together some information and give us the clerk's opinion. That is one reason why we have grown in disfavor with the people, and the people do not have as much respect for Congress as they used to have. We are have as much respect for Congress as they used to have. We are constantly putting upon the executives all the work, shirking it ourselves, refusing to accept our responsibility, and then hoping that the people will excuse each of us personally; one at a time, at least. Let us do without commissions, and if we have work to do, do it ourselves. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my

me. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves five minutes.
Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have 12 minutes' time

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used seven minutes. Mr. LONDON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to admit that the Members of this House do not know anything; but, on the other hand, I am not going to say that all of the Members are thoroughly posted and informed on every subject that is or might be from day to day submitted to the House, though we might have some who are and are willing to admit that

Mr. Speaker, the argument made by my colleague [Mr. Mann] against the commission has been made many times heretofore, and I must confess that there is a great deal of force and truth in what he says as to the multiplicity of commissions. On the other hand, we do secure at times very valuable information from commissions created, which information, when favorably acted upon, often results in beneficial legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in the Sixtieth Congress, nearly 10 years ago, when I introduced the first workmen's compensation bill, very few Members were then familiar with the principle underlying the bill, and a great many objections were raised against it. It was claimed by many, as it is claimed to-day, that under our Constitution no workmen's compensation bill could be drafted that would be constitutional. I was then charged with trying to bring about a complete change and reversal of our liability laws. Yes; some even charged that the proposition was socialistic, and that I was endeavoring to overthrow the established system of jurisprudence by shifting the responsibility for injuries sustained from the employee to the em-Ployer.

For several years I failed to secure recognition of my bill, but finally the Judiciary Committee, to which the bill had been refinally the Judiciary Committee, to which the bill reported a resolution providing for a ferred, in lieu of the bill reported a resolution providing for a commission, just as this bill provides, which would investigate the entire question and the principle on which my bill was drafted. I did not at first look upon the commission with favor, but accepted it. Notwithstanding the fact that it did not report the bill in which I was so vitally interested, it did recognize the principle of workmen's compensation and recommended a bill similar to mine, but which did not give the compensation to the injured employee that I thought and still think should be awarded.

Nevertheless, the information given by the commission and the publicity given the principle upon which the proposition is founded had a wholesome effect; so much so that within a few years the majority of the States repealed the liability law and enacted workmen's compensation statutes. The House itself during the last session, by a nearly unanimous vote, passed a workmen's compensation law applicable to the Government employees, and I doubt very much that such legislation would have been secured had it not been for the information secured by the commission. The report of the commission not only enabled the membership of the House to familiarize itself with the proposition, but secured for them valuable information.

I feel satisfied that if the resolution which is now pending is favorably acted upon and a commission is created, information will be secured which will show that each and every country which had adopted old-age pensions, sickness and invalidity in-surance, and unemployment insurance, acted wisely, humanely, and for the best interests of the country. I am pleased to say that I introduced resolutions in the Sixty-second and Sixtythird Congresses on this subject, and believe that it is only a question of time before this proposed legislation will be enacted into law by Congress

For this reason I am heartily in favor of this resolution, believing that knowledge of this subject, as on any other subject, can not hurt anyone and, on the contrary, will guide us in the right direction.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is correct about commissions to some extent. great many commissions are appointed for the purpose of sidetracking legislation, and other commissions are appointed for the purpose of giving us some knowledge on which to act. could not get a comprehensive report on this intricate question from a committee of this House. The report would almost certainly be partisan. The multiplicity of our duties would necessarily interfere with the thoroughness of an investigation by a committee of Congress. I confess if I had my way I should provide that all five of these commissioners should be appointed by the President. I should not name the Secretary of Labor as one of the commissioners, because he has other duties to perform.

Furthermore, there is no question that even commissions which are appointed for the purpose of staving off legislation, as a matter of fact, often do good work.

In 1907 a commission was appointed on the immigration question for the purpose of staving off immigration-restriction legislation. The results of its findings were embodied in the Burnett immigration bill, which has just passed over the President's veto. It was that immigration commission which reported that the best way to restrict immigration is by means of an educational

The commission proposed in this resolution is not devised for the purpose of staving off legislation, but for the purpose of obtaining legislation. Without a very thorough report we do not know what sort of legislation we need. Yet many of us think that social insurance ought to be instituted either by the States or by the United States or by a combination of the two, probably the latter. Social-insurance legislation is proving a success in various countries of the world, and I believe that we ought to institute it here in the United States. They have different systems in different countries of the world. The British Parliament, when it finds itself face to face with a new question, puts a commission at work to investigate it. The results of the commission's studies are incorporated in what is known as a blue book. These blue books are among the most useful works on political enconomy of which I have any knowledge. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. GARDNER. Half a minute.
Mr. LONDON. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. I believe that if this commission is appointed, and if the members devote their attention to elucidating this question and do not fritter away their energy in trying to dish each other, we shall get real results. If they try to cooperate, I believe that they can do so, and I believe that they can and will recommend legislation which will meet the approval of the country

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] desire to use more time?

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman going to conclude in one speech?

Mr. LONDON. Yes; I have six minutes. Does the gentleman intend to use his time?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman intend to conclude in one speech?

Yes; I will conclude in one speech.

Mr. LONDON. Yes; I will conclude in one speech.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my friend and colleague from Chicago spoke of the commission that was created some years ago in reference to compensation of railroad employees. I believe he introduced a bill on the subject. It was not a very happy reference. The commission created at a very considerable expense investigated the subject of compensation to railroad employees who were injured in the service. That commission made an elaborate report, presented an elaborate bill, which it recommended for passage. Under the influence of the commission the bill passed the House. The bill passed the Senate, I believe, with some amendments, and came back to the This was a Congress or so ago, and the bill has been as dead as a last year's smelt ever since. There is no one in the House who has had the courage to revive it. It was revived in the next Congress. I think the bill was introduced in that Congress, but I am not sure. However, it was reported but was not called up for passage. I do not think it has been reintroduced in this Congress. It has not been reported. The commission was an elaborate one, which made an elaborate report, and each House, under the inspiration of the moment, passed the bill; but when the railroad employees learned what was in it, how it betrayed their rights, and called the attention of Members of Congress to the betrayal, the whole thing was dished. It was ended. It took a good deal of courage on the part of somebody in the House in the closing days of Congress to prevent one of the bodies to agree to the amendments of the other. I think that took place here, though I am not sure about that. That is the result of not doing the work yourself of obtaining information.

For years I belonged to a committee of this House which brought in more important legislation than any other committee of the House, and it never in my day resorted to a commission. It never shirked its responsibility. The members of it studied and knew themselves what this House will never learn through asking a clerk to do the work.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I desire to say that the object of this commission is to give a start to and begin the study of a great and vexed subject. The work of the commission will not be permitted to die, because the subjects with which the commission is to deal present live problems. Will unemployment be with us? Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. How about the commission a couple of years ago that was appointed to consider the causes for social unrest? Mr. LONDON. I will answer that a minute later, when I will have developed this point.

Unemployment will be with us, and therefore a commission that will be engaged in the study of the causes of unemployment will be under constant pressure to study the subject. And Congress will not permit it to die.

You are being continuously urged by Government employees for old-age pensions. Several members of the Cabinet have recommended it. You promised, as a matter of fact, in the last platform of the Democratic Party, old-age pensions for Govern-ment employees. You are not prepared to legislate on this subject. You do not know enough of it. You refuse to study it. The object of this commission is to study the problems of old-age pensions and other forms of social insurance. Social insurance has descended from the realm of speculation. principles have been adopted in a number of countries-in England, France, Germany, and so forth.

In England unemployment insurance was adopted most reluctantly in the year 1911, but it has proven a tremendous success. And in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who fears the interest of the insurance companies might be adversely affected, I will say it will be the business of the commission to study to what extent you are to cooperate with existing insurance institutions, with fraternal insurance institutions, and with labor unions. In other words, it is a commission to study, a commission to acquire knowledge and systematize knowledge, a commission to coordinate bits of information scattered here and there and to prepare it for the consideration of Members of Con-

Mr. KELLEY. Now, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that there was neither a time limit nor an expense limit in this resolution. Is that correct?

Mr. LONDON. I think they are to report in one year, and I think they are limited to an expenditure of $50,000.

Now, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], I desire to say that the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations is not without value. As you carefully read and study those 11 volumes you may not find a solution of the problem that the commission has presented to you, but the commission has done one thing-it has presented the problem in a most emphatic way.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that nothing that a man does is without value, even if it may be only to show how foolish it is. But can we not ascertain all this information for ourselves better than through a commission such as you desire to create?

Mr. LONDON. There is no doubt but that if Members of Congress would devote a year's study to this subject for themselves they would acquire that knowledge for themselves. But those of you who are familiar with the subject know that it is necessary for some one to gather together all available knowledge, and, in a way, to provide a course of literature and of study for the Members of Congress.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman think that the Commission on Industrial Relations succeeded in coordinating those points in the 11 volumes which they issued?

Mr. LONDON. I very much doubt whether the gentleman from Missouri has read those 11 volumes.

Mr. MEEKER. I have read some part of them; but-Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman has read only a part of it he does not know to what extent his judgment would be changed by that part which he has not read. [Applause.] Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

MEEKER.

Would the gentleman consider as of any value the volumes that have not been published-this wagonload of stuff, in addition to the printed report, that is mere talk?

Mr. LONDON. Well, when a man knows what he is talking about, talk is a most useful thing. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LONDON. Yes. Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that the plan of legislation that the gentleman proposes would be intended to aid not only one class of labor but all classes of labor.

Mr. LONDON. We limit the commission to no particular class or group of society.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then why does the gentleman limit the labors of the commission to the study only of the question of organized labor, leaving unorganized labor, which is much more numerous, without any representation?

Mr. LONDON. That is true only so far as the personnel of the commission is concerned. Unfortunately the unorganized laborer does not possess the solidarity, the efficiency, the intelligence, or the virtue necessary to consider broad questions.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LONDON.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman mean to confine the deficiencies of unorganized labor to a lack of solidarity, efficiency, and intelligence, and not to a lack of virtue?

[Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that I have more respect for the man who subordinates his own interests to the interests of his class than for the man who defies the whole world and works for himself and himself only. [Applause.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Mr. LONDON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. You speak of their ability to select men to represent them. This commission is to be appointed by the President of the United States. Could not the President select a man outside of organized labor to represent that branch of

Mr. LONDON. Well, he could; but after all, that is not a vital provision of the bill. I do not believe it is vital. If it be a defect it does not destroy the value of the bill, and I therefore ask gentlemen who agree with the main purpose of the bill to vote for it in spite of its shortcomings. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. This resolution provides for a lopsided commission, and you would have a lopsided investigation and a lopsided report.

Mr. LONDON. It would not be a lopsided commission. The President of the United States will appoint the members of the commission. If you can trust the President and ascribe to him sufficient intelligence to appoint a commission to investigate other matters in foreign countries, why not let him be vested with discretion to appoint five men in this matter? This debate is interesting in itself, I may say, but it does not go to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the gentleman himself did not show sufficient confidence in the President to permit him to select this commission without strange restrictions as to personnel.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Michigan?
Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. I think there is one thing that we should take into consideration, and that is that the President should appoint the five. You ask about union labor being represented. You know from your hearings that the chief officials are opposed to union labor. It seems to me it should be left to the representatives of all labor.

Mr. LONDON. They were opposed to compulsory insurance. They were not opposed to the study of the problems.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois, Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask unanimous consent again to proceed for two minutes. I have information that under the circumstances I believe the Members will be interested in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in these troublous times, when the earnest, sincere, and patriotic Members of Congress have on their minds the question of war, it seems to me it is important to know the sentiments and wishes of the men who will be required to fill the rifle pits and the trenches in case we do become involved in this awful carnage of war in Europe. I therefore desire to read into the Record a telegram that I received to-day from the Chicago Federation of Labor, which represents about 300,000 working men and women:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 4, 1917.

FRANK BUCHANAN, Washington, D. C .:

The Chicago Federation of Labor, in regular meeting assembled, protests against the country taking part in the war in Europe. We demand that American citizens be prevented from entering the war zone.

CHICAGO FEDERATION OF LABOR,
JOHN FITZPATRICK, President,
E. N. NOCKELS, Secretary.

* This is the word from the men who are working at their trades in the city of Chicago, and who, as I say, will be called on to do the fighting in case we become involved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. London) there were—ayes 67, noes 65.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. If a quorum develops, will that take away the right to demand the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. It will not. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-one Members; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing this bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were yeas 189, nays 138, answered "present" 2, not voting 104, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I asked unanimous consent to file minority views on a bill which came from the Committee on Banking and Currency. A new bill was introduced, which gave it a new number, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to file the report (No. 1406, pt. 2) on the new bill (H. R. 20661).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the House substitute for the bill S. 135, an act for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The House substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance that may be found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases for any annuities that may be ascertained to be due to the said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., p. 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., p. 544), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of rendition of judgment, and shall determine and include the present value of the same, not including interest and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against any amount found due under said treaties all moneys paid to said Indians or expended on their account by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863: Provided, That the treaty of 1868 shall not be a bar to recovery, but all equities and benefits received thereunder by the Santee Sioux Indians shall be taken into consideration in the determination of the amount of recovery. Upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to ascertain and determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing thereon the names of all living members of said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom only the names of those found to have personally participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita to the persons borne on the said roll.

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore employed by said bands of Indians when an appro

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the sending to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of the Santee Indians based on treaty negotiations with the Government in 1837 and in 1851. It has passed this House by unanimous consent three different times.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is it a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has been unanimously reported three different times since I have been in Congress and passed the House three times by unanimous consent. It is probably the most justifiable claim that has been made against the Government by any Indian tribe in this country. Prior to 1837 these Indians owned a large section of land in Illinois. They ceded it to the Government of the United States for the consideration of an annuity of $15,000 a year forever. In 1851 they ceded all the land they held in Iowa and Minnesota for a consideration of $61,000 a year, to be paid for 50

During the Indian outbreak in 1862 a portion of these Indians went on the warpath. As a result of this outbreak, the Congress of the United States, in 1863 abrogated its treaties with these Indians, and the result is that they have not been paid one dollar upon these annuities since the abrogation of the treaty in 1863. There was never a more justifiable claim against the Government than this one. These Indians ceded the finest tracts of land in this country to the Government of the United States for a consideration of from 1 to 30 cents an acre in the States of Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota.

This bill proposes to send this claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication, and I believe it ought to pass. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. There were about 25 families of the Santee Sioux who left Nebraska and went to Flandreau in the year 1869. I want to ask the gentleman if this bill will carry their rights?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It protects the rights of every member of the Wahpakoota and Medawakanton branches of the Sioux Indians known as the Santee Sioux. Are they Santee Sioux?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; these 25 families were Santee Sioux, and they left Nebraska and went to Flandreau, and their rations were withheld for a period of four years, during the years 1871, 1872, 1873, and 1874.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. They would come under the terms of this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that part of these Indians only went on the warpath, and it was the intention of the Congress to only forfeit the lands and annuities and rights of those who were on the warpath, and not to forfeit the rights of these two bands of Wahpakootas and Medawakan-

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is correct. The leaders of this rebellion among the Indians were the young men of the tribe who could not be controlled by the chief, and most of them were apprehended, several of them hanged, 200 of them imprisoned, and those others who were not captured and hanged or imprisoned escaped to Canada, and they never returned to this country.

The people who are supposed to be benefited by this bill are the innocent Indians; and even thought they participated in the rebellion it would not be fair to these Indians, in view of the precedents established by the Government of forgiving all depredations and insurrections among the various Indian tribes of the country and restoring to them their annuities provided for by Government treaties, to withhold the annuities from these Indians now. For example, many tribes in Oklahoma joined the Southern Confederacy during the Civil War, and their annuities were forfeited at that time by act of Congress in July, 1863; and in every single instance those annuities have been restored. Not only that, but every Indian tribe in the United States, excepting this one single Indian tribe known as the Santee Sioux, has been forgiven and their annuities restored.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes. Mr. EMERSON. How can you tell at this time those that were in insurrection and those who were not? Fifty-five years have elapsed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. We have a roll of them, and we know by the records who participated in the rebellion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that one of the purposes of this bill is to ascertain how many Indians did forfeit and how many Indians would be entitled in the event you can not sustain the right of those who did go on the warpath to their annuity? I think they should be entitled to their annuity.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is correct; and the right of these Indians has already been established. two branches of the Sioux engaged in this outbreak—the upper Sioux and the lower Sioux. We sent the case of the upper Sioux to the Court of Claims in 1902, and the Court of Claims adjudicated the difference between the Government and these people and restored the annuities of the upper Sioux and established all of the damages that were a proper charge against these Indians at that time on account of the outbreak and rendered judgment in favor of the upper branch of the Sioux. These two branches participated alike in the outbreak. Therefore, if the court was correct in restoring the annuities to the upper branch of the Sioux, it would likewise be correct if it restored the annuities of the lower branch.

Mr. SUMNERS. I understand the theory of this bill is that the Indians who participated in this outbreak were punished for that participation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. And now the descendants of the Indians who did participate and were punished will be permitted to participate in the benefits?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. They would, of course; but there are practically no descendants, because they were mostly young men who participated in the outbreak.

Mr. SUMNERS. But in the bill you do not propose to draw any line of cleavage along that line.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Not on the descendants.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I notice the Indian appropriation bill, which is now in conference, has an amendment on page 80 which contains, I think, the Senate bill, which has been stricken out by the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. & TEPHENS of Nebraska. That is correct.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The House committee has reported a new bill. Will the gentleman, as briefly as he can, explain the difference between these two measures?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Well, the difference between the Senate bill and the House bill is principally in the fees allowed attorneys. That has been the bone of contention for many years. These poor Indians have been robbed of their rights, or, rather, had their rights withheld for 25 years very largely on account of contending factions and attorneys who have wanted to take advantage of the situation to secure larger fees than in the judgment of the House they were entitled to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And this House bill also restricts-

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That House bill restricts attorneys fees to 5 per cent-

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I mean it restricts the cases somewhat. It allows some offsets that are not allowed in the Senate bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Oh, yes; it allows the Government to charge against these Indians, against these annuities, everything that the Government has paid to them in all the years since these annuities were abrogated.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In other words, the House bill makes provisions strict enough that a good case will have to be made out in the Court of Claims before judgment can be rendered?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is correct.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman tell the House how much will be the maximum amount that might be allowed by the court?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Well, I think these Indians would recover something like a million dollars should the bill I apprehend that the court would probably find that the Government owed them, after deducting $2,000,000 for damages and other considerations, that the Government would still owe them something like a million dollars.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I do.

Mr. EMERSON. As I understand, this bill simply gives the Court of Claims authority to assess damages, does it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It gives the Court of Claims authority to ascertain what rights these Indians have under these treaties and ascertain the amounts, if any, that are due

Mr. EMERSON. But the Court of Claims would have no authority without this act?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. No.

Mr. EMERSON. These Indians were in rebellion against the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; some of them.

Mr. EMERSON. We do not give pensions to Confederate soldiers

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. No; but we restored the rights of all the Indian tribes of this country, under former treaties, who were Confederate soldiers. In fact, most of the Indians in Oklahoma joined the Confederate Army. Many tribes in Oklahoma, especially the Five Civilized Tribes, enlisted in the Confederate Army, and the annuities which were abrogated by the Government were restored to them directly after the war, and every dollar of those annuities were paid.

Mr. EMERSON. Why is an Indian in rebellion against the United States better than a white man in rebellion against the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Because these Indians had rights under former treaties that had nothing to do with the rebellion. They gave up the richest sections of the States of Iowa, Illinois, and Minnesota to the Government of the United States at the price of 1 cent, 10 cents, and 30 cents an acre, and this Government has refused to this day to pay them even that pittance for the finest lands in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes left.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before the House a good many times, and the gentleman could have passed this bill in a minute, in my judgment, without a dissenting voice or vote in the House if he could get the House to believe that the bill passed by the House would ever become a law. had an agreement to that effect in the last Congress, practically an agreement, and there was no law enacted, and the expectation is that if this bill passes the House in any shape the House conferees now on the Indian appropriation bill will be asked to agree to the Senate item in that bill covering the same thing in the same language as the Senate bill in this case which the House committee has proposed to strike out. Now, if the House conferees on the Indian appropriation bill would refuse to let the Senate write the measure that has been advocated by some of them, a measure which has passed the Senate, a Senate amendment, I would not object to bringing it in in conference, or I would not object to an individual bill passing and a conference being agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman spoke about the House conferees agreeing. I will say, as one of the conferees, that it is always my intention to stand by the provisions of the House. So far as I am concerned, I shall expect to do all in my power to try to have the House provision that is now before the House incorporated in the bill or passed, and not the Senate provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Oklahoma interpellated the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] as to the amendment in the sundry appropriation bill, No. 112. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas in the gentleman's time whether that was the item I asked to have a separate vote on before it was agreed to in conference?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that was one of the items.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question about it, and the gentleman stated in private conversation to me that under no circumstances would he agree to it without the House had an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman knows that the members of the committee that have the Indian appropriation bill in charge now will stand by the action of this House in the present bill as well as heretofore. We can not pledge what we will do. It is well known it is a matter of compromise between the two Houses. We will report the House bill if there is any chance to do it; and if not, we will report back to the House the situation.

Mr. MANN. I have great confidence in the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. GARNER. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Always.

Mr. GARNER. Under the rules of the House, as the Indian appropriation bill is now situated, could the conferees on the part of the House incorporate the present bill in the Indian bill in lieu of the amendment that the Senate inserted?

Mr. MANN. They could; yes.
Mr. GARNER. And be within the rule of the House?
Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Now, if I understand the gentleman from

Mr. MANN. But the Senate conferees will not let them.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Oklahoma each have suggested that they will do everything in their power, and they have some power in the premises, to insert this provision in the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked me a question, and I made an erroneous answer. The gentleman asked me if the House conferees could insert the proposition inserted in the House in lieu of the Senate amendment. I said they could. I was in error. They could try to do it, but I do not think they could.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We could at least pledge the House that we would stand by the House bill, and in the event that the Senate would not agree, we could report back to the House and leave the matter with them to adjust.

Mr. MANN. I have no complaint about what the action of the House conferees has been and their attitude.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Yes. Mr. MANN

Mr. CANNON. Is this provision in substance on the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. Let me give a little history of the matter and the gentleman will see it.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman a question? I am merely trying to facilitate the business and save time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's measure is not conting up this afternoon. We have a Republican caucus to-night and we are going to quit pretty soon.

Mr. GARNER. And if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] would agree with the House that they would not agree to any amendment other than that contained in this bill, we might possibly unanimously agree to it.

Mr. MANN. I will not detain the House very long, but I think it just as well to make a little statement concerning this matter. I will not go further back than the last Congress.

In the last Congress we passed a bill on May 4, 1914, which is, believe, precisely the same as the amendment now proposed by the House committee to the Senate bill. That bill went to the Senate, went to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, was reported by that committee, and was afterwards recommitted by the Senate to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was reported back to the Senate in August, 1914. On March 1, 1914, final adjournment taking place on March 3, the Senate passed the bill striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting as a new bill precisely the same language that passed the Senate this time, which the House committee recommends be stricken out. At that time neither side would yield. There are some attorneys interested in the bill, as well as other people. The House bill did not contain this language:

And said act of forfeiture and all subsequent acts and parts of acts and treaties inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed for the purposes hereof.

There is no occasion for repealing any of these acts when you by specific legislation refer their claims to the Court of Claims, unless you want to put in some additional claims that nobody has heard of. The House bill contained the provision that in arriving at the present value of the annuities which had been agreed upon, interest should not be included.

Well, there is interest claimed on some of these matters for more than 50 years; interest where the Government disputed the right of the Indians to the payments. It never has been the policy of the Government to pay interest on disputed claims. Gentlemen can see that when you come to defining the terms of the treaty of 1837 or the treaty of 1863, interest is a very vital matter.

Then the Senate bill contains this provision: It authorizes the Government of the United States to set off against the Indian claims "all payments or other provisions, of every name and nature, made to or for said bands by the United States, or to or for any members thereof under the authority of any act of Congress, excluding treaties, since said act of forfeiture was passed, which are properly chargeable against said unpaid annuities.

The House bill contained a provision providing for a set-off against moneys found due the Indians under said treaties, a setoff of all moneys paid to said Indians or expended on their account by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863, provided that the treaty of 1868 shall not be a bar to recovery, but all equities and benefits received thereunder by the Santee Sioux Indians shall be taken into consideration in the determination of the amount of the recovery. In other words, we have paid to the Santee Sioux Indians large sums of money under the treaty of 1868. It is proposed to set aside the treaty of 1868 now. That is the claim. But we have paid the Indians large sums of money under the treaty. They want to relegate the Indians to their rights under the former treaty.

Now, the House bill contains the provision that when they find the amount, if any, that is due to the Indians under the former than amount, if any, that is due to the Indians under the former than the money that has been treaty they shall set off as against that the money that has been paid to them under the treaty of 1868. But the Senate says, "Moneys paid, excluding treaties." There are only two ways in which we have paid the money-either under a treaty or as a

A distinguished Senator said to me that under the terms of the House bill there would be nothing due to the Indians. That is what the department has said. We have talked about attorney's fees, but the real "negro in the woodpile" is the provineys fees, but the real negro in the woodpile is the provision in the House bill that money that we have paid to them under the treaty of 1868, which they say ought to be abrogated, shall be charged against them when provision is made for paying to them what is due them under the former treaty. If you will read the Senate bill, you would conclude that it in-cluded everything heretofore paid the Indians. It says:

All payments or other provisions of every name and nature made to or for said bands by the United States or to or for any member thereof thereunder the authority of any act of Congress, excluding treaties.

We allow them to set up a claim of all the money that is due them under the treaties, and then, if we have paid them money, as we have under the treaty of 1868, which they claim is invalid, that is thrown in the waste pile. We have no set-off here.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. No such provision has been included in any Indian appropriation bill reported by the House, has it?

Mr. MANN. No such provision is included in the present bill.

No such provision was included in the bill in the last Congress.

Mr. GARNER. I want to congratulate the present committee of the House.

Mr. MANN. I think in some former bill there was such a provision. In the last Congress I think the provision was carefully gone over by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which in its membership included the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who is not now a member.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do these attorneys take these claims on contingent fees?

Mr. MANN. Let me call attention to this attorney's proposition. The House bill, as it passed the House before, provided for the allowance of attorney's fees, and provided for proceeding by petition by one of the attorneys heretofore employed by the Indians under a contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. My recollection is that it provided that the attorney fees should not exceed 5 or 10 per cent. passed the House in the last Congress it provided that they should not be more than 5 per cent of the amount.

Mr. CANNON. And not exceeding $25,000.

Mr. MANN. And not exceeding $25,000. They have left out that limitation as it is now reported to the House. The Senate bill provides that the proceedings shall be commenced-

By petition, verified by the attorney or firm of attorneys so authorized by John Eastman, assignee of Charles A. Eastman, or Charles Hill-

Who are attorneys employed by the Indians under a contract dated November 27, 1896, more than 20 years ago-and the court shall find and award upon a quantum meruit to said attorneys and their associates—

The compensation to be paid to them, with no limitation on the amount. Now, I used to practice law, and while I do not remember very much about it, I do remember one thing, that it was one of the ethical principles that if a lawyer was called upon to swear that another attorney ought to have the fee he asked for he was always worth it.

Mr. GORDON. "Reasonable counsel fees."

Mr. MANN. And it is very difficult to do otherwise. And you can employ in the city of Washington and elsewhere good lawyers, able men, to go before the Court of Claims and swear what the services were worth.

Mr. GARNER. Twenty years' services.

Mr. MANN. Twenty years' services! Why, these are after the contract was made-20 years before the courts, with no limitation on the amount. There are some very distinguished people in connection with these services. Two men formerly in the Senate of the United States are now lobbying for this bill, and they are not the only ones involved who have been promi-They have got men throughout the country in various places endeavoring to reach Members of Congress in a legitimate way so far as the Members of Congress are concerned, and they may be doing it for nothing for aught I know, but that is not the custom of the business.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentlemen referred to are not lobbying for the bill as it is now before the House, are they?

Mr. MANN. No; they are not. They are not in favor of the House bill. If they had been-well, I will not say that-if the Senate had been, the bill would have become a law in the last Congress. I have no objection to the passage of this bill as it is reported from the committee, but I warn gentlemen at both ends of the Capitol that if an effort is made to pass this bill in the shape that the attorneys want it, there will be some hot talk

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota. Mr. MANN.

Mr. DILLON. I understand the gentleman's fears are founded upon the Senate bill and not upon the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, my fears are founded on facts.

I reserve the balance of my time,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman. The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not over five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Gentlemen of the House, I will be exceedingly brief, although this is a matter of considerable importance, as you all know. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Stephens] have clearly placed the matter before the House. This bill, as it is presented to the House for its adoption, is a bill that I drafted six years ago in consultation with other members of the Indian Committee at that time. I introduced the bill to bring relief to these two tribes of Indians, the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota or Santee Sioux. We then discovered what we were up against, and as a consequence we drafted the bill with great care, and that is the bill which I hope the House will adopt. I join with the gentleman from Illinois in sincerely insisting that it is the only bill this House ever ought to sanction, and that if the conferees on the Indian appropriation bill shall in any way bring in a contrary bill it shall not receive the approval of the House. Now, I would be willing to go further than the gentleman from Illinois. There are not many men who would obstruct the passage of the House bill. I think there is just one. I would not hesitate to name him and say in this bill that not a penny of attorney fees should, directly or indirectly, get into his hands, because in my judgment he does not add any distinction or purity to a matter of this kind that he touches. I am willing to name him, but I will forego that now because he was once a Senator of the United States, and possibly it would not be proper just now to give his name. But I would not hesitate to give it if circumstances make it necessary later on.

This bill guarantees to the Indians that which in right they ought to receive. It keeps to them from attorneys that which the attorneys ought not to have.

This House very wisely, four or five years ago, entered on a determined policy that henceforth just Indian claims should not again be disgraced by squabbles for attorney fees and squandering Indian money in attorneys hands.

This bill as it stands is an absolute guaranty that the Indians shall receive that which is justly theirs, and all of it, and I hope that it will again be passed and be insisted upon for all time to come.

Mr. Speaker, if I may in closing indulge in one further word, it is this: These Indians are in a deplorable condition. I have taken occasion to spend many months studying the massacre that took place in my own State. I had reason to do so. I was raised as a boy in the vicinity of where this massacre took place. Those of my people who were not on the battle fields of the country bore the brunt and shock of pressing back the Indian invasion.

I now say to you with certainty that comes from careful investigation of the facts that there were never in this uprising more than four or five hundred men. Of those who participated 39 were hanged, and the rest were chased, first, into the Dakotas, then a Territory, then westward into Montana and Wyoming, and then subsequently still farther into Canada, and the last fell down and died beneath the snows of British Columbia. All except 50-the number is between 50 and 53-who still live participated in the massacre. They are denied any of the benefits of this act.

During that great strife there were lost more American lives by the tomahawk, scalping knife, and the Indian rifle than ever have been lost in all the other Indian uprisings in the United States since the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth and the Jamestown colony was founded. That is a broad statement, but it is true. And yet the slaughter would have been infinitely greater had it not been for a large number of friendly Indians who took sides with the whites against their own people, many of them to their injury, and some of them to their death. Those men who stood true and loyal to the whites, even against their own kith and kin, had their property rights, their lands, their money, their patrimony, their all, taken from them by the act of February, 1863. We have been a long time righting that wrong. It is better to do it now than never to do it.

Some of these Indians are in Nebraska, and some are still in the southwestern part of Minnesota. They have neither land nor substance. I do not know of any Indians in the United States who are in any worse condition financially than are they. Without land, without property, without industry, they are in a deplorable and sad condition, and those who have remained in Minnesota were every one loyal to the white cause or they would not have been permitted to stay there. The families of all that were even under suspicion, 1,500 in all, were taken to Nebraska.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is meritorious to the Indians that this kind of legislation be passed, to return their property to them which we forcibly took from them, and we need to pass this particularly framed bill in order to cut out attorney fees and attorneys' rapacity.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Norton].

Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the committee Mr. NORTON. that as far as I am concerned, being a member of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and one of the conferees on the Indian appropriation bill, that no legislation will be placed on that bill with my consent of the character that in this case has been proposed by the Senate. There are, as a great many Members of the House know, and as all members of the Committee on Indian Affairs know, a few attorneys in this city practicing before the Department of the Interior who are constantly endeavoring to put over crooked deals and vicious legislation, and who are a menace to the welfare and best interests of the Indians throughout the country. This bill as it was reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs provides that proceedings shall be initiated by petition verified by one of the attorneys who has already been employed in the case. I wish that that provision had not been incorted in the bill. that that provision had not been inserted in the bill. I believe these Indians should be free to employ any attorney they may wish when this bill is passed. As a member of the House Committee on Indian Affairs I would like to see in this bill a provision that any money that might be found due these Indians should not be subject to the claim or lien of any attorney. That has been the policy of the present Committee on Indian Affairs in the House, and I regret that it is not followed in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a Republican caucus tonight, and I think we ought to quit at this time. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present,

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold that point for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I withhold it. Mr. RAFNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 386) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired to authorize placing thereon, with retired pay, certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk. announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 230. Joint resolution authorizing the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual reports to the secretary thereof; and

H. J. Res. 358. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect in March, 1917, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate, having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the bill H. R. 10384, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his objections and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill, Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to the same.

SENATE BILL BEFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 7486. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EVENING SESSION, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1917.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an evening session be held on Wednesday next, beginning at 8 o'clock and running not later than 11 p. m., for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next there shall be a session of the House, beginning at 8 o'clock p. m. and running not later than 11 p. m., for the purpose of considering unobjected bills on the Private Calendar. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, think that 10.30 is a sufficiently late hour.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Then I will make it 10.30. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi modifies his request and makes the hour not later than 10.30 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE FINLEY.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, February 25, 1917, be set aside for the paying of tribute to the life and character of the late Representative FINLEY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRICES OF CERTAIN POST-OFFICE SUPPLIES.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call up a bill which I think will take only a moment or two and which is an emergency measure. It involves a good deal of money to the Government. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 20660) authorizing the Postmaster General to increase prices for certain supplies to conform to abnormal market conditions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 6, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a tentative draft of a bill to increase the limit of cost of Aqueduct Bridge across the Potomac River (H. Doc. No. 2025); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Helen S. Hussey, widow of John E. Hussey, deceased, v. the United States (H. Doc. No. 2026); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Commissioner of Patents, transmitting report of the business of the Patent Office for the year ended December 31, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 2027); to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19233) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Michigan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1418), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4288) relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1419), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1420), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FLOOD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 334) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the Tenth International Congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Louisville, Ky., November 8 to 14, 1917, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1421), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 350) requesting the President of the United States to designate and appoint a day on which funds may be raised for the relief of Ruthenians (Ukrainians), reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1422), which said bill and joint resolution were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20687) to amend the postal laws, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1423), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19783) to equip the United States penitentiaries at Atlanta, Ga., and Leavenworth, Kans., for the manufacture of supplies for the use of the Government, for the compensation of the prisoners for their labor, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1424), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17190) to prohibit and punish the fraudulent use, application, or counterfeiting of the seal of any executive department or Government commission, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1425), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17189) to prevent and punish willful injury or attempted injury to, or conspiracy to injure, any vessel engaged in foreign commerce, or the cargo or persons on board thereof, by fire, explosives, or otherwise, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1426), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11706) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets," approved March 3, 1911, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1427), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE,

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows

A bill (H. R. 19579) granting an increase of pension to Henrietta E. Wingard; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 19763) granting a pension to Calvin Sharpnack; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAUCH: A bill (H. R. 20748) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 20749) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of additional judges of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1895, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAGUE: A bill (H. R. 20750) providing for enlistments in the Navy and the United States Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 20751) providing for enlistments in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 20752) to amend an act providing mediation, conciliation, etc., approved July 15, 1913; to authorize the President to protect the operation of trains in time of peace, and to take possession of the common carriers and draft their crews and officials in time of war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 20753) to provide additional revenue for the construction of 113 naval vessels, as follows: Nine dreadnaughts, 4 battle cruisers, 4 scout cruisers, 28 destroyers, 63 submarines, 1 gunboat, 1 ammunition ship, 2 hospital ships, 1 transport, authorized under previous sessions of Congress and now under course of construction in various private and Government shipbuilding yards; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HILLIARD: A bill (H. R. 20754) making an appropriation for the construction of a scenic road to Mount Evans,

SENATE.

Tuesday, February 6, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer

O Lord God, Father of mercies, we lift our hearts to Thee for Thy blessing. We know not what may befall us in the near future. We can not see the end from the beginning, but we put our cause in Thy hands and trust in Thy power and pray for Thy divine guidance. Knowing that the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him and delivereth them, so we pray that the fear of the Lord may be continually before our eyes. In all our ways may we acknowledge Him who hath promised to direct our paths. Do Thou bless our country and lead Thy servants in authority in the accomplishment of Thy purposes in all the affairs committed to their hands. In the name of Christ, the Lord, we make our prayer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Gronna and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have an important engagement at this hour that I am obliged to keep. It will detain me an hour, or such a matter. I ask consent that the resolution (S. Res. 351) I proposed yesterday relating to the President's address on the 3d instant may lie on the table until I return, and I shall then, if I can, call it up, approximately, say, at 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended October 11, 1916, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a memorial of the Legislature of North Dakota, which I ask may be read.

The memorial was read, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, NORTH DAKOTA.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following is a true and complete copy of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the fifteenth legislative assembly on January 10, 1917.

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the law providing for the free distribution of seeds to farmers contemplates only the distribution of rare and valuable seeds, and seeds that have been found to be peculiarly adapted to certain climates and soils; and Whereas the present distribution of seeds is not confined to rare and valuable varieties; and Whereas the distribution of seeds by mail is usually made during the months of March and April, thereby causing a large increase in the amount of mail carried at a time when the mails are being weighed to ascertain the basis for contract with the railroad company for carrying the mail; and

Whereas the benefits derived by the farmers from the free distribution of seeds by mall are not commensurate with the cost of distribution: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That the law which provides for the distribution of seeds through the mails should be repealed, and all rare and valuable vegetable, field, and flower seeds collected by the Department of Agriculture should be distributed to the States through their respective experiment stations and agricultural colleges.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of the Senators and Representatives from this State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington in behalf of the establishment of Mount Baker National Park, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, THE STATE OF WASHINGTON, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, I. M. Howell, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 2 of the fifteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Washington with the original copy of said memorial as enrolled, now on file in this office, and find the same to be a full, true, and correct copy of said original, and of the whole thereof, together with all official indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Washington. Done at the capitol at Olympia, this 29th day of January, A. D. 1917.

I. M. HOWELL,

Secretary of State

Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial No. 2.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the members of the fifteenth legislative session assembled in the State of Washington, respectfully present—

That Mount Baker, of Whatcom County, Wash., the most northwesterly county of the United States, is a snow-covered mountain 10,827 feet in height, of great interest, beauty, and scenic grandeur; that by reason of its noble eminence and easy access from all parts of Puget Sound, it is of great and growing interest to the tourists of America.

Wherefore, and in order that this mountain, together with its immediate surroundings, may forever remain a resort for pleasure and recreation for the people of this great Nation and a field for scientific investigation, your memorialists do respectfully petition that that portion of the Mount Baker region situated in Whatcom and Skagit Counties, of the State of Washington, the boundaries of which are particularly described in H. R. 9805, be created a national park under the name of Mount Baker National Park, and in pursuance of that object your memorialists do most earnestly petition your respective bodies to pass the measure now before the House of Representatives creating such park.

The secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit immediately a certified copy of this memorial to His Excellency the President of the United States of America and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington.

Passed the senate January 11, 1917.

LOUIS F. HART, President of the Senate.

DETROIT, MICH., February 5, 1917.

Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

We, the Socialists of the city of Detroit, Wayne County, Mich., in mass meeting assembled, emphatically protest against the taking of further steps that may result in plunging this country into war. The interest of the workers of all countries are identical. War can only result in the slaughter of the exploited producers, solely in the interests of those industrial capitalists who in their competitive struggle are freed to wage war for the maintenance of foreign markets into which are shipped the surplus products exploited from those who

We ask that all American citizens be warned that they sall on ships in the war zone at their own risk, as we deem that they have no right to jeopardize the lives, property, and happiness of 100,000,000 souls.

Awaiting your concentrated efforts, we remain, respectfully. Yours, Executive Board Racine Trades and Labor Council, Otto Gerlat, Secretary.

In this crisis Congress should assert its constitutional right to take full control, for Congress and not the President represents the people. You owe it to your constituents not to allow one man to maneuver this great Nation into war. Entering the war in the midst of present circumstances will inevitably be followed by alliances, the prospects of which are you but thinly veiled. Such alliances violate our traditional policy and create disintegrating and constantly threatening forces.

Dear Senator: In this hour of pending national crisis we join with those who believe that every citizen who enjoys the protection of our Government and flag must follow our President wherever he may lead; yet as Christians and citizens we assume the privilege of imploring you in the cause of humanity to insist upon every means available to keep this country out of the indescribable scourge of European war.

So long as England refuses to make peace and persists in her refusal to allow us to ship goods to Germany despite our protests, and so long as we submit to that, we are in no fair position to insist that Germany limit her submarine warfare and surrender her right of self-preservation. If England as aggressor fights on the surface of the sea, Germany should have the right to defend beneath the surface. If we were at war with England, I would favor the right of this country to do what Germany has done. Under the circumstances a declaration of war on Germany would be an act of injustice as well as criminal folly.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 2, 1917.

Hon. Robert La Follette, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Perhaps I ought to state with respect to this telegram that, as will be observed by the text, it was addressed to the President, but it is signed by Victor L. Berger, formerly a Member of Congress, and is addressed to me. I ask to have it read with the others.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 2, 1917.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 2, 1917.

Hon. Robert La Follette, Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of the great multitude of Socialists in the United States, we, the national emergency committee of the Socialist Party, in order to preserve peace in our country urge that a complete embargo be placed upon all shipments of whatsoever kind from the United States to any and all of the belligerent countries.

At the time when the war began we made this identical demand. We urged that this country should "Starve the war and feed America."

We took this position then, and we take it now, for the following reasons:

reasons:

First, Because it is the only way in which our country can be made guiltless of participation in the bloodshed of the war.

Second, Because it is the only way in which this country can take a genuinely neutral position.

Third, Because it is the only way in which this country can keep its products at home, where they are sorely needed, in order to assist in reducing the cost of living.

From the beginning of the war the United States has not been neutral. It has obeyed the letter of international law, but has constantly and viciously violated its spirit by shipping munitions and other supplies to the one side when it was prevented by that side from shipping them to the other.

Piercing through technicalities and going to the heart of the matter, this is a flagrant violation of neutrality, because it helps one side and injures the other. It is also morally base, resulting, as it does, in the selfish plutocrats of our country enriching themselves at the expense of warring nations and placing the guilt of murder at the door of the warring nations and placing the guilt of murder at the door of the American people.

By this means the United States has helped to kill in cold blood millions of our fellow human beings. At the same time the exportation of the substance of the country to the warring nations has increased the cost of living among the masses of our people and thereby increasing their sufferings.

All three of these wrongs—the participation in bloodshed, the antineutrality, and the exportation of our substance—would be avoided by placing an embargo upon all shipments to all of the belligerents. In addition, it would tend to bring the war to a close.

We are sincerely neutral, and we heartily agree with you in the opinion that the interests of humanity demand that there "should be no victor in this war." Certainly, it would be much more likely to so end if the United States should cease to help one side.

This plan would also preserve peace in our own country. It would be preposterous for this country to go to war for the right to permit its selfish rich to still further enrich themselves by acting as accessories in murder.

Mr. President, we most earnestly remind you that the warlike opinions expressed in the daily press of the country are dictated by these same wicked and selfish vultures.

We, the Socialist Party, constitute a large portion of the common mass of the people, whose voices are not heard in the metropolitian press, but whose hearts are right and who do not want war. It is the voice of the common people that you should hear before you act.

Follow the example of your illustrious predecessor, Thomas Jefferson, Mr. President, and have a complete embargo placed on all shipments. It will end the war.

Hon. Key Pittman,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Legislature of Nevada in joint session assembled this day adopted the following resolution and it is signed by Emmit D. Boyle, governor; Maurice J. Sullivan, president of the senate; and Ben. D. Luce, speaker of the assembly:

"Nevada Senate and Assembly joint resolution approving the policies of the President of the United States in the matter of maintaining the rights of American citizens in travel and commerce.

"Whereas the President of the United States has decided that it is necessary to suspend diplomatic relations with a great nation toward whom our friendship has been shown by our long-continued patience and to advise and warn ail nations that the rights of our citizens to travel and trade upon the high seas must be respected and will be maintained by the American people; and

"Whereas it is the solemn duty of every American regardless of party or faith or family origin to sustain and uphold our National Government at all times and particularly when our national honor and the principles of humanity and justice to which our Government is dedicated have been assalled: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the people of the State of Nevada represented by the senate and assembly in joint session do approve the policies of the President of the United States as stated in his address to the Congress of the United States on February 3, 1917, and with the hope as expressed by him that our Nation 'will not be challenged to defend our rights to liberty, justice, and unmolested life,' and do pledge the State of Nevada to the limit of its resources toward the maintenance of the honor of our Nation and the support of our President and the National Government; and be it further

I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, requesting the establishment of the Mount Baker National Park. Hon. Wesley L. Jones, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Conway, Fir, Commercial, and Civic Clubs desire to commend the efforts of the Government in behalf of peace; also the action severing diplomatic relations with Germany, but earnestly urge avoidance of war. National honor is not subserved by slaughtering human beings. Kindly bring this to the attention of the President.

CONWAY, FIR, COMMERCIAL, AND CIVIC CLUBS.

Mr. WEEKS. I send to the desk a telegram, which I ask may be read.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

[Telegram.]

HOPEDALE, Mass., February 5, 1917.

Senator JOHN W. WEEKS:

The Draper Corporation desires to place at the disposal of the Government its works and facilities in case of need. It invites the Government to send here any engineers or other agents for the purpose of carrying out this offer. Am sending duplicate telegram to Senator Looge. Will you kindly, after conference, convey this offer to proper departments?

GEORGE A. DRAPER, Treasurer.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to say in explanation that the signer of the telegram is now the senior member of the Draper family, which has built up the largest cotton-machinery business in this country. I have presented the telegram to the Senate because I believe it is indicative of a course which will be followed by the vast manufacturing interests of the country in case their services are needed; and incidentally I think it is an indorsement of the fiscal policy under which we have lived for most of the time during the last 40 years of building up such industries, which can be of assistance to the Government in case of necessity.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have received a great many telegrams similar to those which have been presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], but I shall not ask that they be read this morning and printed in the Record. I will simply say, however, that the telegrams which have been inserted in the RECORD express the same thought and the same purposes as do the telegrams which I have received.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I present a telegram from certain loyal citizens living in the productive area of the southeastern oil belt of Illinois, tendering the oil in storage tanks, in the refinery, and all the appurtenances, together with their services, to the Government of the United States in the event they be needed in military operations in carrying out the principles announced in the President's late address. I do not ask that the telegram be read, but that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Illinois takes his seat, as he did not have the telegram from the oil company read, I ask him whether or not it includes a tender of the services of any of the officers of the oil company to enlist in case there is war?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that these are private citizens, residing in the oil belt. They are not connected with the Standard Oil Co., and the interests with which they are identified are local oil companies. They may sell their product to anybody on the market, including the Standard Oil Co. I have been acquainted with many of these men for more than 30 years. I repeat, they are not identified with the Standard Oil Co. any more than am I. They may sell their product to the Standard Oil Co. to be manufactured. or they may sell it to others. Indeed, I am using a certain amount of their product. The gentlemen who prepared and sent this telegram have no more interest in the Standard Oil people than have I.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram presented by the Senator from Illinois will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The telegram is as follows:

[Telegram.]

Hon. Lawrence Y. Sherman.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We tender the free use of our Commercial Club grounds at this place to the Government for an aviation field. Will organize our machine shops and mechanics as needed. In event the Government takes charge of our crude-oil fields, will furnish experienced men as a local board, who will give service without pay. Our local refinery holds itself ready and subject to control and desire of the Government. Protection of the million of gallons of crude oil stored here should be considered.

Chamber of Commerce of Casey, Ill.

Describent I present a telegram from the Chicago Federation of Labor, adopted at a regular meeting, dated February 4, 1917, protesting against this country taking any part in a possible war in which we might be involved and demanding that American citizens be prevented from entering the war zone

Mr. President, I am not in sympathy with this telegram, and I announce that I am entirely opposed to the principle embraced in it. The war zone, out of which American citizens are sought to be warned by the telegram, had as well embrace a war zone of the entire Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that it is very fitting and proper that telegrams from citizens and associations protesting against proposed action or proffering their loyal support to the Government should be read. It is entirely within the province, I presume, of all citizens of our country to send to those of us who are representatives in the Congress telegrams expressive of their views. I have received many telegrams, including one to-day, which from their tenor can only prompt hatred and vengeance and bitterness between certain classes of citizens in our country. I have hesitated very much, and do hesitate, to present telegrams of that character. I have received a great many patriotic telegrams, while others, although not saying that the senders were not going to support our Government, were couched in terms and expressions which were only calculated to engender hate and bitterness. Those I shall keep within my own desk, and I think it might be well for most of us to carry out the same policy.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams from my State touching the same subject, and I have advised the senders that I have referred them to the Committee on Foreign Relations for serious consideration.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Iowa, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HUGHES presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 11.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America:

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation designed to encourage the development of the water-power resources of the Nation; and Whereas the State of Oregon and other Western States are blessed with bountiful natural resources, largely undeveloped, among which is water power; and Whereas although water power in said States is available in abundance only a very small percentage has been developed; and Whereas numerous water-power sites of large commercial possibilities are located in the public domain or in navigable streams; and Whereas existing Federal laws and regulations are so inadequate and restrictive that development of water power in the public domain and in navigable streams has practically ceased; and Whereas electrical power at a cost to justify its use in the conversion of our natural resources into finished, marketable products, in the reclamation of lands at present unproductive, and in the transformation of the motive power of rail transportation is wholly dependent upon the economical production of power on a large scale; and Whereas the essence of conservation is intelligent and economical utilization of natural resources to serve the economic necessities and desires of our people, and to conserve those natural resources that are exhaustible: and

Whereas the use of exhaustible resources of power and fuel where and when such an inexhaustible resource as water power can be used results in economic waste, which is indefensible when it can be obviated; and

Whereas since legislation necessary to encourage development of water power has been a constant subject of study, investigation, and discussion for years it is the judgment of your memorialists that the time is at hand for action: Therefore be it

Resolved. That the Legislature of the State of Oregon, in twentyninth session assembled, respectfully urges upon the Congress of the United States the absolute and urgent necessity of the development of water power in order that natural resources may be utilized to create new wealth by the settlement of lands, the development of agriculture, the establishment of manufactures of varied nature, and the conomy and comfort of rail facilities of transportation may be enhanced, the means of transportation enlarged and made cheaper, and traffic congestion relieved by opening to navigation waterways incapable of use because of natural obstructions removable by water-power development in navigable streams, and adequate national defense may be aided, all of which will contribute to the increase and diversification of agriculture, commerce, and industry, and as a consequence promote economic security; and respectfully petitions that Congress at its present session enact legislation that will encourage investment in the development of these resources, consistent with adequate guaranties for the protection and safeguard of the public interests; and be it further

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, however, do not indorse any particular bill now pending before the Congress of the United States;
and be it further

and be it further

Resolved. That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to make every effort to carry out the purposes of the foregoing memorial; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and attested by the chief clerks of the two houses, be forthwith forwarded to each of Oregon's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Concurred in by the house January 25, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,

Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 23, 1917.

GUS C. MOSER, President of the Senate. STATE OF OREGON, SENATE CHAMBER.

I, J. W. Cochran, chief clerk of the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 11, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof, as adopted by the senate January 23, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 25, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 29th day January, 1917.

J. W. Cochran, Ohief Olork Senate, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

STATE OF OREGON,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I, W. F. Drager, chief clerk of the House of Representatives of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 11, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof, as adopted by the senate January 23, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 25, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 29th day of January, 1917.

W. F. Drager, Chief Clerk House, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, relating to the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 13.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a large portion of the State of Oregon is infested with coyotes and other predatory animals, and the said predatory animals at all times destroy property of the citizens of Oregon and destroy the wild game and the birds of the State of Oregon; and
Whereas at this time the said animals are affected with rabies, and on this account are unusually dangerous and are spreading rabies, and by this means causing death among the live stock of all kinds and at times menacing life of the citizens of the State of Oregon and of other Western States; and
Whereas the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture has been adding the citizens of the State of Oregon and other Western States in the eradication of rabies and in extermination of predatory animals referred to, and have been very successful in the campaign which they have organized, and are able to carry out the said campaign more effectually than the several States have been able to do; and
Whereas the State of Oregon is financially unable to carry on this program for the eradication of rables in an adequate manner, and it is essential that the Biological Survey continue its investigation and efforts in order that the said predatory animals may be exterminated and the money already expended may not be wholly lost: Therefore be it and the money already expended may not be it

Resolved by the Senate of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to appropriate at an early date by special appropriation adequate funds for the use of the Bureau of Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture in its campaign to prevent the spread of rables and to eradicate rables and exterminate wild predatory animals; be it further

Resolved, That after concurrence of the house of representatives herein the chief clerk of the senate shall transmit copies of this memorial to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oregon and to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Concurred in by the house January 25, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,

Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 23, 1917.

Gus C. Moser, President of the Senate.

STATE OF OREGON, SENATE CHAMBER.

I, J. W. Cochran, chief clerk of the Senate of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 13, Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly, State of Oregon, with the original thereof as adopted by the senate January 23, 1917, and concurred in by the house January 25, 1917, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 29th day of January, 1917.

J. W. Cochran,
Chief Clerk Senate,
Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon. Mr. LANE. I also present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 12.

Whereas 12 States of the Union, among which is Oregon, by constitutional amendment or legislative enactments, have extended the right of suffrage to women; and
Whereas in those States where such privilege has been exercised it has brought about great improvement in the moral welfare and economic conditions throughout said States; and
Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a measure known as the "Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States," the purpose of which measure is to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending and giving throughout the United States the right of suffrage to women: Therefore be it Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to take favorable action on said proposed measure; be it further Resolved, That after the concurrence of the house of representatives herein the chief clerk of the senate be, and he hereby is, instructed to transmit copies of this memorial to the Members of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

Concurred in by, the house January 25, 1917.

R. N. Stanfield, Speaker of the House.

R. N. STANFIELD, Speaker of the House.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from $300,000 to $400,000, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 19119), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment relative to the tax laws of the District of Columbia intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 19119), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-CATHERINE H. RYNDER.

On motion of Mr. Penrose it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 3369), Sixty-third Congress, granting an increase of pension to Catherine H. Rynder, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PROHIBITION ON FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a copy of an address delivered by Judge Stuart, of Oklahoma City, to the Legislature of Oklahoma, January 23, 1917, with reference to the bill or joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen], having for its object the stripping from the Supreme Court of the United States the power to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress and acts of State legislatures. It is a very able and a very timely address upon this subject, and I ask to have it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague consents that it shall go to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

UNIFORMITY OF THE LAWS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to tender the address of Col. M. A. McChesney, president of the State Bar Association of Illinois, upon the matter of the uniformity of the laws. desire to have it printed as a document, and ask permission now to have it go to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

FLOOD CONTROL.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to announce that immediately after the District of Columbia appropriation bill is finished I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14777) to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Cal., and for other purposes.

NOMINATION OF DR. CARY T. GRAYSON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution submitted by me and coming over from a previous day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution (S. Res. 352), which the Server will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 352) submitted yesterday by Mr. Poindexter, as follows:

Resolved, That further consideration of the nomination of Passed Assistant Surgeon Cary T. Grayson to be medical director with the rank of rear admiral in the Navy shall be in open executive session.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, under the second paragraph of Rule XXXVI there is a provision that executive session.

sions shall be held with closed doors unless the Senate shall decide to hold open executive sessions. It is for the purpose of exercising the discretion which the Senate reserves to itself in this rule that I have offered this resolution.

I can not imagine any satisfactory reason for insisting upon secrecy in this matter. If only a personal question were involved, if the only interest concerned was the question of whether the nominee in this case should receive the office to which he has been nominated, I would readily consent that there would be no adequate reason for insisting upon an open session; but there are far greater interests involved, not only the interests of a great number of individuals, the seniors of this nominee in the medical staff of the Navy, but there is the broader interest of the Navy itself. This promotion, the circumstances under which it is made, the reasons which are advanced in favor of it, constitute such a dangerous and insidious attack upon the morale and spirit of the entire personnel of the Navy as to involve the national safety and defense.

The country is more or less aroused during the last few days by strained relations with Germany. I myself think we have been subject to more or less unfounded hysteria in the matter.

I am very much in hope that there will not be any material conflict between the great German Empire and the United States of America. There are various reasons for that; there are many indications, I think, in the last few days of a disposition on the part of Germany to avoid such a conflict, and I am sure there is in the breasts of the American people the desire that no incident of sufficient cause shall arise for plunging this country into war with Germany. I think that there are other international relations that are more ominous and more imminent than those with Germany.

Mr. President, whether we are mistaken or not, it being the case that there is a very widespread feeling that we are walking upon the brink of a volcano, that we may be involved in an eruption and in hostile conflicts with foreign nations at any time, it is readily apparent what is involved in the selection of the man who is to be at the head and to have the authority to direct the entire medical staff of the Navy. The reasons which lie at the bottom of the objections to this promotion not being personal, but far-reaching in their effects upon the Navy and upon the conditions of our national defense, ought to be published. There has been no reason advanced why the doors should be closed and the press and the public in the formulation of their judgment upon the issues involved in this nomination should be deprived of the material upon which their judgment is to be based.

There is a provision in one of the rules of the Senate that the remarks of Senators concerning the character of a nominee or his qualifications for office shall be kept secret.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think the question of character is involved here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no question about his character involved and there is no question about his qualifications. The question is about his lack of qualifications. I have never heard anybody claim—and I say this in perfect good spirit and friendliness—that he was possessed of any qualifications that would entitle him to be promoted over the heads of 127 of his seniors and to be put at the head of the medical staff of the Navy.

As a matter of fact, there are only two reasons which I have heard advanced for this promotion. One of them is that Dr. Grayson is a Virginian, and that consequently his nomination ought to be confirmed. I confess that that is a very plausible reason, and I am saying this in all seriousness. That is advanced and is urged as a reason why Senators should support it. Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am willing to concede that a man coming from Virginia is entitled to special consideration. The presumptions are all in his favor, at any rate, if he comes with good credentials from that old Commonwealth. But it so happens in this particular case that this reason reacts upon itself, because in the list of officers in the Medical Corps of the Navy senior in rank to Dr. Grayson there are 18 Virginians, just as good men as he is, coming with just as good credentials and just as good blood from that soil, which has produced so much of true greatness. If we are to be appealed to upon the ground that Virginians should rally around this son of old Virginia when he has this opportunity to receive a great honor, we appeal to the same principle on behalf of the Virginians who are his seniors in this list, not that they should be rewarded for services which they have not performed at the expense of an injustice to one of their fellows

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. POINDEXTER (continuing). But simply that justice

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall have to decline to yield for the moment. I will yield a moment later.

Mr. LEWIS. I simply rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry. He has a right to do that.

Mr. LEWIS. What particular motion or subject matter is before the Senate at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A resolution coming over from yes-

The resolution of what Senator?

Mr. LEWIS. The resolution of what Senator? The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]

Mr. LEWIS. On the question of the open or executive session, The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The resolution was stated.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, Mr. President—
Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be far more agreeable-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POINDENTER. I will yield for a question only; not for any other purpose.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is discussing his resolution, I take it, dealing with the confirmation of Cary T. Grayson as a rear admiral. Is that the resolution? I take it it is; and, Mr. President, I ask that this, being a question of confirmation, be considered behind closed doors.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not yield for that purpose, Mr.

President. I only yielded for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Any Senator has a right to ask that the doors be closed. Is it seconded?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not take it, Mr. President, that the Senator has a right to make the motion while another Senator has the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, it is not a motion; it is in accordance with the rule that any Senator at any time, during the consideration of any question, may suggest that the doors be closed, and if seconded-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not seconded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair asked. Is seconded?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline, Mr. President, to yield-

Mr. HOLLIS. I second it.
Mr. POINDEXTER (continuing). For the purpose of any such motion or any such request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will enforce the rule. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors. The Senate thereupon (at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.) proceeded to deliberate with closed doors. At 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the doors were reopened.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATIONS-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BRYAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other pur-poses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered I, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an ment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the Sanac and amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government: Provided, That whenever in the opinion of the President the situation is such as to justify such action he may waive the limitations contained in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

N. P. BRYAN, OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, Managers on the part of the Senate. SWAGAR SHERLEY. GEORGE RAUCH. FREDERICK H. GILLETT. Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson of South Dakota in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PUNISHMENT FOR THREATS AGAINST THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to submit a report for the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] on behalf of the Judiciary Committee. I report back favorably without amendment House bill 15314. I send the bill to the desk and ask that it be read, and then I will ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 15314) to punish persons who make threats against the President of the United States, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who knowingly and willfully deposits or causes to be deposited for conveyance in the mail or for delivery from any post office or by any letter carrier any letter, paper, writing, print, missive, or document containing any threat to take the life of or to inflict bodily harm upon the President of the United States, or who knowingly and willfully otherwise makes any such threat against the President, shall upon conviction be fined not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding five years, or both.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator is there now no law which covers threats of that kind?

There seems to be no law. Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is most extraordinary.

Mr. HUGHES. It is extraordinary.
Mr. GALLINGER. I should think threats of that kind made even against a private person would be covered by some statute.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think there is any Federal statute covering it. Of course, every State probably has a statute of the kind, but there is no national law which deals with this particular situation, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the unfinished business, House bill 19359, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment to the pending bill. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have not yet been disposed of Mr. MYERS. I was informed that the committee amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is a committee amendment on page 27 that was passed over. The committee report to amend the bill by striking out what is known as the free-seed distribution. I do not know what action the Senate will take in reference to it, but I want to state in justification of my position that I was not present the day the matter was considered in the committee or I would have entered my objection at that time. I feel that this is a provision in the bill that for some reason or other has become unpopular, but my own experience is to the effect that it is one of the worthiest features in the bill. There are thousands and thousands of small families who receive these seeds from the Government and I think they are a real benefit. Not only that, but it serves as a kind of tie between the people receiving them and the Government.

The objection has been made that it is pure graft used by Members of the House and Senate for the purpose of obtaining votes. The distribution has become known, and now throughout the entire country the people are in the habit of looking for these seeds, no matter who is the successful candidate for Congress, and there is nothing to that argument. So far from having any graft feature in it, it is a means by which a class of people who have the fewest opportunities of any other class may come into touch with the efforts of the department by the department selecting and sending to them small packages of garden seeds.

Mr. President, I am just a bit tired of this farce-and I use the word advisedly-of the House each year voting out the seed proposition and then in conference putting it back.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield. Mr. SMOOT. I fully agree with the Senator from South Carolina as to this provision, and I believe that it ought to be discussed when we have a number of Senators present. I think it ought to be voted on at a time when we could have as full a vote of the Senate as possible.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Utah would like to have the matter go over until to-morrow, as it looks as though we could not finish the bill this evening. I would agree to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so. I should like Senators to read what the Senator from South Carolina has said and to hear what he may say upon this subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I join in the request that this matter go over.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very good. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have here some amendments which have been suggested.

The Secretary. The next amendment of the committee passed over is on page 63. At the instance of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Brady] the amendment in lines 7 and 8 was passed over. It is there proposed to strike out the words "to educational institutions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator present who objected to that amendment, and I ask that it go over temporarily.

I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, which has been suggested by the Agricultural Department. It is not an increase of the total of the appropriation, but it will best ac-complish the object to be attained. The department make this suggestion, and I shall offer the amendment and ask that the Senate pass upon it. On page 9, line 2, I move to strike out "$114,940" and to insert "$130,040." I shall read what the department has to say in relation to this matter.

Mr. STONE. Is not that an increase?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it is a lump sum. This is not an addition; it is increasing a special appropriation for a specific work within the lump-sum appropriation, so that it does not increase the general appropriation. Here is what the department says:

In addition to the reduction of $23,320 in the increase estimated for the promotion of field employees, the House committee decreased the department's estimate by $16,560. This amount ($16,560) was subtracted from "observations and reports," while it should have been apportioned among the several items in the paragraph. It is recommended that the amount for "special observations and reports" be changed to $130,040, the sum carried in the present appropriation act. This does not involve any increase in the appropriation, but simply increases the total that can be expended for this specific purpose. The change will facilitate the proper administration of the work.

I ask that the amendment be stated.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. On page 9, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$114,940" and to insert "$130,040."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that means that there is an increase of $15,000 and some odd dol'ers for special observations and reports.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And a decrease of that same amount for the necessary expenses outside of the city of Washington incident to collecting and disseminating certain information.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; that is correct. Mr. SMOOT. The department feels that that distribution of money is better for the department than the provision made in

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; it seems that that is the provision of the old law, and we do exactly as they recommend by replacing the language as it now stands in the bill with the language of the old law. There seemed to have been some misunderstanding when the House made the change, and the department merely recommends a reinstatement of the language as it was last year.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the present law provide a total appropriation of $1,301,190?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is $1,747,260.
Mr. SMOOT. Then, this is a decrease from the present law?
Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I offer the amendment which Mr. SMITH of south Caronna. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which is also recommended by the department. It is simply a verbal change, inserting for explanation some words that were not inserted. On page 12, line 25, I move to strike out the words "the alteration of" and to insert the words "repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to." The reason the department gives for asking this change is that-

As the language now stands the department is without authority to make any improvements whatever to the buildings at its quarantine stations or to repair them when necessary. The suggested change will confer such authority. This recommendation was not included in the

This amendment does not propose to change any appropriation at all, but simply to put such language in the bill as would enable the department to do the work for which the appropriation was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 12, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "the alteration of" and to insert "repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to," so as to read:

Including the establishment and maintenance of quarantine stations, repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to buildings thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the department, after the committee had acted, suggested an amendment, on page 21, line 19, to strike out "$33,760" and to insert "$36,260." This is an increase of $2,500.

It is but fair to say that this recommendation was included in the estimates, but was not allowed by the other House. will give the Senate the benefit of the department's reasons for offering this amendment.

Soil-fertility investigations: On page 21, line 19, strike out "$33,760" and insert "$36,260," an increase of $2,500. This recommendation was included in the estimates, but was not approved by the House committee.

It is proposed to use the additional $2,500 in studying a peculiar disease of potatoes which has appeared in portions of Maine and in certain other potato-growing districts. The disease apparently is associated with certain types of soil and also with the employment of fertilizer deficient in potash.

The department suggests this increase in order to study the particular nature of the soil where this disease is most prevalent and to study the condition of the potato itself.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice an amendment to the bill intended to be offered, I believe, by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] for the purpose of investigating diseases affecting the potato production of the country. I was wondering whether that had been referred to the committee and whether the committee had sated formally the committee had acted favorably or unfavorably on that amendment. If favorably, would not that cover this increase?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; that amendment was not acted upon on this bill. I presume the Senators from the section of country affected know the ravages of this particular disease. I understand that they are beginning now to quarantine even against sections that are not apparently infected in order to keep the disease from spreading. The department wishes this sum in order to make a specific study of the soil and to ascertain what connection there is between the soil and the disease. This is merely a recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not know anything about it personally.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that the appropriation is a wise one.

but I do not think that it ought to apply to one State only. do not think that the $2,500 ought to be spent entirely in connection with the investigation of the potato industry in Maine.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My impression is that that is the only place now where the particular disease referred to is known to exist.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be as to this particular disease.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not know definitely about this. Maine was quarantined against awhile ago, but I think the quarantine has been lifted. The fact is, however, that the potato crop in Maine is very large, Aroostook County being given up almost entirely to the culture of potatoes by Swedish immigrants. Still this is a general provision, and I apprehend it will be applied to other sections of the country if necessary

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I presume so. The Secretary of Agriculture calls especial attention to it, and goes on further in the statement I have regarding it, and says that the disease, or a similar disease, has spread to other parts of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. The text of the amendment does not confine it to one State or to any particular section of the country?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason I referred to it was that, in the statement made by the Secretary of Agriculture, he asked for the increase for the purpose of investigating a certain disease of potatoes in the State of Maine; and I thought that, if the appropriation were made based upon the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, he would take it for granted that the Senate voted the full $2,500 to be expended for that specific purpose; and, of course, if that were the case, it would be all spent in the State of Maine.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; he goes on here to say-I did not read all he said, but only sufficient to give the Senate an idea of the extent of the disease that we were trying to reach by this provision, and I am sorry if reading just that much has left an impression that the appropriation was to be applied to Maine alone, because in the statement the Secretary goes on Reports received since the estimates were submitted indicate that similar diseases probably occur in cotton fields in scattered areas throughout the South. They assume a significance, therefore, which was not recognized when the hearings before the House committee were under way, and emphasize the importance of restoring the sum originally estimated by the department. In fact, the experts of the Bureau of Plant Industry are of the opinion that double the amount suggested could be advantageously expended.

So it will readily be seen that the department does not intend to confine it to any one place, but wherever this money can be advantageously used in the eradication of this particular form of potato disease, it will be used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the next amendment is one of much importance to the western country, and especially so in view of the present high cost of living. On page 23, line 4, I move to strike out "$176,505" and insert "$186,505." That is an increase of $10,000. I quote from the statement furnished regarding this proposed increase:

The estimates recommended an increase in this item of $12,000, which was allowed by the House committee.

Since the estimates were submitted it has become clear that a more vigorous campaign against the destructive black rust of wheat should be inaugurated. Consideration of the possibility of extending the co-operative activities of the Bureau of Plant Industry and of the State agricultural experiment stations for controlling epidemics of this disease, especially in the spring-wheat areas, has resulted in the belief that the general eradication of barberry plants from the entire area will doubtless lessen the severity of the rust outbreaks.

I have not read all of the statement, but that gives a sufficient idea as to the necessity for this increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like information as we go along in the consideration of these bills. western Senator tell me what the barberry plant is?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The barberry weed. Mr. GALLINGER. Barberry weed! I understood the Senator to say "barberry plant."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The statement does refer to the "eradication of barberry plants." I presume it is some kind of a growth indigenous to the soil, that may propagate this particular disease. I am totally unfamiliar with it, and am only going upon the statement of the Secretary of Agricul-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On page 50, line 5, I move to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$7,000." That is an increase of $3,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 50, line 5, after the word "sirup," it is proposed to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$7,000," so as to read:

For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup, $7.000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, can the Senator tell me what amount the present law appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The present law appropriated $4,000 for this purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Secretary of Agriculture say why he wants the increase?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I was going to come to that. He says:

The additional $3,000 is urgently required in order that the work may be continued on an adequate scale. Valuable results already have been secured, and a method has been developed for making cane sirup which will not readily ferment or crystallize.

That has been the trouble with it as a commercial article. Unless it is properly manufactured, when shipped it does not maintain its clearness, but will sour; or, if not that, it turns, as we call it, to sugar.

Mr. SMOOT. That has relation to how long it is boiled, has it not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I presume they want this increased appropriation in order to enable them to instruct the farmers who produce this article so extensively throughout the country how to prepare it for market so that it will be durable.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I assume it does not include maple sirup, does it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; this item refers to cane sirup. I think that is the sirup that is so subject to the souring process; or, when cooked too little, to the sugaring process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I now send the next amendment to the desk. It is the last one I shall offer this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 80, after line 3, it is proposed to

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes," approved August 31, 1916, including the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $4,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the law provides the size of the baskets and boxes, does it not? I am quite sure it does; and if that is the case, why should we authorize the Department of Agriculture to fix the size of the boxes and the baskets?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All that I can say to the Senator is to read what the Secretary of Agriculture has to say about it, because in administering this law, of course, they find certain things that none of us could anticipate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator reads that, I will suggest to my friend the Senator from Utah that the amendment certainly is not perfect in dealing with Climax baskets, for we never have a climax unless we make an appropriation. [Laughter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state in this connection that I am submitting these amendments at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I want the Senate to vote upon them on their merits.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that these were committee amend-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, then the committee has passed upon them upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes, sir. The Secretary says: The act referred to in the item, which is known as the standard basket and container act, was approved on August 31, 1916, and becomes effective on November 1, 1917. Its purpose is to bring about uniformity in the baskets and containers in which grapes and other fruits and vegetables are shipped in interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if these various amendments were considered by the committee?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; they were.
Mr. KENYON. On account of the conflict of the meetings of the Commerce Committee with those of the Committee on Agriculture, I was unable to be present very much of the time. I did not hear them considered at the time I was present.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They were gone over casually, and then, upon inquiry of the department about them, they sent in these estimates. There were some that were new, and I will state frankly that there were one or two that I shall not offer, that I do not think were brought to the attention of any member of the committee at all.

Mr. KENYON. Do these various amendments for standardizing the size of grape baskets, and things of that kind, increase the appropriation very much?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The amount by which this one increases the appropriation is $4,000.

Mr. KENYON. Is that all the various amendments that the Senator has been introducing in the last few minutes increase the bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No, no.

Mr. SMOOT. All of them have been increases-some $10,000, some $4,000, some $3,000, and so forth.

Mr. KENYON. Therefore they are subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The increase so far has been comparatively small. All that I care to say about this amendment, Mr. President, is that the department claim they want a uniform standard so as to protect the shipper, and they desire to have this form of basket so that there can be no fraud.

Mr. THOMAS. I will ask the Senator to continue reading the letter. It gives a sound basis for the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is not this amendment simply to carry into effect law that we have heretofore passed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes, sir; that is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. JONES. That is what I thought.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Upon the request of the Senator from Colorado, I will read what the Secretary of Agriculture has to say:

The act referred to in the item, which is known as the standard basket and container act, was approved on August 31, 1918, and becomes effective on November 1, 1917. Its purpose is to bring about uniformity in the baskets and containers in which grapes and other fruits and vegetables are shipped in interstate commerce. Section 1 establishes standards for 2-quart, 4-quart, and 12-quart Climax baskets. The word "Climax" is a trade name for baskets of a particular type. Section 2 establishes the dry half point, dry pint, dry quart, and multiples of the dry quart as standards for containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables. These standards for containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables. These standard sizes replace the multiplicity of sizes, based on weight and liquid and dry measure, which are now in use. Section 3 prohibits the use in interstate commerce of any Climax baskets or other containers for small fruits, berries, or vegetables which do not conform to the provisions of the act.

Careful consideration of plans for the administration of the act indicates that its enforcement can be largely secured by a process of education—by dealing with the manufacturer, the source of supply of the various kinds of baskets covered by the act. It will be necessary, however, to appoint one chief inspector to take charge of the work. During the first year the inspection and collection of samples can be handled principally by the existing field force of the Office of Markets, with the cooperation of the inspectors of the Bureau of Chemistry. The examination and testing of the packages will be made in the Washington office and at the branch grain-standardization laboratories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I submit an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the bill be now temporarily laid aside, and I move that the Senate take a recess unfil 8 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar will be proceeded with, pursuant to the order of the Senate.

The bill (S. 4551) to authorize the Supreme Court to prescribe forms and rules, and generally to regulate pleading, procedure, and practice on the common-law side of the Federal courts was announced as first in order on the calendar.
Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

COAST GUARD CUTTERS.

The bill (S. 7380) for the construction of Coast Guard cutters was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as

Be is enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to construct and equip one Coast Guard cutter for duty on the Atlantic coast, with headquarters at Beaufort, N. C.; one Coast Guard cutter for service on the Great Lakes, with headquarters at Detroit, Mich., to replace the old cutter Morrill; and one Coast Guard cutter for service on the Pacific Ocean, with headquarters at Honolulu, Hawaii, to replace the condemned cutter Thetis, at a limit of cost not to exceed, for the three cutters, a total of $1,350,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there a report on the bill? The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a report. No. 894 is the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMUTED RATIONS FOR COAST GUARD.

The bill (S. 7381) to provide adequate subsistence for the warrant officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act whenever, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, commuted rations are issued to warrant officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard in lieu of rations in kind, such commutation shall be at the rate of 45 cents per ration, instead of 30 cents per ration, as now authorized by law. ized by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS IN LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The bill (S. 4716) granting pensions to certain members of the former Life-Saving Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who served in the former Life-Saving Service of the United States as a keeper or surfman, and who, on account of disability due to a wound or injury received or disease contracted in said Life-Saving Service in line of duty, has been or is entitled to be carried on the pay rolls for a period of one year or more under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved May 4, 1882, and who ceased to be a member of said service on account of such disability, and whose disability still continues, shall, upon making due proof of such facts according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, be placed on the pension roll of the United States and be entitled to receive a pension: Provided, That the rate, commencement, and duration of such pension shall be governed by the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, and for the purpose of this act the rank of a surfman and keeper shall be held to be equivalent to that of a seaman and warrant officer of the United States Navy, respectively: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

WOMAN'S DIVISION, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

The bill (S. 5408) to establish in the Department of Labor a division to be known as a woman's division was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not insist on the bill going over. The bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Education and Labor. They reported it favorably, and it has also been favorably reported by the committee in another body. I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection,

Mr. SMOOT. We can not consider the bill to-night. There is already a Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor. There are reports being made upon this very work in two other divisions of the Government. It is a duplication of work that I think the Senate ought to know about if we are going to consider the measure, and it would be impossible to decide that question to-night. For that reason I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to express regret that the Senator makes a point against this bill. It is unique in connection with the legislation on the subject of children and women in this country. It provides a department where women the consulted concerning matters relating to the labor of will be consulted concerning matters relating to the labor of women, their wages, and so forth, that women know more about than all the men on earth know. The expenditure is small, a little more than $30,000 probably. It does seem to me it is such a valuable adjunct to the legislation we have that we ought not to obstruct it. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. The Children's Bureau was to cost $25,000 a year and its expenditures are up to a quarter of a million dollars now. There are a number of members of the Committee on Appropriations who have expressed a wish to be present when the bill is considered; therefore I can not withdraw my objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to take just two or three minutes, in connection with the bill, to call attention to some facts which possibly the Senator from Utah is not aware of, even though I know he gets most of the information in reference to such matters

Mr. Meeker, the Chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, was before the Committee on Appropriations and gave some testimony before that committee which left the impression that there is now a working-women's division under that bureau. I have here his testimony, and I think I will read a sentence or two of it. The chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. OVERMAN] asked him this question:

Have you got a woman's division?
Mr. MEEKER. We have a woman's division.
Senator Overman. What does the chief of that division do?
Mr. MEEKER. The Chief of the Woman's Division heretofore has getten
$2,000?

Senator Overman. What did she do?

Mr. Meeker. She is the person who has direct charge of the investigations that are primarily concerned with women in industry; with the special problems.

When I observed that statement in the hearings I saw that Mr. Meeker had not gone very much into detail and apparently had not had an opportunity to explain the situation there. So I wrote him a letter asking him for information with reference to this division. I can not take the time to read all the letter, because, of course, if the Senator from Utah insists upon the bill going over I do not want to take any unnecessary time; but I asked Mr. Meeker whether there was a woman's division, who was at the head of it, and so on. I have here his letter of January 26. I will read a short extract from it. He

I was not given any opportunity by the committee to make any explanation in regard to the Woman's Division or any other feature of the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In answer to my first question he says:

I have not seen a copy of the transcript of the hearings. If the report represents me as saying that there is a woman now in charge of the Woman's Division in this bureau, as intimated in your question 1, the report is incorrect. There is no Chief of the Woman's Division in this bureau now nor was there on January 3, 1917.

Then, in answer to another question, he says:

When Miss Marie L. Obenauer resigned June 30, 1915, I was not able to secure from outside the bureau for a salary of $2,000 per annum a woman competent to fill Miss Obenauer's position and to carry forward the constructive work she had been doing. I was therefore obliged to try the experiment of promoting a woman already in the bureau. This woman took charge of the Woman's Division July 1, 1915. I had a distinct understanding with her that if she found the work uncongenial in any way she should be free to go back to her former position and salary of $1,800 per annum.

I will simply state that she was found not specially adapted to this work, and at her own request she did go back to the other work, and since then there has been no chief of this division. He says:

Since June 26, 1916, there has been no Chief of the Woman's Division. The impossibility of attracting any woman from the outside to come into the bureau at a paltry $2,000 per annum in order to undertake this extremely difficult and responsible work obliges me to try to train up some one in the bureau for this position. I have now in training, so to speak, three women investigators, and when I am satisfied as to the capacity and judgment of one of these I shall put her in charge of the Woman's Division, and as rapidly as she makes good will advance her to the salary of $2,000 or more.

Mr. President, I am not going to take further time. I have indicated the situation there. While there is to a certain extent a woman's division it is not a statutory division required by law, but is simply a division of the work they have. There is no one in charge of it. The only persons preparing for it in the hope of being placed in charge are persons coming from lower positions.

It does seem to me that with reference to the women of the country, who are about one-fifth of the wage-earning class in many of the different industries of the country, Congress ought to provide for the division. I hope the Senator from Utah will let the bill go through.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Washington offered an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill providing for this division. The subcommittee had Mr. Meeker before it, and no matter what Mr. Meeker says in his letter to the Senator, I want to tell the Senator now that he testified exactly

Mr. JONES. I read what he testified.

Mr. SMOOT. He testified exactly as his testimony shows, and any contradiction on his part is not justified, because that is exactly what he told the subcommittee. Not only that, Mr. President, but it seems to me like there is a little subterfuge even in the letter, because he says there is no chief of the division. She was never called the chief of division. When the woman was originally working there at the head of that work she never had the title of chief of division. It was no division at all. It was under the Department of Labor.

All that the subcommittee did in the matter was to take the testimony of Mr. Meeker, and I assure the Senator that Mr. Meeker has never at any time been delicate in asking for appropriations, as the Senator is no doubt aware, if he has followed the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations.

As I said, Mr. President, I do not want to take any more time to-night, but I can not let the bill be acted on now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to take a moment of time, but I want to give notice that at the earliest possible opportunity I shall move to take up this bill, and I hope the Senate will pass it if I get such an opportunity.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record my letter to Mr. Meeker and his reply; also a letter from the Secretary of Labor to Mr. Lewis, of the House of Representa-tives, and also a letter from Miss Julia Lathrop with reference to this matter, so that we will have this data in the RECORD, where everyone can get at it.

The VICE PRESIDENT, Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 24, 1917.

Dr. ROYAL MEEKER, Commissioner of Lalor Statistics, Department of Labor.

Commissioner of Lator Statistics, Department of Labor.

MY DEAR DR. MEEKER: In the official report of the hearings before the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations held January 3, 1917, you are recorded as furnishing certain answers to questions, concerning which I am seeking further information.

To save time and insure a clear understanding of the data requested, I am quoting from page 61 of the official report, the statements to which my questions refer:

"Mr. MEEKER. * * We have asked for $46,840 increase in the salary roll and the House granted $10,400 increase—and I am asking for the reinstalment of the items cut out with the single exception of $2,520 for the Chief of the Woman's Division.

"Senator Overman. Have you got a woman's division?

"Mr. MEEKER. We have a woman's division.

"Senator Overman. What does the Chief of the Woman's Division do?

do?

"Mr. MEEKER. The Chief of the Woman's Division heretofore has gotten $2,000.

"Senator Overman. What did she do?

"Mr. Meekee. She is the person who has direct charge of the investigations that are primarily concerned with women in industry; with the special problems"—

This colloquy raises the following questions:

1. What is the name of the woman who was Chief of the Woman's Division when you informed Senator Overman January 3, 1917, that you had a woman's division?

2. When you said that "heretofore" the Chief of the Woman's Division "has gotten $2,000," did you mean to say that she was getting $2,000 at that time, January 3, 1917?

3. If not—

3. If not—

(a) Who was the last woman to be paid that salary as Chief of the Woman's Division?

(b) When did she cease to receive $2,000?

(c) How long did she receive $2,000?

(d) Why was her salary status changed?

(e) What is she receiving now?

United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Washington, January 26, 1917.

Hon, Wesley L. Jones, U. S. S., Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Hon. Wesley L. Jones, U. S. S.,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Jones: Your letter of January 24, in regard to hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, was called to my attention this morning upon my return from a brief absence from the city on official matters.

I was not given any opportunity by the committee to make any explanation in regard to the Woman's Division or any other feature of the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

1. I have not seen a copy of the transcript of the hearings. If the report represents me as saying that there is a woman now in charge of the Woman's Division in this bureau, as intimated in your question 1, the report is incorrect. There is no chief of the Woman's Division in this bureau now, nor was there on January 3, 1917.

2. Question 2 is answered by my reply to question 1.

3. (a) When Miss Marie L. Obenauer resigned June 30, 1915, I was not able to secure from outside the bureau for a salary of $2,000 per annum a woman competent to fill Miss Obenauer's position and to carry forward the constructive work she had been doing. I was therefore obliged to try the experiment of promoting a woman already in the bureau. This woman took charge of the Woman's Division July 1, 1915. I had a distinct understanding with her that if she found the work uncongenial in any way, she should be free to go back to her former position and salary of $1,800 per annum, or if I found her work as division chief unsatisfactory, I should return her to her former position and salary. This woman had been in the Editorial Division for many years and had had almost no field experience. It was not a hopeful experiment in my view to advance her to the responsible position of Chief of the Woman's Division, which I did not feel I could accept at that time, as she was in the midst of the preparation of a report on the "Effects of fatal and totally disabling accidents upon family life." As soon as she had finished the preparation of this report I accepted her resignati ability in meeting people and extracting the information desired, oftentimes from exceedingly unwilling persons.

(b) Since June 26, 1916, there has been no Chief of the Woman's Division. The impossibility of attracting any woman from the outside to come into the bureau at a pairty $2,000 per annum, in order to undertake this extremely difficult and responsible work obliges me to try to train up some one in the bureau for this position. I have now in training, so to speak, three women investigators, and when I am satisfied as to the capacity and judgment of one of these I shall put her in charge of the Woman's Division and as rapidly as she makes good will advance her to the salary of $2,000 or more.

(c) This question has been answered above. The last incumbent served from July I, 1915, to June 26, 1916.

(e) Answered above, $1,800.

(f) Before answering this question I want to make it very clear that there are no legal divisions within this bureau. They have been created by myself or my predecessors in office to obtain greater administrative efficiency. The appropriation bills carry no such position as Chief of the Woman's Division. There are in this bureau four statistical experts at $2,000 each per annum. Mr. B. C. Washington, fr., now holds the position of statistical expert, which was left vacant by the resignation of Miss Obenauer's successor from the position of Chief of the Woman's Division of Chief of the Woman's Division at a lower salary than $2,000 a year and promote her as she demonstrates her ability.

(g) This has been answered under question 1.

(h) See above.

4. As stated above, there is at present no Chief of the Woman's Division.

5. (a) While there is no Chief of the Woman's Division, I have by no vision.

5. (a) While there is no Chief of the Woman's Division, I have by no means discontinued studies primarily concerned with women in industry. The Woman's Division still exists, although I am obliged to carry on the work without the assistance of a chief of division to take immediate charge of suggesting and planning investigations and the details of preparing reports for publication.

At the present time a special study of welfare work by employers is being carried on. This study, of course, includes all welfare work whether affecting men or women, but the "special problems" of welfare work affecting women are being considered by women engaged on this study.

whether affecting men or women, but the "special problems" of welfare work affecting women are being considered by women engaged on this study.

The investigation into the cost of living in the District of Columbia is another study which comes under the woman's division.

Very shortly will be begun an investigation into hours, wages, and conditions of employment in the slaughtering and meat-packing industry. Women agents sent out on this investigation will make special studies of the conditions affecting women in those occupations employing women in this industry.

(b) From (a) above you will see that we are now engaged in two investigations calling for special attention to women in industry, and will shortly begin a third. The welfare study was begun about January 1, 1916. The cost of living investigation in the District of Columbia has only just been started. As soon as possible I shall send the agents out on the special study of slaughtering and meat packing.

(d) See above.

7. The plans for all investigations of the bureau are worked out "in commission." The accident study was planned by the then chief of the Woman's Division. This plan, after being considered by me and all the chiefs of divisions was finally adopted substantially as submitted. Since there has been no ittular Chief of the Woman's Division it has been my custom to call the women agents in conference in planning industrial studies in which women are particularly concerned. Of course, the Chief of the Woman's Division should be brought in in every conference in which studies are planned or important changes are up for consideration. So far as was possible, I followed this practice as long as there was a Chief of the Woman's Division.

S. I think this question is answered in 7, above.

9. (a) Miss Elizabeth A. Hyde, clerk at $1,400 per annum; Mrs. Minnie E. Patterson, special agent at $1,200 per annum; and Miss Anlee L. Whitney, special agent at $1,200 per annum; and Miss Anlee L. Whitney, special agent at $1,20 and clerks.

(b) The welfare study.

(c) On January 3, 1917, no particular clerks and stenographers (Miss Hyde's designation is that of clerk, but she acts as a special agent) were assigned to the Woman's Division. The individuals assigned to this division to do stenographic and clerical work vary from time to time as exigencies demand. It must also be noted that there is no clear-cut division of labor between the divisions of this bureau. The work of examining and editing schedules, planning and making tabulations, and verifying is distributed to those employees of the bureau available at a particular time.

If you are trying to get at the amount of this bureau's appropriation expended for special studies of women in industry, I wish to say that that amount can only be roughly estimated, the reason being that much expert work is involved in every such study outside of the employees that are for the time being allocated to the Woman's Division.

(d) Impossible to determine, as indicated above.

10. Impossible to determine for the reasons stated in (c) above, and also for the reason that the study was not wholly and simply a study of welfare work for women.

11. No woman was referred to as Chief of the Woman's Division in my of welfare work for women.

11. No woman was referred to as Chief of the Woman's Division in my testimony on January 3, 1917. When Miss Obenauer was serving in the capacity named, I consulted her frequently in this regard. Quite naturally I did not feel able to devote as much of the bureau's appropriation to these studies as Miss Obenauer thought necessary and advisable. Please do not consider this as a criticism of Miss Obenauer. She would not have been a good Chief of the Woman's Division had she not insisted on large expenditures for her special studies.

12. As I have stated above, so far as was possible, I called in Miss Obenauer and her successor in conference when new studies were being planned or when changes of importance were under consideration in the regular studies carried on by the bureau. It was not always possible to follow this practice, first, because the Chief of the Woman's Division was obliged to be absent in the field a large part of the time. At other times I did not wish to bother these women with matters which did not seem to me at the time to be of great importance, but about which it seems to me now it was important to keep the Chief of the Woman's Division fully informed. Of course, I can not answer the question as to about what particular investigations outside her own special investigations I consulted with the Chief of the Woman's Division.

I have answered the above questions as clearly and conscientiously as I know how, at the expenditure of no inconsiderable amount of time, of which I have all too little.

I do not know the purpose of these questions, but I can readily see how my answers can be used to show the ineffectiveness of the special studies of women in industry carried on by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. No one knows better than I—no one knows as well as I—the inadequacies of this bureau and the difficulties I have had to contend with in trying to spread the bureau's small appropriation over such immense industrial fields. Lest my answers should be misunderstood as indicating a hostility on my part to the proposed woman's division in the Department of Labor, I wish to say with all the emphasis at my command that my only interest is to achieve results. I think it would be better to make all studies in the labor field under one bureau. This would be more economical and much more effective. A Bureau of Labor Statistics supported by sufficient appropriations to enable it to carry on the necessary investigations of labor conditions of both men and women would be able to coordinate its work more effectively and avoid duplications inevitable if the work is divided. However, I have not been able to secure the appropriations I need even to carry on the less expensive studies in the field of labor. Seemingly, the only possibility of securing sufficient appropriations to carry on these much-needed studies for women in industry is through the creation of an independent woman's division. If this is the case, an independent woman's division in the creation of my ability.

Very truly, yours,

ROYAL MERKER,

Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

ROYAL MEEKER, Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1916.

Washington, D. C., July 26, 1916.

Hon. David J. Lewis,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman: In accordance with your request, I am giving you the following expression of my views on H. R. 16358, a bill to establish in the Department of Labor a division to be known as a woman's division.

With the purpose of this bill we can all no doubt agree. My first impulse, however, was to suggest that, in view of the fact that the Bureau of Labor Statistics has a jurisdiction covering all of this field, the division should be created within that bureau rather than directly attached to the department. Upon more mature deliberation I am convinced that while there are no sharp lines of demarcation between women in industry and men in industry, so far as certain phases are concerned, and the same machinery which is established to collect and compile wage schedules of men could, with superior efficiency, be utilized for collecting and compiling the wages of women in the same industry, there is a vast field for investigation and study which specially and peculiarly affects women in industry which could be more effectively handled under the immediate direction of women than under the direction of men. I have particular reference to the physical and mental effects of certain lines of modern industry upon those who are to be the mothers of the future generations and the effect of that effect upon those generations themselves.

For this reason I favor the enactment of the Casey bill, H. R. 16358.

Sincerely, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

United States Department of Labor, Children's Bureau, Washington, February 3, 1917.

Washington, February 3, 1917.

The Hon. John J. Casey,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Casey: In my judgment, the provisions of the bill to create a women's division in the Department of Labor are well calculated to insure effective and economical cooperation between that division and the Children's Bureau. No duplication is possible if the provisions of the bill are carried out in good faith by the bureau and the proposed division division.
Yours, respectfully,

JULIA C. LATHROP, Chief.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ASHLEY AND WASATCH NATIONAL FORESTS.

The bill (S. 7320) adding certain lands in Wyoming to the Ashley and Wasatch National Forests was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 18, after the words "the east half," to strike out "of" and insert "and," so as to make the bill read:

make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described areas be, and the same are hereby, included in and make a part of the Ashley National Forest, subject to all prior adverse rights, and that said lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting national forests:

All of sections 4, 5, and 6; the north half, and the north half of the south half, and lots 4, 5, 6, and 7 of section 7; the north half, and the north half of the south half, and lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of section 8; all of section 9; all of section 16; the northwest quarter of

ment was concurred in

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 6854) to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes," approved January 26, 1915, which is in the words and figures following: "Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, or improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to read the bill, but I take it for granted that the object of the bill is to repeal the part of the law creating the park in which there was a proviso that at no time should there be an expenditure of more than $10,000 per annum.

Mr. THOMAS. This is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr.

SHAFROTHI, and that is the purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I judged that to be the case, although I have not had an opportunity to read the report. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado before the bill is passed that I do not think the bill would have been passed unless that proviso had been in it, but I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. The bill could not have passed the House without that proviso in it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILBUR F. LAWTON.

The bill (S. 747) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wilbur F. Lawton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Wilbur F. Lawton, who was a sergeant of Company K, Twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been under military control on October 31, 1861, and not absent without leave on that date or at any other time in that year.

Mr. BRYAN. It seems to me that the bill ought to contain the usual provision as to back pension, bounty, and pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to, undoubtedly.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to add at the end of the amendment: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Wilbur F. Lawton.'

IVY L. MERRILL.

The bill (H. R. 11685) for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Pottawatomie Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma not otherwise appropriated, to Ivy L. Merrill, a quarter-blood Pottawatomie Indian, of Pottawatomie County, Okla., $500, in full compensation for permanent and lasting injuries received. without negligence on her part, while in the employ of the United States Government as a civil-service employee at the Shawnee Indian School in Pottawatomie County, Okla.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the amount which that bill carries?

Mr. OWEN. It provides for an appropriation of $500.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amount proposed to be appropriated in the bill is $500.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 7757) authorizing a further extension of time to purchasers of land in the former Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian Reservation, Okla., within which to make payment was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, Mr. President. I notice in the report of the committee a letter from the Indian Office containing this statement:

In view thereof it is the opinion of the department that said purchasers of Cheyenne and Arapahoe lands are entitled to relief. Therefore I have drafted a proposed section 2 to said House joint resolution 306, and have to recommend its enactment into law.

I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma why section 2, as recommended by the department, was not included in the bill? Mr. OWEN. I regret to say that I do not understand whether it was included or omitted.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator let the bill go over temporarily, and let us see if we can revert to it again?

Mr. OWEN. Later in the evening we might perhaps ascertain what the Senator desires to know. It is agreeable to me to have the bill go over, as he suggests.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. OWEN subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to have Order of Business 818 referred to again—Senate bill 7757. It was passed over by consent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows .

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant to purchasers of land in the former Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian Reservation, Okla., sold in the year 1910, under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1910 (36 Stats. L., 533), a further extension of time to make payment; the unpaid portion of the purchase shall be divided into five equal portions, one portion to be due November 15, 1918, and one portion thereof November 15 of each of the four succeeding years, interest to be paid on each installment or portion when due at the rate of 5 per cent per annum: Provided, That interest due under existing law granting extensions of time must be paid up to November 15, 1916, within 90 days from the passage of this act: Provided further, That failure to pay any installment, as well as the interest thereon, as the same becomes due, as herein provided, will forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments previously made shall be forfeited.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the In-

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior of the 18th of January be put in the RECORD in lieu of the one in the committee report.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for the purpose of correcting the report?

Mr. OWEN. For the purpose of correcting the report. Mr. SMOOT. The recommendation of the Secretary refers to an entirely different subject matter than the bill itself?

Mr. OWEN. Yes. There was an error in the letter of the Secretary which was included in the committee report, and it is desired to substitute this letter, which is free from error, in lieu of the one in the committee's report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 18, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to refer again to your letter of January 10, 1917, inclosing for report a copy of Senate 7757, to provide for a further extension of time of payment to purchasers of certain surplus land of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation in Oklahoma.

The act of June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 533), authorized the disposal of certain lands theretofore reserved for school and agency purposes in connection with the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation, under sealed bids or at public auction to the highest bidder, under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States and under rules and regulations adopted by the Secretary of the Interior.

These lands were sold at public auction in November, 1910, and the purchasers were required to comply with the homestead laws, in addition to paying one-fifth of the purchase price at the time of sale, and the balance in six equal annual installments. There were 131 tracts sold at said sale, 60 tracts being sold at an average price of $38.60 per acre, 43 tracts at an average price of $48 per acre, 16 tracts at an average price of $66 per acre, and 10 tracts at an average price of $67.20 per acre.

acre, 43 tracts at an average price of $48 per acre, 16 tracts at an average price of $66 per acre, and 10 tracts at an average price of $67.20 per acre.

By the act of August 22, 1911 (37 Stat. L., 33), an extension for one year for the payment of the annual installments due was made, the payment of interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the deferred payments being required. The act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 530), authorized an extension of time for one year for the payment of any annual installment due or thereafter to become due on the purchase price of said lands, upon the payment of interest for one year in advance, at 5 per cent per annum, upon the amount due, with a provision for a further extension of time for a period of one year in the same manner, the last payment and all other payments to be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment becomes due, by the terms of the act under which the entry was made. Under the terms of the sale the last payment was due in November, 1916, and under the provisions of the act of August 24, 1912, the last payment is due in November, 1917.

An examination of the records of the General Land Office shows that there are 66 entries on which final payment has not yet been made. Of these 66 entries, 14 have paid one or more yearly installments, and 52 have made only the payment required at the time of entry. Thirty of the 66 purchasers have paid yearly interest up to date, but 36 of them are in default in the payment of interest.

It is represented by the purchasers that due to the hard times which prevailed in the years 1910, 1911, and 1912, debts were incurred during that period, and the payment of interest thereon, subsequent to the year 1912, has left them very little with which to pay the principal debt due the Government.

In this connection it may be said that these lands have brought a better price than any ever disposed of by the Government under the homestead laws.

In view of all the conditions herein presented, I am of the o into law. Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. Henry F. Ashurst, Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS.

The bill (H R. 15617) to establish fish-hatching and fishcultural stations in the States of Alabama; California; Louisiana; Florida; Georgia, South Carolina, or North Carolina; Maryland or Virginia; Oregon or Washington; Texas; Oklahoma; Illinois; Washington; Arizona; New Mexico; Michigan; Idaho; Missouri; Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey; and Minnesota, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. LANE. I desire to say in regard to that bill that provision is made therein for a fish-cultural station in Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be, but I am unable to withdraw my objection, whether Colorado is included or not.

JOHN F. KELLY.

A bill (S. 6251) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John F. Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, John F. Kelly, who was a private in Company F. First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged hono-ably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 15th day of February, 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the usual proviso be added to that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John F. Kelly."

STEPHEN J. SIMPSON.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 792, being House bill 7763, for the relief of Stephen J. Simpson. The bill was passed over on a previous evening when the calendar was under consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement I do not believe that we can do that until we go through the calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understood that by unanimous consent a bill could be recurred to. This bill was passed over during a very necessary absence on my part, and before I was able to return to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take but a moment. Mr. SHERMAN. It is of the same character as the bill just passed, being a bill to correct a military record.

Mr. SMOOT. But there may be a number of other such cases. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?
Mr. FLETCHER. What is the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 7763) for the relief of Stephen J. Simpson.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I shall object to the consideration of any other bills out of order.

Mr. CHILTON. Then the Senator had better object to this one, Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, does this not violate the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to know what the unanimousconsent agreement was. I understood that it included the right to revert to bills that had been passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. After we get through with the remaining bills on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think it included that condition. The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement includes anything, as is shown by the RECORD. That is all the Chair knows

Mr. GALLINGER. Therefore the Senator from Illinois has a right to call the bill up now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Stephen J. Simpson, late of Company F, Thirty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that company and regiment on the 19th of July, 1865, but that no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING LAWS.

The bill (S. 7795) to amend and revise the laws relating to printing and binding and the distribution of publications for Congress was considered an in Committee of the Whole,

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to the end of paragraph 2 of section 1.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Printing and agreed to the report of this bill, but I think right here I should like a little explanation. I will ask the Senator from Utah or the Senator from West Virginia to give attention to the language found at the top of page 2, reading as follows

SEC. 1. PAR. 2. Neither House shall authorize any matter to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, except such as shall be spoken or read in order, unless the same shall have been referred to its Committee on

Does that include every telegram and every petition that we might want to have printed without having it read?

Mr. CHILTON. I take it that it includes about what we print now, Mr. President; but instead of being printed in the body of the Record the matter would be printed in an appendix to the RECORD. The Senator probably recollects the discussion which occurred when we considered this matter?

Mr. GALLINGER. A little further down there is another provision-

Mr. CHILTON. What section is the Senator reading from? Mr. GALLINGER. Section 1, paragraph 2, where this provision is found:

But the foregoing provisions shall not apply to such statistics or quotations, not exceeding two pages of the Record in any one address, as shall properly constitute part of a Member's speech, nor to the granting of leave to a Member to print or extend his own remarks, exclusive of other matter.

Does that relate to Members of the other House exclusively? Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it does refer to Members of the House, because there is a practice in the other House of printing as many as 30 or 40 pages of the Record by obtaining permission to extend remarks. I have two or three samples of that in my desk here, and in one instance the cost to the Government of the United States was $1,200.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked that question for the reason that if it relates to the other House the word ought to be "Representative" in place of "Member." We are Members of Congress quite as much as are Members of the other House.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that in my opinion our rules will make that work automatically.

We have no such practice under our rules here.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to interrupt, I suggest that the matter is made clear by paragraph 3 in section 18, which reads:

Sec. 18. Par. 3. The terms "Member" and "Members of Congress" shall mean and include, for the purposes of this act, the Vice President and all Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners in Congress

So the term "Member" as used in this bill is there defined.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that be so, then we give authority to Members of this body to extend their remarks. We never have claimed that, and it never has been allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. And we never want it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will still be subject to the rules of the Senate precisely as heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. The rules of the Senate do not deal with that matter, as I remember them, but I am not going to be technical about it. I think that it is unfortunately expressed.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded, as fol-

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public proceedings of each House of Congress as reported by the Official Reporters thereof shall be printed in the Congressional Record, which shall be issued in daily form during each session and bound in permanent form promptly at the close of each session. The daily and permanent Record shall bear the same date, which shall be that of the actual day's proceedings reported therein.

Sec. 1. Par. 2. Neither House shall authorize any matter to be printed in the Congressional Record, except such as shall be spoken or read in order, unless the same shall have been referred to its Committee on Printing, and when so authorized such matter shall be printed in the appendix to the daily and the permanent Record if not germane to the business pending before the respective House at the time it was referred; and it shall not be in order to read any matter into the Congressional Record, other than an address or speech of the Member so reading, unless the same is germane to the pending business and does not exceed two pages of the Record; but the foregoing provisions shall not apply to such statistics or quotations, not exceeding two pages of the Record in any one address, as shall properly constitute part of a Member's speech, nor to the granting of leave to a Member to print or extend his own remarks, exclusive of other matter, upon a stated subject which shall be printed in the appendix to the daily and the permanent Record unless germane to the business pending before the House at the time said leave was granted, and all other speeches delivered in either House which are not germane to the pending business shall be intered in the Congressional Record shall be authorized by either House after having been referred to its Committee on Printing.

Sec. 1. Par. 3. No illustrations shall be inserted in the Congressional Record, as shall be authorized by either House after having been referred to its Committee on Printing.

work and charged to the allotment for printing and binding for Congress.

SEC. 2. PAR. 1. Either House of Congress may order any matter printed as a document, the printing of which is not already provided for by law, but only when the same shall be accompanied by an estimate, obtained from the Public Printer, of the cost of printing a sufficient number of copies of the complete document for distribution as provided by law, which number shall be known as the "usual number," and, if accompanied by illustrations, the order to print shall so state: Provided, That no such printing shall be ordered or undertaken, unless specifically so authorized, until after all the copy therefor has been referred to the respective Committee on Printing, or such committee has been discharged from its consideration: Provided further, That the Committee on Printing of either House in submitting a report on printing provided for in this section shall include therein an estimate by the Public Printer of the cost of the proposed printing, a statement from him of the approximate cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year and the amount available therefor, a description of the general character of the matter submitted for printing, and, if a reprint, the number of copies previously ordered and on hand in any form: Provided further, That the Public Printer shall examine closely the orders of the Senate and the House for printing, and, in case of duplication, he shall print only under the first order received.

SEC. 2. Par. 2. Every communication submitted to Congress, or either House thereof, by the Executive Office, the judiciary, or any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government shall be accompanied by an estimate from the Public Printer of the cost of printing the usual number thereof, together with a recommendation as to whether the same should be printed, and, if Illustrations are included, the letter of transmittal shall so state: Provided, That if the estimated cost of printing a communication so transmitted is less than $50, it may be ordered printed by either House without reference to its Committee on Printing as herein provided; but, whenever a recommendation is submitted that a communication be not printed or it is not accompanied by an estimate of the cost of printing, it shall not be ordered printed by either House until reported upon by the committee to which it may be referred, and then only as provided for in this section: Provided further, That nothing in this paragraph relating to estimates or reference to the Committee on Printing shall apply to printing the usual number of reports of committees of Congress; to addresses or messages of the President to Congress, when not accompanied by other papers; to printed communications submitted to Congress by any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government; to communications from the Court of Claims; to estimates of appropriations; or to matter printed for the use of either House in executive or secret session: Provided further, That all reports on examinations and surveys of rivers and harbors authorized by law which may be prepared during a recess of Congress shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be printed by the Public Printer as documents of the following session of Congress, Sec. 2. Par. 3. Either House may by simple resolution order law or resolution to be submitted to Congress, or either House thereof, shall be designated for all purposes as numbered documents thereof, and all reprints of congressional publications shall bear the original title and number.

SEC. 3. Par. 1. Of the Senate numbered documents and reports. excepting reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 300 copies; to the House document room not to exceed 300 copies; to the House document room not ocxeed 100 copies ach. Of the House numbered documents and reports, excepting reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 200 copies; to the House document room, not to exceed 200 copies; to the House document room, not to exceed 200 copies; to the House, not to exceed 20 copies.

SEC. 3. Par. 2. Of the Senate reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 200 copies. Of the House reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 200 copies. Of the House reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 160 copies; to the Senate document room, not to exceed 160 copies; to the superinted by the House hall be private bills and reported by either Hou

Sec. 4. Par. 3. The Public Printer shall prepare and bind six complete sets of the printed bills and resolutions of each House of Congress, the volumes when bound to be preserved for reference, as follows: Two in the Library of Congress and one each in the document room and the library of each House.

Sec. 5. Par. 1. Any committee or commission of Congress authorized to hold hearings or to conduct investigations, may have printed for its use not to exceed 1,000 copies, in all, of any hearing before such committee or commission upon pending legislation; but no such committee or commission may have printed more than 500 copies, in all, of any other matter germane to its official business, and such matter shall not exceed 100 printed pages in any one instance, except as may be specifically authorized by either House: Provided, That hearings and other publications of each committee and commission shall be numbered consecutively throughout a Congress.

SEC. 5. PAR. 2. No report of a committee or commission of Congress shall be printed if the estimated cost of the usual number exceeds $500, or if it is accompanied by illustrations, without specific authority therefor from the House to which such report is submitted, together with a statement of its cost and illustrations, without specific authority therefor from the House to which such report is submitted, together with a statement of its cost and illustrations.

SEC. 5. PAR. 3. Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to have the chairman explain section 18, paragraph 2.

Mr. CHILTON: That is a provision regulating the printing of documents on behalf of commissions and defines the word "commission" as used in the bill. It says:

The terms "congressional commission" and "commission of Congress" shall mean, for the purposes of this act, a commission the majority of the members of which are Members of Congress at the time of the creation of such commission.

Mr. OWEN. Suppose the majority of the commission are not Members of Congress?

Mr. CHILTON. Then it is not a commission.

Mr. OWEN. Is that intended to abolish the commission, or simply to abolish the printing for that commission?

Mr. CHILTON. It is just to regulate the printing for it, as provided in a former part of the bill. Quite a number of sections refer to it. It is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH A. JENNINGS.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 746, House bill 6732, which was passed over on the last call of the calendar at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a question of order. I understand that we are now operating under a unanimous-consent agreement, which requires us to begin with Order of Business

Mr. JAMES. I will state to the Senator that it was provided that we might recur to any of these matters that were passed

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to it if it does not seriously interfere with the consideration of the rest of the calendar.
Mr. JAMES. Oh, it will not affect the consideration of the calendar at all.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Joseph A. Jennings $2,500, on account of the amputation of his left arm, incurred while employed in the gun-carriage shop of the United States navy yard, at Washington, D. C., and a sufficient sum for the payment of the same is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to have the letter from the Secretary of the Navy printed in the RECORD in connection with the passage of this bill.

Mr. JAMES. I will have that done, Mr. President. Does the Senator wish to have the affidavit printed also?

Mr. SMOOT. No.
The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT Washington, February 3, 1917.

Hon. Blair Lee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator. Responding to your inquiry of this date, I have the honor to say that nothing is found of record to indicate that any payment in the way of compensation for his injury has heretofore been made to Mr. Joseph A. Jennings, the beneficiary named in H. R. 6732.

Mr. Jennings was injured about nine years before the workmen's compensation act was passed and his case is not covered by any remedial legislation.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTATION OF SISAL AND MANILA HEMP.

The resolution (S. Res. 94) authorizing and instructing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate to investigate what companies and corporations are engaged in the importation of sisal and manila hemp, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

F. W. SCHULTZ.

The bill (H. R. 3895) for the relief of F. W. Schultz was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection. I regard this as a very meritorious case.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read the report on the bill, and the claim is the same as a class of claims that have been before the Claims Committee for years and years, and the Claims Committee has always refused to pass claims like this. Of late they have been referred to the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, and some of them have been reported out from that committee. I have called to the attention of the chairman of the committee claims of a similar character, for money stolen exactly in the same way, and perhaps in some cases where more care has been taken than in this case, and the committee has refused to report them to the Senate. If it is understood that that is to be the policy hereafter, I want to withdraw the claims from the Claims Committee and refer them to the Post Office and Post Roads Committee and get favorable reports on them. I refer to the claims of postmasters within my State who have lost money just exactly in the same way as in the case covered by this bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this is a House bill, in the first place.

Mr. STERLING. And there is a strong report from the House committee. It comes here and is reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I think the proof shows that due care was used by the assistant postmaster who locked the safe in the post office on the evening of the day on which the postage stamps were stolen. The money belonging to the fund was in the bank. Only postage stamps were in the safe. The assistant postmaster, who is disinterested from the pecuniary standpoint, anyhow, makes a strong affidavit showing that he carefully locked the safe at night. It seems to me that this is a just claim and ought to be passed by the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, what is the amount? Mr. SMOOT. Let me call the Senator's attention to a part of a letter written by the Postmaster General. He says:

In view of the contradictory statements of Mr. Caldwell and of the absence of any evidence to show that the safe was "carefully and completely locked" at the time the burglary occurred, there appears to be no reason for reversing the action taken on this claim.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I know something about the letter written by the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General, I think, assumes in that statement what the proof hardly warrants. The assistant postmaster made one affidavit upon which a wrong interpretation was put by the inspector. He makes a subsequent affidavit, however, in which he shows that no such interpretation was justifiable, and shows what the facts were in regard to his carefully locking the safe on the night the property was taken.

I hope, in view of the justice of this claim, that the Senator will not press his objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah refers to the fact that these claims formerly went to the Claims Committee, and now a batch of them appear to have gone to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Mr. CHILTON. What is the amount of this claim, Mr.

Mr. CHILTON. President?

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator want to pay it?

Mr. STERLING. Two hundred and forty-four dollars and fifty-eight cents.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from West Virginia is going to pay it, I will let him do so.

Mr. CHILTON. This is like the case of the poor woman in West Virginia the other night who lost $152 in the same way. They can better afford to pay it than this rich Government, so just let them continue to rob us. I sympathize with the Senator. I had the same experience the other night.

Mr. BRYAN. I am much obliged to the Senator from West Virginia for interjecting that remark into what I was trying

About a year ago or less the policy seems to have developed of referring all claims against the Government for losses by postmasters to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads here in the Senate, and quite a number of them have been so referred. Now, I have no feeling of jealousy at all about it. will say, however, that claims of this class never have been allowed by the Committee on Claims since I have been a member of it. There is a regulation put into effect by the Post Office Department in pursuance of authority of law which requires that a safe shall be provided, and that it shall be locked; and wherever that is not done the Post Office Department uniformly refuses to pay claims for loss. It seems to me a wise policy, because otherwise anybody can file a claim if his property has been stolen and get a recovery, although he failed to comply with the reasonable regulation of the Post Office Department.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me? Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator; but I will say to him that I am not debating the merits of this claim.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator is aware of the fact that the Postmaster General does not report adversely to this claim, but he submits it for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand the Postmaster General to say that the postmaster did not lock the safe. He says that he turned the combination, but left it so that anybody could come and open it. The combination was not caught. In other words, the man who entered that safe did not have to know the combination in order to get into it.

Mr. STERLING. I beg the Senator's pardon, the Postmaster

General does not say that. The Postmaster General refers to a previous affidavit from which the inspector inferred that only the day lock was left on at night, and then he makes a second affidavit, in full explanation, in which he states the fact.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, I will ask as to the next bill on the calendar, the bill (H. R. 3894) for the relief of George H. Grace, which is a claim of $2,718, and the same thing exists; he failed to comply with that same regulation.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes

Mr. SMOOT. And the next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the next bill? Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. House bill 3894 will also go over. SUPERINTENDENT OF FOLDING ROOM.

Senate resolution 286, to authorize the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to appoint a superintendent of the folding room, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over. Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the Senator will not make an objection. At this time there is no superintendent of the folding room. The young man who has been performing the work has gone off the roll. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate investigated the subject and found the necessity for the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the objection, having looked into it a little.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint a superintendent of the folding room, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,600 per annum from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

REGISTER OF WILLS.

The bill (S. 6750) to provide for the appointment of the register of wills of the District of Columbia by the justices of the Supreme Court of said District was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is included in the District of Columbia appropriation bill and hence it is unnecessary to pass this bill. I ask that it may go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

S. S. YODER.

The bill (H. R. 11288) for the relief of S. S. Yoder was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to S. S. Yoder the sum of $1,000, which said sum was deposited with the proper authorities as a guaranty that the Washington, Spa Springs & Gretta Raliroad would be constructed in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 18, 1907, and which provisions have been complied with.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have some explanation of the

Mr. POMERENE. It is a House bill, and the Senate committee incorporated the report of the House committee. briefly, this was a deposit which was made to secure the construction of the road named in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator speak a little louder?

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator speak a little louder:
Mr. POMERENE. It was a deposit made by Mr. Yoder, who was a Member of Congress many years ago from Ohio, to guarantee the construction of the Washington, Spa Springs & Gretta Railroad. The full history of the matter is contained in the report. The committee of the House went into it very fully.
The last paragraph of page 2 is as follows:

This $1,000 was deposited with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to guarantee the construction of this railroad within the prescribed time, and this act further provided that this sum should be forfeited to the District of Columbia in event the road was not in operation as prescribed in said act. There seems to be no question but that the railroad was completed and cars in operation within the prescribed time. Moreover, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia acknowledged that the Washington, Spa Springs & Gretta Railroad Co. had "fulfilled all the conditions of its charter," as is evidenced by the following letter, to wit:

Then follows the letter by William Tindall, secretary of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under date of April 14, 1911, in which he says, addressing the railroad com-

THE WASHINGTON, SPA SPRINGS & GRETTA RAILROAD Co., Care of G. L. Baker, Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

Care of G. L. Baker, Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia direct me to inform you that, having completed your deposit of $20,000 with them, in accordance with your agreement of August 24, 1910, to cover the cost of grading and widening Bladensburg Road within certain limits, and having completed the work on those portions of the road not covered by said agreement, you are considered to have fulfilled all the conditions of your charter with respect to the widening, grading, and macadamizing of Bladensburg Road throughout its length in the District of Columbia.

Very respectfully,

Secretary of Board of Commissioners.

Sccretary of Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

APRIL 14, 1911.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not ask the Senator to read any further. I have had time to look into it. It seems the money was deposited in the Treasury and it requires an act of Congress to get it out.

Mr. POMERENE. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 13831) to amend section 4464 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to number of passengers to be stated in certificates of inspection of passenger vessels, and section 4465 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, prescribing penalty for carrying excessive number of passengers on passenger vessels, and section 4466 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to special permits for excursions on passenger steamers, was considered as in Committee of the

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will point out which portion of section 4465 of the Revised Statutes, which is printed at the bottom of page 2 of the bill, is new matter?

Mr. FLETCHER. The object of the bill is to extend the inspection service so as to cover all passenger-carrying vessels. The law at present uses the expression "steamers," and is applied to steam vessels. The bill if it passes would cover sail vessels carrying passengers, motor vessels carrying passengers, barges carrying passengers, and any vessel that carries passengers, whereas the law at present is confined to steam vessels.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thank the Senator for explaining that portion of it. I understood that. It does not refer to ferry-

Mr. FLETCHER. No.
Mr. WADSWORTH. The information I desired of the Senator was as to the new matter provided in section 4465 at the bottom of page 2 of the bill, which relates to the penalties. You will note that section 2 of the bill, commencing at line 15 on page 2, provides

That section 4465 of the Revised Statutes of the United Statutes be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4465. It shall not be lawful to take on board of any vessel a greater number of passengers than is stated in the certificate of inspection, and for every violation of this provision the master or owner shall be liable to any person suing for the same to forfeit the amount of passage money and $10 for each passenger beyond the number allowed.

There is no way by which a Senator, without looking at the Revised Statutes, can tell where the amendment comes in.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment there is the use of the words "any vessel" instead of "any steamer" or "any steam vessel." It seems to extend the law to all vessels and therefore the words "any vessel" are used. I think that is the only change there

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator then accept an amendment to insert, after the word "vessel," in line 19, the words "other than a ferryboat," so as to conform with the rest of the bill? It is a very serious matter to attempt to regulate the number of passengers on ferryboats under Federal inspec-tion. The bill apparently did not have the original intention of bringing in ferryboats, some of which are municipally owned, notably by the city of New York.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see any objection to that, but the Senator will see, in section 4467, at lines 6 and 7, "the board of inspectors shall state in every certificates of inspection carrying passengers other than ferryboats." Ferryboats are excepted from the application of the act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So far so good; but should not that same exception be made in line 19 when you go to work to amend another section of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. HUGHES. Let me call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that the paragraph to which he refers does not call for Federal inspection. It simply states that it shall not be lawful to take on board any vessel a greater number of passengers than are stated in the certificate of inspection.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no certificate of inspection required for a ferryboat.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no provision here making inspection to apply to ferryboats. The ferryboats the Senator and I are familiar with ply from one State to another. I do not think it would do any harm to state there that they shall not carry a greater number of passengers than is stated in the certificate of inspection. I just wanted to make that suggestion. This is not providing for any new form of inspection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator will not be troubled at all by that paragraph because the ferryboats are not concerned in it at all. They do not have to have this inspection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have no objection. Mr. LANE. I should like to ask why they should not be inspected just the same as other boats carrying passengers. Why should not the number of passengers that they carry be restricted the same as other vessels?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course there are arguments pro and con as to that. One thing is they usually have not so far to go and usually there is little trouble in connection with ferryboats.

Mr. LANE. How many lives have been lost in ferryboats from overloading and from bad management and lack of proper inspection? They are the easiest boats of all on which to control the number of passengers because the passengers go through a gateway where the number can be registered.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are arguments the other way on that point. There was strong opposition to ferryboats being included in the measure. It was believed by those who represented them that the risk and danger was not very great.

Mr. LANE. Who are they? The owners of the boats?

Mr. FLETCHER. Probably so.

Mr. LANE. I think they must have been.
Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I can correct the Senator's impression. The city of New York as a municipality, if the Federal Government is going to govern the number of passengers which may go upon a ferryboat in New York Harbor, would have to erect turnstiles on the ferry slips and count thousands and thousands and thousands of people every day going each way. There has never been the slightest necessity for any such precaution. May I say to the Senator from Oregon that the New York municipal ferries running between New York City and Staten Island have carried 15,000,000 passengers a year with but one death, and that not due to overcrowding. You would simply compel the city to double the number of boats they already have.

Mr. LANE. The counting by the turnstile is done automatically; it registers the number, and when the maximum number is reached you can stop others going aboard. If you do not do the same as on other passenger boats the day will come when the city of New York will become alive to its error, as in another case

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a different proposition. That was not city regulation.

Mr. LANE. It was due to overloading, without proper means provided for saving lives.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a certain inspection there that it is believed makes it safe, and if a situation arises where it is considered necessary it can be taken care of at some other

Mr. LANE. In respect to that I will say that no ferryboat going out of the harbor of New York can or does carry enough lifeboats to insure the lives of all the passengers they carry. An examination of the life preservers on board one of the large excursion steamers that was used in carrying passengers from New York City revealed the fact that a small slab or ingot of iron had been placed in the center of the life preserver instead of cork, with which it was supposed to have been filled. When the unsuspecting and innocent and trusting people tied these life preservers around them, which simply added to their own weight, and jumped overboard they went straight to the bottom of the river

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to ask if they issue certificates to ferryboats?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not know of any.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. C. X. BOUCHER.

The bill (S. 2200) for the relief of F. C. X. Boucher was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 7833) authorizing the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

State of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, or any band thereof, may have against the United States which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the determination of the amount, if any, due said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota from the United States, under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, or for the failure of the United States to pay said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of sither party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota against the United States and to enter judgment thereon.

Sec. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation; and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credits for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, or any band thereof. The claim or claims of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota are repaided for the long of the said courts they passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or band or bands thereof, may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however,

Mr. JONES. I notice one provision in the bill that gives five years for the presentation of these claims. I do not know why we should give so much time.

Mr. CLAPP. That must be a misprint. Mr. JONES. It says:

The claim or claims of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, or band or bands thereof, may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act.

Mr. CLAPP. That was evidently an oversight. It ought to be not to exceed two years at the outside. I move that amendment, Mr. JONES. I think one year would be perhaps better.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to amend by inserting "two years" in place of "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 22, strike out "five" and insert "two," so as to read "to be filed within two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF HENRY H. SIBLEY.

The bill (S. 3962) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported adversely.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked that the bill go to the calendar when reported. It is a claim I once investigated and thought there was merit in it, but, as the committee has reported it adversely, I do not object to having it indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK CARPENTER.

The bill (S. 5768) for the relief of Frank Carpenter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Frank Carpenter $812.60, as full settlement of the amount due him, for service and team hire in 1910 and 1911 in connection with the construction of the Oklahoma State rifle range at Chandler, Okla.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Oklahoma to explain this claim. I have looked over the report for some evidence from some of the departments as to whether or not the claim was a just one against the Government, and I find nothing in the report to show that.

Mr. OWEN. I will say to the Senator from Utah that there is an affidavit embodied in the report from the engineer in charge, under whose authority this work was done, explaining the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I see the Senator from New York [Mr. Wansworth] in making the report stated-

The Legislature of Oklahoma has refused to meet the claim.

Mr. OWEN. The matter did not belong to the Legislature of Oklahoma. It is a claim for compensation for work done for the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true, Mr. President. Mr. SMOOT. I should like the Senator in a few words to explain it.

Mr. OWEN. The claim was for work done by Carpenter's team, which was engaged by A. C. Ennes, who was engineer in charge of the construction of the rifle range at Chandler, Okla. Ennes makes oath, as the Senator will find on page 2 of the report, on June 3, 1916, that this work was done under the authority and by the approval of the War Department and of the governor of Oklahoma, who was cooperating and furnishing the range itself; that the bills for Carpenter's team hire were promptly made out and approved, and I suppose forwarded for payment, but he never was paid.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the report says:

Auditor for War Department has refused to allow payment from funds allotted to Oklahoma since that time on the ground of illegality of such practice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I can explain that. Mr. OWEN. I will be very glad to have the Senator from New York do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had to look into the claim and it is my report. The fund set aside for the use of the National Guard of Oklahoma was exhausted in the year 1911, before this man sent in his bill for the work that he contracted to do with the Federal officer. When he made application for payment and when his bill reached the War Department the auditor there said that there being no more money in that year's allotment of funds it was impossible for the War Department to pay the

Mr. SMOOT. Was the work done during that year?
Mr. WADSWORTH. It was done during the year in which the funds were supposed to be available, but the bills did not come in until the funds had been exhausted. The claimant has never had a penny and he has finished the work in perfect condition.

Mr. OWEN. That was all there was about it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTLAND IRON WORKS.

The bill (S. 3895) for the relief of the Portland Iron Works was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$10,164.26" and to insert "$9,800," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Portland Iron Works the sum of $9,800, in full compensation, being amount held back by the Government as a penalty for delays in the construction of the two dredges known as Wahkiakum and Multnomah.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I should like some Senator to explain this bill.

Mr. LANE. I will endeavor to explain it to the Senator. There was let a contract to build two Government dredges for operation on the Columbia River, and they were built by a subcontractor by the name of Joe Supple, whom I know well. The payment of the sum of $9,000 was placed upon him as a fine for damages due to his failure to fulfill his contract within a contract within a certain specified time. The facts were that he was entirely able and willing to build the dredges on time, and would have done so but for the reason that the large steelworks in the East were overcrowded with orders and failed to fulfill their contract with him on time. He even offered them a bonus for the steel over and above the contract price which he had agreed to pay for it, but even by that means he was unable to secure the steel. So the work on the dredges was delayed, and he was fined, I think, $100 a day, amounting in all to some $9,000. The Government did not lose a cent, but they deducted that amount out of his contract price and falled to pay it to him. I am informed that he is absolutely innocent and did everything to secure the steel, and, as I have said, offered an advanced price to secure it. He was helpless, and this amount is justly due him.

The Committee on Claims considered the bill carefully, and the chairman of the committee and, I think, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna], who had it especially assigned to him, will confirm what I say.

Mr. HUGHES. Everyone who has had anything to do with this matter, including Lieut. Col. Charles L. Potter, of the Corps of Engineers, seems to have reported against it.

Mr. LANE. Their hands were tied by the Government specifications. It is merely a matter of relief that is now sought.

Mr. HUGHES. It practically comes down to the same question in connection with most contracts of this nature. The contracts for the building of battleships now on the ways all contain clauses calling for their construction within a certain period on pain of the imposition of a penalty of a certain amount for failure to comply with the terms of the contract. If we pass this bill, we might as well serve notice on all contractors that that particular provision in such contracts does not mean anything, so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. LANE. I think there are exceptions to that.

Mr. HUGHES. There may be exceptions, but this does not seem to be one of them.

Mr. LANE. I think it does, and I will tell the Senator why. If the man had been able to procure his material, if it had been something like a strike or a storm which had prevented him from procuring it, and he had not used diligence to secure it, it would be a different matter, for then he would have been guilty of neg-lect; but owing to circumstances which neither he nor anyone else could control he was unable to secure the material and complete the contract. As soon as he was able to secure the material, with diligence he proceeded with his work and finished it. If the dredges had not been built as soon as possible, and if they had not been operated ever since, for a number of years now, the case might be different. There is no attempt here to secure a dollar that does not legitimately belong to the man. Those are the facts as I believe them to be.

Mr. HUGHES. There is here an attempt to secure money that does not belong to the claimant. He contracted to deliver the dredges within a certain time. It may very well be that the dredges were of no particular use to the Government when they were finally delivered. Frequently we make contracts of that sort, calling for delivery at a certain time; sometimes the Government when they were delivery at a certain time; sometimes the Government when they are considered delivery as the contracts of the ernment pays a bonus for quick delivery, and if a man delivers the article more quickly than the Government thought he could the Government pays him a bonus; the Government suffers that penalty; but whenever a man falls down on a contract with the Government he comes to Congress pleading for relief. This is as glaring a case of that kind as could be presented, because the failure of this contractor was not due to an act of God or of the public enemy or anything of that kind.

Mr. LANE. Well, it was due to a public enemy, for it was due to the Steel Trust. [Laughter.] They had a contract with him, I am informed, to deliver these goods so that he might fulfill his contract, but they failed to do so. However, he did finish his contract: the dredges were built and have been useful and the Government suffered no loss. By the way, the Steel Trust made $333,000,000 last year over and above all expenses.

Mr. HUGHES. Then let the Steel Trust make good the loss to him.

Mr. LANE. He can not get at them; they are greater than the Government.

Mr. HUGHES. Such people would not be able to get at the Government, either, if Members of the House and of the Senate would do their duty. There is no reason why we should allow this man to put his hands into the Treasury to recoup himself for something that the Steel Trust did. If the facts are as the Senator says, that the man has a claim because the Steel Trust contracted to deliver this material to him, but failed to deliver it in time, and therefore caused him to forfeit this money to the Government of the United States, he has a perfect case against the Steel Trust, but not as easy a case to collect as against the United States Government, for he will have to do a little more than get up an ex parte statement and have the gentleman who represents him crack a joke or two. He will have to go on and prove his case. So far as I am concerned, I do not see why he should not prove his case against the Steel Trust and get this money, rather than to ask us to pay it out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

Mr. HUGHES. I will ask the Senator to wait a moment. I desire to call the Senator's attention to another fact here, namely, that Charles L. Potter, lieutenant colonel of the Engineer Corps, reports that this man is not entitled to the money at all. He says, that if he is to be paid any money whatever, under no circumstances should he be paid more than $4,926, for that is the greatest amount that can be attributed to the delay in the receipt of the material. I should like to have somebody who stands sponsor for this bill explain that.

Mr. LANE. The Government put its hands into his pocketsit is quite the reverse of what the Senator assumes the case to be—and fines him for failure to fulfill his contract on time, when the man himself had offered a bonus to the Steel Trust for the early delivery of the goods. He was perfectly helpless. What could he do? The power of the Steel Trust in the matter of the delivery of the supplies at that time was being exercised, as Senators will bear me out, affecting all parts of the United States. So they delayed the fulfillment of his contract, and that was as much a matter of great consequence and importance to him as an act of God; and it is about as difficult to try to collect anything from them as from any agency that can be conceived of. What chance would he have in a contest with the Steel Trust? The Government suffered not a penny's loss; it received the goods; the dredges are in good working order, and they have worked for years.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—
Mr. LANE. Of course, Col. Potter is the representative of the Government, and it was his duty to report against the claim if possible. He could not take all the facts into consideration, for the dredges were to be delivered on a certain date, and it was impossible for the contractor to do so.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator what this statement in the report I am about to read means? It says

The damages were withheld from the Portland Iron Works by the Government, and in turn withheld from Mr. Supple by the Portland Iron Works.

Apparently the Portland Iron Works got its facts to enable them not only to make the Government make good for what this man Supple had to pay—

Mr. LANE. Mr. Supple was the subcontractor and took over the entire contract. Mr. Supple can not collect because he is not a party before the Government. He lost it, but the Portland Iron Works has not received it; and they passed the loss off to the man who did the work.

Mr. JONES. In other words, it is to make the Government a sort of a guarantor clear down the line.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Supple is the man who did the work and suffered the loss unjustly. The Government has simply retained money out of his contract price. He has to be represented here by the Portland Iron Works. He can not put in a bill himself. It is a just claim; and we have passed some others that are not half so equitable.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like the Senator to point out one claim that has been passed here to-night or that was passed last week, when we went over the calendar, that is as glaring a case as this.

Mr. LANE. I am judging not so much by the last night or to-night, but by the general practice here.

Mr. HUGHES. Those are the things that make the general practice. A Senator who is as popular as the Senator from Oregon and of whom everybody is as fond as they are of the Senator from Oregon, makes a plea for a proposition of this kind, and every one good naturedly withdraws his objection, and thus we smooth the way for these claimants to reach the

Mr. LANE. No; Mr. President, I ask the Senator not to say If there are any claims as equitable as this one, I will stand for them. If you can show me that this claim is not equitable, if you can show me it is unjust, then I will withdraw the claim. But I think the Government ought to do equity and justice. Certainly it has no right to do injustice. This man did the very best he could; as soon as he was able he complied with his contract; and he did a good job.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LANE. I yield.
Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey why not let the Senate settle it? We have heard the arguments in this case pro and con.

Mr. HUGHES. I should be delighted to have that done. am perfectly willing to submit it to a vote of the Senate on the debate that has already been had, as to whether or not the Senate thinks this claim should be paid. I do not like to stand here as one man and put my judgment against what may be the judgment of every other Senator in the Chamber.

Mr. LANE. Then I should like to have the bill submitted to the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will ask that the bill go over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. LANE. I am very sorry that the Senator sees fit to object.

ELIZABETH MARSH WATKINS.

The bill (S. 3507) for the relief of Elizabeth Marsh Watkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, to compensate Elizabeth Marsh Watkins, of Wakpala, S. Dak., for permanent bodily injuries sustained by her on the 9th day of November, 1908, at the Government Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., while engaged in work required of here under the direction of persons in charge of said school.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I have not had a chance to look at that bill. I will inquire if any Senator here knows anything about it?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] reported the bill. I am not familiar with it except in a general way. As he is not here to-night, I will suggest that the bill go over.

Mr. HUGHES. This appears to be a personal injury case, and so I will not object.

Mr. BRYAN. My recollection is that it was the case of a school-teacher in an Indian school who was pretty severely injured. Perhaps the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling] can explain it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think this is a very just claim. It is a case where an Indian girl attending the Government Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and being employed in the laundry in connection with the working of a mangle, without any fault on her part, was very seriously injured. Her hand was crushed, and, as a result of the injury, the hand and wrist are now entirely paralyzed, and her health is permanently injured. She is in fact a nervous wreck from this accident, which happened back in 1908. There was no safety device attached to the mangle at that time, but since then the mangle has been improved by safety devices, so that such an accident can not happen again.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BLAIR.

The bill (S. 6595) to reimburse William Blair for losses and damages sustained by him by the negligent dipping of his cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$37,674.53" and insert "$18,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,000, to reimburse William Blair, of Hominy, county of Osage, State of Oklahoma, for losses and damages sustained by him through the negligence of one of the veterinary inspectors employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, in dipping cattle belonging to said Blair, in Osage County, Okla., on or about the 27th, 28th, and 29th of August, 1915, said sum to be paid to said Blair in full for all losses and damages so sustained by him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, from reading a part of the long report in this case, it seems to me that the conclusion arrived at by the inspector in charge is correct, that there is no just claim against the Government. I quote from the report, as follows:

The number of steers shown in the first item was arrived at as follows: Blair held 2,394 head of cattle at time of dipping. Seven months, or seven-twelfths of a year, has elapsed since dipping, consequently seven-twelfths of the average annual loss on 2,394 head was deducted from the total loss of 87—

That is, 87 were lost by death in dipping.

That is, 57 were tost by death in hipping.

The four calves were deducted from this. The manner of reaching a conclusion on the various other items listed is self-evident.

On account of an additional year's growth the steers will probably be worth about $7 per head more. This item would amount to $6,559, and such amount would probably be sufficient to cover depreciation in value of cattle shipped after the dipping, taxes, cost of conducting the case, and other extra costs and charges.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the observations of the inspector in charge that this man might possibly at the end of the year make $7 a head on the cattle is a mere theoretical guess; it does not amount to anything at all and ought not to be in here. The real thing was that this man's cattle were put through an arsenical dip of double the strength that it ought to have been; that it took the hair off the animals, and, according to the testimony here, killed some 70 of them—I believe 59 head of 3 and 4 year old steers and 4 calves. The claimant was compelled to winter 940 of these steers at a cost of $7 a head, besides not being able to market them and turn his money over. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have not had an opportunity to read the entire report, but the conclusion is that the man was not out a dollar.

Mr. OWEN. The man lost thirty-odd thousand dollars. The inspector goes there, cuts the bill in half, and then puts in some observations at the close which have not any real relevancy. It does not make any difference whether he would say that the next year the claimant made over $7 a head by carrying these steers over. The fact was this man could not market his cattle; he could not get his property turned over; and the evidence is overwhelming as to his loss. I do not think it is fair to cut this man down to $18,000, for it is the duty of the Government to pay him for taking his cattle by force and putting them through an arsenical dip that destroyed their value. That is all there is in it.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose under the law that was required. Mr. OWEN. I know that the law required it; but in this case it was done by an inspector who did not understand his business, who used an arsenical dip of double the strength it ought to have been, which took the hair off these animals and caused great loss to this man.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that in the report. Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the com Mr. President, the committee cut down the claim considerably.

Mr. OWEN. They cut it in half.
Mr. BRYAN. I was going to explain to the Senator some of the items we cut out. There is a claim, as rendered by the claimant, of $9,000 for interest, and of $1,200 for taxes. Of course, the Government never does pay claims of that character.

Mr. OWEN. No; that was just his loss; that is all. Mr. BRYAN. That is all. That is $10,000 reduction.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to the consideration of the

Mr. OWEN. It was cut down very severely. That is all I want to point out.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wanted to call attention to the report.

Mr. BRYAN. The remainder of the cut was because, owing to the uncertain condition the claim was in as to the cost of carrying the cattle over, the committee accepted the statement of the representative of the Government that it was $7 per head instead of $11.25, which would make the claim $18,000, considering all those items, instead of $38,000 or $37,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2749) for the relief of George L. Thomas was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I hope that bill will not go over. By reference to the report, I find it says:

There is no evidence in the auditor's office tending to show that Postmaster Thomas did not exercise proper supervision over the affairs of his office. I believe, therefore, that the bill is meritorious, and I recommend that it be given favorable consideration.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

This is a bill in which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pennose] is interested, and the auditor has recommended an amendment to it, which I will submit if the objection is withdrawn, as it ought to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, Mr. President.

The bill (S. 141) for the relief of William E. Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 7447) to amend section 269 of chapter 231 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" was announced as

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.
Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, has the Senator any special objection to that bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Why, Mr. President, here is a bill which the Secretary of the Treasury has said is an honest claim; Why, Mr. President, here is a bill which the auditor for the Post Office Department says it is an honest claim, and has submitted an amendment, and yet objection has been made to it

Mr. CHILITON. The Senator did not understand that I objected?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, some Senator did.

Mr. CHILTON. I certainly did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if we are going to pass bills, as we have passed them to-night, which have not been so certified as being honest claims, and object to a bill of this kind, recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the auditor, I confess that we had better discontinue legislation for the night.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he desires personally to have passed the bill to which he refers?

Mr. GALLINGER. Very much, indeed, Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, I will withdraw my djection. I came down to the Senate last night, the coldest objection. night of the year, to take part in the discussion of the Porto Rican bill. I reached here in time to hear the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] suggest the absence of a quorum, in consequence of which we transacted no business whatever; and I did not believe that it was to be expected at that time, particularly in view of the notice that had been given by my colleague [Mr. Shafroth]. If the Senator from New Hampshire desires this bill passed on his own account, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I very much desire to have the bill passed, GEORGE L. THOMAS.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2749) for the relief of George L. Thomas. It authorizes the Postmaster General to credit the accounts of George L. Thomas, postmaster at New Bethlehem, Pa., in the sum of $5,711.93, and to certify the said credit to the Auditor for the Post Office Department, being the ing the purpose of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire submits an amendment to the bill, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 10 it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and insert a period following the word "Thomas," and in lines 10, 11, and 12 it is proposed to strike out the words "and the sum of $5,711.93 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of this claim."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANTING OF NEW TRIALS BECAUSE OF TECHNICAL ERRORS.

The bill (S. 7447) to amend section 269 of chapter 231 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 269 of chapter 231 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," so as to read as follows:

Sec. 269. All of the said courts shall have power to grant new trials, in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law. On the hearing of any appeal, certiorari, wit of error, or motion for a new trial, in any case, civil or criminal, the court shall give judgment after an examination of the entire record before the court, without regard to technical errors or defects or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the courts now have not this power, as I understand. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is familiar with the law which this bill seeks to amend.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that this bill seeks to modify the usual rule by allowing the court, upon the whole record, to do what it thinks is justice, regardless of technicalities. understand that it is in aid of the modern idea that we should get rid of some of the technicalities of our court practice. I did not give due consideration to the bill. I heard it discussed, and engaged somewhat in the discussion before the Judiciary Committee; but the committee, after full consideration, thought it was a wise reform, and it has been recommended for passage. I understand that this bill has been voted on and recommended by the American Bar Association.

Mr. HUGHES. I will ask that the bill go over. I want to look into it.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION TO SEAMEN, LANDSMEN, AND MARINES. The bill (S. 7720) to amend section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to additional compensation to seamen, landsmen, and marines, was announced as next in order.

Let that go over.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, this is one of a series, as the Senator will perceive, of little, short bills recommended by the department to remedy some omissions in the law that are very important. They are all short; and I hope, in view of the conditions now, that objection will not be made to them. They have been fully considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and each one of them, I think, is a meritorious bill. I sincerely hope that no one will object.

In connection with the first bill I should like to have placed in the Record a letter from the Secretary of the Navy explain-

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has said that it is recommended by the department. I see nothing in the report to show it.

Mr. CHILTON. If the Senator will just hear the letter read, he will see that the first bill is recommended; and it is so clearly just that I can not think the Senator will object.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I have not objected.

Mr. CHILTON. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator had objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, December 15, 1916.

Washington, December 15, 1916.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: It is frequently necessary, especially in tropical waters, on account of the intense heat in the firerons requiring unusually short and frequent shifts, that marines on board ship be detailed for duty in the firerooms to assist the regular firemen.

The performance of such duty by marines is not, of course, within the ordinary routine of their duties. It is, however, military duty of a character which may be required of all persons in the military service of the United States in cases of necessity. On account of the unusual nature of the work in the cases of marines and the additional wear and tear of clothing which it involves, it would appear that they should receive extra compensation therefor.

Section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows:

"Every seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman who performs the Section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows:

"Every seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman who performs the duty of a fireman or coal heaver on board of any vessel of war shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman, a compensation at the rate of 33 cents a day for the time he is employed as fireman or coal heaver."

Section 1765 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

"No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation."

While additional compensation is provided for seamen and landsmen who are detailed from their regular duties to the firerooms, such additional compensation is not "authorized by law" in the cases of marines so detailed.

In view of the foregoing, I have the honor to recommend that section 1570 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

Every seaman, landsman, or marine who performs the duty of a fireman on board any vessel of war shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as seaman, landsman, or marine, a compensation at the rate of 33 cents a day for the time he is employed as fireman.

By the act of August 29, 1916, the rating of ordinary seaman was

By the act of August 29, 1916, the rating of ordinary seaman was changed to seaman, second class, and at the present time there are no coal heavers. The recommended provision has therefore been drawn accordingly.
Sincerely, yours,

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, United States Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I did not ask that that letter be read. I only asked that it might go into the RECORD in explanation of the bill. If there be no objection, I do not care to have it read. The bill simply proposes to pay the men for extra work, for which they are clearly entitled to payment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the Senator from West Virginia was endeavoring to obtain a recall of the objection by having the letter read.

Mr. CHILTON. I was acting under a misapprehension. There was no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I do not desire to object, of course; but I simply wish to state that this is a startling example of the generosity of the United States Government to its servants. They are allowed the munificent sum of 33 cents a day if they go down to the stokehold and act as firemen. The Secretary of the Navy then hastily explains, for fear somebody may think he is wasting the public money, that it will probably cost them something like 33 cents a day for additional wear and tear on their uniforms while they are performing that service.

I regret very much that the Secretary of the Navy did not see fit to recommend some proper compensation for these men when they are called upon to perform this most arduous work. They have a pleasant practice in the Navy, they tell me, when they line up the boys, of asking for volunteers to study engi-That usually appeals to the unsophisticated youths from the central portion of the country, and a number of them usually volunteer. They drop the men down into the stoke-hold and start them passing coal as a beginning in the study of the science of engineering. They have a great deal of difficulty, I suppose, in getting stokers and coal passers. If they are going to draft marines, seamen, and landsmen for that work, I think it is ridiculous to suggest that the compensation that the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, give them shall be limited to 33 cents a day; and I am going to offer an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, can pay as much as 75 cents a day for that work.

Mr. CHILTON. How is that? I did not hear the Senator's

amendment

Mr. HUGHES. I am increasing the pay of these men to 75 cents a day, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, this is for extra work, and this is what was asked for. Of course, I agree largely with what the Senator has said, that these men ought to be compensated when they are called upon to do this extra work; but this is what they have asked for.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have never been in one of those rooms but once in my life, and then I wondered how a human being could possibly live and perform that work. The heat was almost intolerable. This is on the battleships, I believe: is it?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir; it is on any of the ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does seem to me that this small sum ought to be granted freely. I want to say, however, in this connection that it is unfortunate that seven bills-I believe that is the number—have been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs without a word of explanation concerning them. except to say that in the judgment of the committee they should be enacted into law.

Mr. CHILTON. I will say to the Senator that there are explanations which I will give just as fully as in the case of Mr. GALLINGER. I think some Senator ought to be prepared to give a little explanation about this bill.

Mr. CHILTON. There will be no trouble in getting the explanation. I have it here before me.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like a word of explanation about this particular bill. What does the fireman receive per day for his duty as a stoker?

Mr. CHILTON. I do not know what his pay is. I can not tell the Senator. I am not posted on that.

Mr. FALL. I think that is very essential. You provide simply that a seaman, landsman, or marine shall receive 33 cents in addition to his daily compensation when he is serving as a fireman. Now, I shall support the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] unless I have some further information on the subject. I do not think it is at all a fair proposition to send out through the country and attempt to secure recruits for the Marine Corps, for instance, upon the theory that they are to serve as marines or to secure sailors upon our battleships upon the theory that they are to be sailors or to secure landsmen upon the theory that they are to perform certain duties and then place upon them such duties as these

Mr. CHILTON. I agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. FALL. And the idea of offering them simply 33 cents a day in addition to their usual pay is ridiculous.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the present compensation under section 1517.

Mr. FALL. The firement Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir. The firemen's compensation?

Mr. HUGHES. If the Senator will permit me— Mr. THOMAS. Pardon me a moment. The section of the Revised Statutes that this bill proposes to amend is very short, and reads as follows:

Every seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman who performs the duty of a fireman or coal heaver on board of any vessel of war shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman, a compensation at the rate of 33 cents a day for the time he is employed as fireman or coal heaver.

Mr. FALL. This simply adds marines to the seamen, ordinary seamen, and landsmen?

Mr. THOMAS. That is right.

Mr. FALL. That, however, does not meet my objection; nor does it meet the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey. should like to know what the fireman's pay is.

Mr. HUGHES. I was about to tell the Senator. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] informs me that this 33 cents additional brings the pay of the landsman up to the pay of the fireman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not want to be quoted as authority for that. That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. FALL. If a man seeks and secures employment as a fireman at a certain wage, knows what he is going to do, and knows what he is "up against," to use a slang expression, that is all

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.
Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not object to the consideration of that bill. Please allow me to make a short explanation of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let me first read from the report. The Postmaster General says:

In view of the fact that the money and stamps in question were not afforded the protection required by the postal regulations, the loss was considered as having resulted from negligence on the part of the stamp clerk, and following the established practice of this department the claim was disallowed under date of April 19, 1916.

Mr. President, we have refused to pass a bill in which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling] was interested that was a stronger claim than this, and I do not think we ought to pass this one

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator will allow just a brief explanation-

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. Prat was a stamp clerk in the New Orleans post office, and he used the safes and other things that were given to him to use there. He followed the custom of his The office was broken open, and some eight hundred and odd dollars' worth of stamps were stolen. The man who stole those stamps was convicted and sent to the penitentiary shortly thereafter. Three hundred and odd dollars' worth of these stamps were found in his possession and were collected back from him. There was not the slightest suspicion that Mr. Prat had done anything wrong. He followed exactly the custom of his predecessor in caring for the stamps. At the same time that these stamps were taken there were upward of $1,000 worth of stamped envelopes and about $150 worth of some other Government property there which were not taken.

Now, Mr. Prat had to pay this money to the post-office authorities—something like $445. He is a poor man, and that money certainly ought to be refunded to him. He was not guilty of laches of any kind. I hope the Senator will not object to it. The House gave him this appropriation, and the Post Office Committee agree unanimously on it.

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE NATION.

The bill (S. 7758) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Cherokee Nation against the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine the claim of the Cherokee Nation against the United States for interest, in addition to all other interests heretofore allowed and paid, alleged to be owing from the United States to the Cherokee Nation on the funds arising from the Judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905 (40 C. Cis. R., p. 252), in favor of the Cherokee Nation. PRICES FOR SUPPLIES.

The bill (S. 7859) authorizing the Postmaster General to increase prices for certain supplies to conform to abnormal market conditions, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I was in hopes that the Senator from Ala-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. He is not here. However, I remember very well the discussion in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on this subject. The bill was thoroughly discussed, and it seemed to be for the interests of the Government that a bill be formulated and presented, which is this bill, and that it should be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I know all about the bill. I want to say to the Senator that outside of the postal-card paper purchased by the Post Office Department the balance of the paper furnished the Government Printing Office and for the printing of everything for the Government is under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing. Every contractor has made the same request of that committee, to be relieved of the contracts that they held with the Government. To show the Senator what this means

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no objection to the bill going over.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that Congress would not have one contractor relieved unless all were relieved. In this connection I might say that the Attorney General has held that not only will the contractors be compelled to supply the amount of paper provided for in the award but they will have to furnish all that the Government Printing Office may require until March 1 of this year. There is more in the bill than appears upon its face, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. BRYAN. I simply want to say that it was realized by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that we are confronted with a pretty serious situation. The idea that controlled the committee in making the report was that some of these contractors can forfeit their contracts and pay the bond required of them and make money out of it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. BRYAN. And some of them have already defaulted.

Mr. SMOOT. Then they will not have a very good chance to bid for Government paper hereafter, because if they do default

Mr. BRYAN. I want to say in justice to the committee that the prices proposed will not allow the contractors any profit on the prices they will hereafter get.

Mr. SMOOT. The same paper that was bought for the year ending March 1, 1917, if purchased now would cost the Government over a million dollars more money.

Mr. BRYAN. We realize that the bill is important and ought to be thoroughly considered. I hope some day early we will take it up during the morning hour when there will be more Senators here and dispose of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to have the Senate vote upon it, but before doing that I want Senators to understand what the bill means if it passes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

REFUND OF TAXES.

The bill (S. 5669) for the relief of sundry railroad companies was announced as next in order.
Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust the bill may be considered. It is a very important measure. It proposes a refund of taxes illegally collected under the excise law. There is a letter of indorsement by Secretary McAdoo. They are small in individual amounts, and the total involved is $25,000. It seems to me it is a manifest injustice, and it ought to be remedied.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw my objection.
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being considered, but it will take considerable time to discuss it. I reported from the Committee on Claims in the last Congress some bills of the same character with an adverse report, and it is hardly fair to those claimants to have this bill considered without a full discussion, and that we can not have at this late hour of the night.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Does the Senator object?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

RESERVATION OF VILLA SITES, ETC.

The bill (S. 45) to amend sections 2380 and 2381, Revised Statutes of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, before the words public lands," to insert "unreserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "bidder," to insert "on such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may direct."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. What change does this bill make in the section of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. SMOOT. It authorizes the President of the United States to reserve from the unreserved public lands town sites on the shores of harbors, at the junction of rivers, and villa sites. There are many places in the United States where there are just little patches of ground, and the bill authorizes the President to reserve them wherever he in his judgment may think proper.

Mr. JONES. Apparently he has authority to do something of the kind under the section of the Revised Statutes.

is proposed to be added?

Mr. SMOOT. I think there are added here villa sites, summer homes, hotels, sanitariums. He had authority before to have the town sites on the shores of harbors or at the junction of rivers, important portages, or any natural or prospective centers of population reserved, and now this gives the authority to reserve villa sites, summer homes, hotels, sanitarium, health, recreation, or pleasure resorts.

Mr. JONES. I did not suppose there were any places of that sort not reserved.

Mr. SMOOT. There are.
Mr. FALL. The town sites would be of what extent?
Mr. SMOOT. There is no limit, of course. I will say

Mr. FALL. If there is not any limit provided here, under the general town-site law of the United States there is no limit in the number of acres the Secretary of the Interior may reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator in this bill there is

Mr. FALL. He can reserve 640 acres or 640,000 acres.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think there would be a town site of 640,000 acres.

Mr. FALL. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

S. L. BURGARD.

The bill (H. R. 1609) for the relief of S. L. Burgard was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill a question.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Burgard was a mechanic employed by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted the bill states what the injuries were worth, but I wish to ask the Senator this question: Has Mr. Burgard been paid by the Government anything by way of compensation since the accident happened?

Mr. LANE. Not that I know of.

Mr. SMOOT. Was this bill referred to the department to Mr. LANE. Yes; it was.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the report to show. Mr. LANE. The report is all too brief.

Mr. GALLINGER. "The amount carried in the bill is one ear's pay less the amount which he received while off duty.' So it appears in the report that he received some compensation. Mr. SMOOT. Just enough to make up his year's salary

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to S. L. Burgard the sum of $559.36 as compensation for injuries received by the said S. L. Burgard while in the employment of the United States Government at the Rock Island Arsenal, in the State of Illinois, on

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT SILL MILITARY RESERVE.

The bill (S. 5367) to reimburse the Women's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church in America, for buildings on the Fort Sill Military Reserve, Okla., was announced as next in

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported adersely from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN FLORIDA.

The bill (S. 6654) to validate a patent to certain lands here-tofore issued to the State of Florida; to allow the said State to claim certain other lands, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMAS. There is quite a long preamble in the bill. I suggest that the bill be read and that the preamble be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not strike it out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be read, omitting the preamble.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 4, line 7, to strike out "September 27" and insert "August 28," and, in line 11, to strike out "fifth" and insert "fourth," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That as to all lands on Key Biscayne, in townships 54 and 55 south, range 42 east, in the State of Florida, which were embraced in the military and lighthouse reservations established on said Key Biscayne by Executive orders dated August 28, 1847, and February 10, 1897, but now abandoned and relinquished; that certain patent, dated May 4, 1885, and designated as Tampa patent No. 35, bc, and the same is hereby, declared valid and effective to vest the title to the said lands in the State of Florida and any such persons as have, since the issuance of said patent, acquired the right, title, and interest of the State of Florida in and to the said lands or any portion thereof.

SEC. 2. That as to all lands embraced in said abandoned reservations, which were properly to be classified as swamp and overflowed lands, in accordance with the terms of the swamp and overflowed lands, in accordance with the terms of the swamp and overflowed land act of 1850, the State of Florida shall now have the right to claim said lands as swamp and overflowed lands and to have the same allowed, set apart, and patented as swamp and overflowed lands to the same extent as if the said lighthouse and millitary reservations had never existed.

SEC. 3. That the descriptions contained in said patent and in the selection list aforesaid shall be construed as having reference to the plat of lands of Key Biscayne in townships 54 and 55 south, range 42 east, prepared in December, 1870, by J. E. Hilgarde, without regard to the acreage named in said patent or said selection list: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as affecting the title to any lands on Key Biscayne embraced within the Mary Anne Davis claim.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading,

read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to have the amendments to the preamble agreed to and to have the preamble printed as amended, and then let the preamble be stricken out. The object in having the preamble printed in the Record is because the preamble is the argument for the bill.

The amendment was in the first line of the first whereas in the preamble to strike out "September 27" and insert "August 28"; in the third whereas to strike out "5" and insert "4" after "May"; and in the fourth whereas to strike out "10" after February" and insert "11," so as to make the preamble read :

read:
Whereas by Executive order dated August 28, 1847, "the lands belonging to the United States on Key Biscayne, Fla.", were reserved for the use of lighthouses; and
Whereas the United States then owned on said key, among other lands, the following in township 54 south, range 42 east, to wit: All fractional section 32; all fractional section 33; west half of the southeast quarter of section 21; the southwest quarter of section 28; the east half of the northwest quarter of section 28; and the following in township 55 south, range 42 east, to wit: All of fractional sections 4 and 5, except so much thereof as is embraced in the Mary Anne Davis claim; and
Whereas in pursuance of due selection by the State of Florida as shown by selection list No. 16, Tampa series, reported January 31, 1884, the United States allowed the claim of the State of Florida to said lands, among others, as swamp and overflowed lands, as shown by approved list No. 30, dated March 3, 1885, and in pursuance thereof by patent, Tampa series No. 35, dated May 4, 1885, did convey the said lands to the State of Florida; and
Whereas by Executive order dated February 11, 1897, the lands belonging to the United States on said Key Biscayne were reserved for military purposes; and longing to the United States on said Key Biscayne were reserved for military purposes; and Whereas it appears that the State of Florida has sold and conveyed all of said lands and that the said lands have been acquired by innocent purchasers, who paid large and valuable considerations therefor and had no knowledge of the said reservations; and Whereas by action of the Secretary of War, dated April 25, 1916, and of the Secretary of Commerce, dated May 8, 1916, and by virtue of the necessary Executive order, dated April 28, 1916, the said reservations have been relinquished and abandoned; and Whereas there has been some confusion as to the surveys and plats of said Key Biscayne; and whereas a certain plat, prepared in December, 1870, by J. E. Hilgrade, appears to have been made under instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 8, 1848, "An act respecting certain surveys in the State of Florida"; and

Whereas by reason of all the foregoing certain doubts have arisen as to the force and effect of the aforesaid patent from the United States to the State of Florida; and

Whereas, as shown by selection list No. 81, reported July 22, 1896, the State of Florida did select and claim as swamp and overflowed land certain other lands on Key Biscayne which were a part of the reservation aforesaid, including the following lands, to wit: All of sections 6, 8, and 9, township 55 south, range 42 east, not included in the Mary Anne Davis grant; and

Meresa by deed dated October 19, 1895, the State of Florida did undertake to convey to one Waters S. Davis all of the lands last above described; and Whereas all the right, title, and interest of said Davis in and to said lands appears to have been acquired by innocent purchasers, who paid large and valuable considerations therefor and had no actual knowledge of the reservations aforesaid or of the State's defective title to the said lands; and

Whereas it appears that the State of Florida, in selling and conveying the lands last described, acted without knowledge on the part of its officials of the reservations aforesaid and in reliance upon the decision of the Supreme Court that the swamp and overflowed land act of 1850, operated as a grant in præsenti, as announced in the case of Martin v. Marks (7 Otto, p. 345): Now, therefore,

The amendments to the preamble were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 7796) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the Great Northern Railway Co. certain lands in the State of Montana for division terminal yards and other railway purposes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers] is not present. I wanted to ask him a question about this bill.

I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

LAND IN IOWA.

The bill (S. 1174) granting to the State of Iowa all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land within the meander lines, as originally surveyed, of the lakes within said State was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice in a letter to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], the chairman of the Committee on the Judi-United States Senate, the Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, in reporting on the bill concludes as follows:

In view of the fact that the lands which lie below the meander line of the patented tracts may have passed into the hands of other persons, it is doubtful whether Congress should, by enacting this bill, cast a possible cloud upon the title of such owners.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object to the passage of the bill if the Senator will permit an interruption, but it would seem to be an entirely useless subject of legislation. The title to the land covered by these waters is in the State by virtue of its sovereignty, and has been ever since the State was admitted to the Union.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator will see the bill provides that wherever the land has been granted to and held by an in-dividual under a grant from the State, then such title as the State acquires by virtue of the bill is transferred to the grantee.

So that is covered.

Mr. THOMAS. That has been the law ever since the decision in Pollard's Lessee against Hagan.

Mr. HUGHES. How about the case of a man who has a satisfactory title which he did not derive from the State? Somebody may have a title to these lands by undisturbed possession.

Mr. CHILTON. He could not have a title from anybody but the State or the Government. It must be one or the other.

Mr. HUGHES. He may have the right to title by uninterrupted possession. He may have a title by prescription.

Mr. CHILTON. If he would have a title one way or the other, this title must originate with the Government or with the State.

Mr. HUGHES. The State at present may have no claim, if nobody disturbed him in his possession.

Mr. CHILTON. The bill has been thoroughly considered, I will say to the Senator, and that point has been covered.

Mr. HUGHES. How has it been covered?

Mr. CHILTON. Everybody has been protected.

Mr. HUGHES. In what way?

Mr. CHILTON. By the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the State government asking for some right from the General Government?

Mr. CHILTON.

Mr. CHILTON. No; that is provided for. In the original survey of the lands, they meandered one way on the lakes to some little point of low land. There they did not actually meander. The State is getting up a system of drainage and wants to drain this land for the health of the community. The wants to draft this faint for the heath of the community. The title is secured to the grantees, and they can go on with the reclamation work and drainage. There is a full report made.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not time to read it. I notice—
Mr. CHILTON. The Committee on the Judiciary considered the matter very fully. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to get some information. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill just for the sake of objecting to it, but what does the Senator say about this language by the Secretary of the Interior?

In view of the fact that the lands which lie below the meander line of the patented tracts may have passed into the hands of other persons, it is doubtful whether Congress should by enacting this bill, cast a possible cloud upon the title of such owners.

Mr. CHILTON. The Secretary of the Interior is putting the case, and I do not see how it is possible for the land to have passed from the State into the hands of others. However, we inserted an amendment to cover that.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator knows that somebody may have a perfectly valid title that is passed by prescription or by uninterrupted occupation.

Mr. CHILTON. But the land is under water.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps they are using it for some purpose. Mr. CHILTON. How could they use it? How could anybody have any land of that kind? I have a distinct recollection that a provision was put in the bill to meet the suggestion of the

Mr. HUGHES. They may be using this land for purposes of real estate operation. The Senator knows they may be just selling the land, and not using it.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not imagine how it could be possible that anybody could have any title to that land.

Mr. HUGHES. Many real estate transactions are carried on in which the land transferred is entirely covered by water. Of course, that does not generally become known to the purchaser until subsequently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that Senators address the Chair. The Chair is unable to determine whether objection has been made.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not object.

I understand there is no objection. Mr. CHILTON.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1174) granting to the State of Iowa all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land within the meander lines, as originally surveyed, of the lakes with said State, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States hereby grants to the State of Iowa, as fully as though patents were issued therefor, all its right, title, and interest in and to all of the lands included within the meander lines of the original surveys of the meandered lakes within the State of Iowa: Provided, That if any of said lands have been heretofore patented or conveyed by said State, this grant shall inure to the benefit of the grantees of the said State, and to their assigns or legal representatives: Provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner abridge, divest, or impair any valid right, title, or interest of any person in and to any portion or part of said lands: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held to lessen, abridge, or impair the right of the United States to regulate commerce among the States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5362) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain lands in the State of Utah to Cyrena E. Young was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.
The bill (S. 6376) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, was announced as next in

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 6380) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, was announced as next in

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.
The bill (S. 6382) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I will inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma what his objection is to those bills?

Mr. OWEN. The reports thereon from the Interior Department are unfavorable.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that they are not adverse. The bills were drawn by the department and are for the purpose of consolidating lands in forest reserves in the State of Utah, so that they can be more easily administered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON. Why were they not all embraced in one 11? Why was it necessary to have so many bills of the same title?

Mr. SMOOT. For the reason that the descriptions are all different, both as to the land to which the Government gives title and the land which the Government receives in the of exchange. And a report must be made upon each individual transfer; that is, for each 160 acres, or whatever number of acres one person there had. It was necessary that a special report should be made, and also a report upon the lands to be exchanged. The reports were made at different times, and the bills were introduced at different times. That is how there happened to be a number of separate bills on the subject. Of course, if the Senator wants to object, that is his privilege.

Mr. OWEN. The reason I objected was because the reports of the Interior Department were unsatisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. To what particular bill does the Senator refer? Mr. OWEN. Take, for instance, Calendar No. 864, Senate bill 5362

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what I am talking about. That bill has gone over.

Mr. OWEN. That is one of them. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to a feature of this matter

Mr. SMOOT. That is another matter entirely. I will say to the Senator that the bill to which he has objected is for the relief of a poor woman who has been living on a certain tract of land-a widow-two of whose children have died of diphtheria, and she is trying to make a home at a place where the temperature is about 44° below zero during four months in the year. It is absolutely impossible for her to raise $200. As was heretofore stated, this land was in an Indian reservation and the Secretary of the Interior reports that the department thinks that she ought to pay $200 to the Indian fund; but after reading the testimony that was given the Public Lands Committee thought otherwise.

Mr. OWEN. I see I was mistaken in regard to Calendar No.

864, and I withdraw my objection to that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am concerned, the Senator can, if he so desires, object to all these bills.

CYRENA E. YOUNG.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the objection is withdrawn to Calendar No. 864, being Senate bill 5362.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5362) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to certain lands in the State of Utah to Cyrena E. Young. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause patent to issue to Cyrena E. Young for the following-described lands in the State of Utah: The south half of the southeast quarter, section 22, west half of the northeast quarter, section 27, township 3 south, range 4 west, Uintah special meridian.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question or two. There appear to be on the calendar, introduced by the Senator from Utah, following Order of Business 864, 8 or 10 bills of the same character.

Mr. SMOOT. No; they are not of the same character as the Young bill, but relate to entirely different matters. Mrs. Young is a widow, and that bill proposes to give her title to land on which she has been living now for a number of years, and I think she ought to have title to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection.
Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to object to that bill, but the Senator made a statement as to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. It appears from the report that the Secretary of the Interior said in his letter to the chairman of the committee:

Therefore if this bill were enacted into law, it would be necessary to add a clause thereto appropriating out of the public funds $200 for the benefit of said Indians.

That is not added to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not added to the bill, and I will tell the Senator why it has not been added.

Mr. JONES. We will have to add it, will we not, to correct it? Mr. SMOOT. I think not and the committee thought not.

These lands were thrown open to entry—
Mr. JONES. The Senator does not need to go into that. the committee thought that it would not be necessary to add the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, I shall not ask the Senator to take the time to recite the facts in the

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, as I informed the committee, that I would not ask that the bill be passed upon favorably by the committee, unless every member of the committee was perfectly satisfied that the bill should be so acted upon. I wrote to Mrs. Young and stated that I doubted whether the bill would pass under the conditions. I told her that I would be perfectly willing to undertake to secure 10 men to pay her the full amount and give it to the Government; but the committee said "No; we will give her the title." The Indians have made thousands and thousands of dollars out of city lots upon the reservation because of just such people as Mrs. Young trying to make homes there, thus making the land valuable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREST LANDS IN CACHE NATIONAL PARK, UTAH.

The Secretary proceeded to state Order of Business No. 865, being Senate bill, 6376.

Mr. OWEN. Calendar No. 866 is next.

Mr. SMOOT. Calendar No. 865 follows the Young bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether this and other bills that follow-8 or 10 of them-are not of the same character?

Mr. SMOOT. They are of exactly the same character.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator whether the lands conveyed by the individuals to the Government are not farming lands?

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them are farming lands and some of them are grazing lands. They are within a forest reservation, but they are not all the same character of lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Are they occupied at the present time by individuals?

Mr. SMOOT. They are occupied; they are not left open. Most of them are grazing lands within a forest reserve.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Are they homesteads?

Mr. SMOOT. They are homesteads within a forest reserve. The department wants to consolidate those lands so as not to have a section here and a section there in private ownership within the forest reserve. The titles to the land were secured before the forest reserve was established. After being located, they were covered into a reserve, and now the department wants to consolidate those lands for administrative purposes. In each case they have sent out an expert to examine the character of the land that the Government is to transfer and the character of land that is to be received in exchange. They have decided the question themselves and made a report on each bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, I should like to ask the Senator this question: There is a general law, is there not, that permits homestead entries upon any lands within forest reserves?

Mr. SMOOT. There is now; yes.
Mr. SHAFROTH. So I understand. When these lands are made a part of the forest reserve again, will they still be open to homestead entry?

Mr. SMOOT. I think they will be, Mr. President.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection if that is the case;
but if they are to be included in the forest reserve and held forever as a part of a reserve, I am opposed to these various

Mr. SMOOT. As I have said, the lands are all in a forest reserve now

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that; but private lands inside of forest reservations can still be occupied and can be made to pay taxes to the State.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true; but in these cases both private lands and public lands are in a forest reserve, and the lands that are being transferred are of the same character as the lands that the entryman already occupies. So, if they are farm lands, they are open to entry under the present law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not know the object of the department. If it is for the purpose of holding perpetually these lands in forest reserves, I object to the bills.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the object of these bills is to bring about a consolidation of the lands for the better administration of the forest reserve.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the lands are still open to occupation, why the Government needs to go to the trouble of making an exchange?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, none of these lands will ever be homesteaded.

Mr. FALL. Were these lands State selections?
Mr. SMOOT. They were State selections before the forest reserve was put over them, and the old sections in different parts of the reserve got into the hands of individuals.

Lands that they had acquired from the State? Mr. FALL. Mr. SMOOT. Yes; lands they had acquired from the State. Mr. FALL. And afterwards a forest reserve was extended around them?

Mr. SMOOT. A forest reserve was extended around them.

Mr. FALL. And now the Forestry Bureau wants to get the individuals out?

Yes; and to consolidate the forest lands. TH. I want to ask the Senator another ques-Mr. SHAFROTH. tion, which is whether the people who own the lands are eager for this transfer to the National Government?

Mr. SMOOT. They also want the transfer. Mr. SHAFROTH. Have they themselves made the request of the department?

Mr. SMOOT. They have made the request of the depart-

Mr. OWEN. Have they selected other lands that they are to take?

Mr. SMOOT. They have selected other lands, and the lands have been passed upon by not only the Interior Department but by the Agricultural Department as well.

Mr. OWEN. The reason why I objected was because I saw in the report a letter from the Secretary of the Interior dated

July 6, 1916, in which he uses these words:

I am without information regarding the necessity for the proposed legislation.

That struck me as being rather peculiar.

Mr. JONES. I want to call attention to the fact that the lands are under the Agricultural Department, and the Secretary of Agriculture has recommended the passage of the bills.

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary of Agriculture has recommended the bills. Mr. C. F. Marvin, Acting Secretary of Agriculture,

As written, this bill would enable the department to have such scattered private holdings which are valuable for timber production or watershed protection added to the national forest. It would be distinctly in the interest of economy and efficiency and would make for the best and most productive use of all the lands involved. This department believes therefore that the interests of the Government are amply protected and recommends that the bill be favorably considered by your committee.

The department wants the bills passed, but, so far as I am personally concerned, if there is any objection to them let them

Mr. OWEN. I noticed a letter, signed by Franklin K. Lane,

I am without information regarding the necessity for this proposed legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. He is the Secretary of the Interior, but the forest lands are not under his department but under the Department of Agriculture. Below in the same report appears a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. C. F. Marvin, under whose jurisdiction the forest lands

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah what lands do these private parties get in exchange? Do they get lands within the forest reserve or outside?

Mr. SMOOT. They get lands within the forest reserve of similar character and similar value, passed upon by the department itself.

Mr. JONES. I do not see the advantage of exchanging some lands in a forest reserve for some other lands within the same reserve

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had homesteaded in the middle of a forest reserve he would see it, particularly if the rangers were opposed to him. He would find out that it would be very much better for him if he could get a piece of land near the edge of the forest, so that he could get to it without passing through the forest.

Mr. JONES. Are all the lands that the private parties are to get on the borders of the reserve?

Mr. SMOOT. That I can not say. I know they will be located where they will be more easily accessible than they are now, or else the people there would not ask that they be trans-

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bills. I am as interested in them as is the Senator, because there are some conditions that affect us all out there that are affected by legislation of this character, for instance, as to the title that individuals get. The Government, of course, pays no taxes on its lands. These lands now are taxable, and the county in which they are situated gets a revenue, whereas if the title is surrendered it cuts the county and the State out from any revenue unless the lands which are taken in lieu of the lands surrendered become taxable. I merely suggest that. I am not objecting to the Senator's bills.

It was the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, of course, to report on bills of this kind, as well as the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, if the lands to be selected in lieu of the forest lands were outside of a forest reservation. Mr. SMOOT. There is a provise in the bill reading:

That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become parts of the Cache National Forest and subject to all laws and regula-tions applicable thereto.

Mr. FALL. That is inside the forest reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. They are to become a part of the Cache National Forest

Mr. FALL. And the lands to be exchanged for these lands are on the outside of the forest reserve?

Mr. OWEN. The report does not describe them.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not describe what?

Mr. OWEN. Describe the lands that are taken as lieu lands Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; the lands are described and the section and quarter section are given.

Mr. OWEN. In the report?
Mr. SMOOT. In the bill itself.
Mr. OWEN. I am not talking about the bill itself; I am talking about the report.

Mr. SMOOT. Here is the report. Take, for instance, the report on Senate bill 6380. I quote from a letter of C. F. Marvin, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, under date of July 10, 1916, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, July 10, 1916.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, July 10, 1916.

Hon. Henry L. Myers,

Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

Dear Senator Myers: Receipt is acknowledged of a copy of the bill S. 6380, "to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah," with the request that your committee be sent such suggestions as this department may offer.

The bill proposes that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized, in his discretion, to accept title to certain described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor.

Within the boundaries of the Cache and other national forests there are many tracts of potential forest land in private ownership. These were acquired under the timber and-stone act and other public-land laws prior to the time the national forests were established. Because they are unsuited for home-bullding purposes they are unoccupied. In their unprotected state they frequently present a fire menace to the timber on the lands of the Government, with which they intermingle. Quite frequently, also, they are located at strategic points and because of their situation embarrass the Government officers in the administration of certain logical administrative units. Wherever they occur there is no doubt that the consolidation of the Government holdings would work toward economy and simplicity of administration of those units.

The remainder of his letter I have already read to the Senator. Mr. OWEN. It does not describe at all the lands the individuals take as lieu lands.

Mr. SMOOT. They are described in the bill.
Mr. OWEN. To describe it in the bill is one thing and to describe it in the departmental report would be quite a differ-

Mr. SMOOT. The land is ascertained by reference to the bill itself, and the bill was referred to the department. This is the report they make asking that the bill be passed. The description of the land transferred and the description of the land the Government is to receive are given in the bill itself.

Mr. OWEN. They do not seem to know anything about it. Mr. SMOOT. Let all the bills go over. I do not care whether they are passed or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bills will go over.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Utah does not object,

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not object.

Mr. HUGHES. Does any other Senator object?

Mr. OWEN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and Calendar Nos. 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, and 873 will be passed over.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 326) submitted by Mr. Cummins fixing a time for consideration by the Senate of the message delivered by the President of the United States before the Senate on January 22, 1917, and limiting discussion thereon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed

FREDERICK TESSMAN.

The bill (S. 6943) for the relief of Frederick Tessman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the homestead entry of Frederick Tessman on farm unit "J," the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 8, town-ship 20 north, range 2 west, Sun River reclamation project, Montana, under act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be validated, subject to future compliance with law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS.

The bill (S. 1063) to amend an act approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "Alaska," to insert "including surplus lands in any Indian reservation heretofore or hereafter opened to settlement and entry," so as to read:

entry," so as to read:

That the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," approved June 22, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Section 1. That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, including surplus lands in any Indian reservation heretofore or hereafter opened to settlement and entry, which have been withdrawn or classified as coal lands, or are valuable for coal, shall be subject to appropriate entry, selection, or sale under any of the nonmineral public-land laws applicable to the particular lands desired, if not containing coal, and to withdrawal under the act approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, whenever such entry or withdrawal shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the coal in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided, That those who have initiated nonmineral claims under the public-land laws in good faith prior to the passage of this act on lands withdrawn or classified as coal lands may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which said claims were initiated, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 14, after the word "disposal," to insert "Provided, That the proceeds arising from the disposal of such coal deposits in surplus Indian lands opened to settlement and entry shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and shall be applied in the same manner as the proceeds arising from the disposition of the surface lands therein," so as to read:

manner as the proceeds arising from the disposition of the surface lands therein," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the entry or selection is made, and of this act, the entryman or selector shall be entitled to a patent or to a certification, as the law may require, to the land entered or selected, which patent or certificate shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal in the lands so patented or certified, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal-land laws in force at the time of such disposal: Provided, That the proceeds arising from the disposal of such coal deposits in surplus Indian lands opened to settlement and entry shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and shall be applied in the same manner as the proceeds arising from the disposition of the surface lands therein. Any person qualified to acquire coal deposits or the right to mine and remove the coal under the laws of the United States shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands selected, entered, or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal thereon upon the consent of the surface entryman or owner, or upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the coal therefrom, and mine and remove the coal, upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or u

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask some Senator who is informed on the subject, whether or not this bill protects the Government as to the coal under the lands?

Mr. SMOOT. The bill itself provides adequate protection. Mr. THOMAS. It is so well protected that no citizen will ever be able to get hold of it.

Mr. CHILTON. Does it provide for what is known as way leave?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes. Those rights of way are provided, think, in the law to which this bill is an amendment; but, as a matter of fact, the coal is there to stay forever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to inquire whether there is

Mr. SHAFROTH. Tanded in this bill?
Mr. THOMAS. There is not.
Mr. SHAFROTH. None whatever? It does provide, however, for patenting the land; does it not?

Mr. THOMAS. It merely provides that agricultural entries can be made upon the coal lands, upon the surface.

Mr. SMOOT. Simply the agricultural patents are granted. The right to the coal is reserved.

Mr. THOMAS. Such is the law, and this does not extend it. Mr. SHAFROTH. There is nothing in this bill as to what disposition shall be made of the coal lands?

Mr. THOMAS. I think not. The Senator can read the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator can rest assured that there is no provision by which the United States Government will get anything out of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I inquire of some Senator who is familiar with this legislation if this loosens or tightens the hold of the Government?

Mr. FALL. I can say to the Senator that it simply provides for effectual control over all the coal in these lands by the Government, and it simply contemplates some future legislation by which the coal can be taken out of the ground. It says that this coal is subject to disposal by the Government under the laws "in force at the time of such disposal," and they do not propose to enact any such laws until they get ready, which means a lease law

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FALL. Yes; I object, Mr. President.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NELS A. LEVANG.

The bill (S. 5438) for the relief of Nels A. Levang was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 2, line 12, to strike out the word "entries" and insert "entry," and, on the same page, line 14, after the word "described," to insert "subject to the provisions, reservations, conditions, and limitations of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 583)," so as to make the bill read.

to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Montana be, and is hereby, authorized to select, in lieu of lands embraced in homestead entry, Glasgow, Mont., No. 09668, made by Nels A. Levang on April 5, 1910, for the north half northeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter southeast quarter northeast quarter northeast quarter southeast quarter, north, ange 56 east, Montana principal meridian, and erroneously allowed prior to the passage of this act, other unappropriated surveyed nonmineral public lands of equal area situated within the limits of said State, in the manner provided in the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L., p. 796), entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes": Provided, That such selection of lands by said State shall be a waiver of its right to the lands embraced in said homestead entry, and that upon consummation of the exchange herein authorized a patent shall issue to the said Nels A. Levang for the land herein described, subject to the provisions, reservations, conditions, and limitations of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 583).

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no particular objection to these special bills, but it seems to me that some one who is responsible for them should be able to explain them to Senators without the necessity, in these hurrled moments, of Senators looking through the reports and attempting to familiarize themselves with them. If the Senator who introduced the bill were present, or if the Senator who made the report could give us any information about it, I certainly would not be inclined to offer any objection; but these are private bills for the relief of some persons, and unless there is some necessity shown for their passage I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN MONTANA AND WYOMING.

The bill (S. 7894) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational pur-poses in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the State of Montana, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FALL. This is another of those special bills. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that this is an entirely different bill.

Mr. FALL. Very well. If the Senator can make any explanation of the bill, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. WARREN. In the first place, the bill only applies to the two States of Montana and Wyoming. A general bill passed the House and came over here with the sanction of the Inthe riouse and came over here with the sanction of the in-terior Department reserving the mineral under the lands, but allowing the title to agricultural lands to be perfected, as has been done in other cases. The House general bill was reported out of the committee with very many amendments which were not acceptable to the department. Now, the States of Montana and Wyoming are differently situated as to mining interests; and as to these lands that they seek to liberate they are willing to accept the Government's proposition that they take them as agricultural lands, and that if underlaid with mineral the Government shall retain the mineral.

I will say to the Senator that they are lands that have been selected as lieu lands, some of them two or three years ago. Some of them have been rented and contracts have been made to sell, and the money received as a first payment. all lieu lands, selected in place of original school lands which came to the State, but which the Government had taken in forest reserves and other reserves. This bill is to liberate in Wyoming and Montana those school lands long ago selected, but not yet clear listed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator whether the exchange which is to be made contemplates anything but the exchange of the fee-simple title?

Mr. WARREN. Not that I know of; certainly not in the portion of it relating to Wyoming.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This bill is too long to read. It is nothing.

but a straight exchange of absolute patent?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. While it speaks of the manner of exchanging, as a matter of fact most of the land has been already exchanged, but has not been clear-listed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Does this bill refer to Wyoming, too? It seems to refer only to Montana.

Mr. WARREN. It starts as a Montana bill, and was amended by the committee by incorporating Wyoming in it.

Mr. CHILTON. Will Wyoming behave herself? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. I can not promise that.

Mr. FALL. What is the provision with reference to the disposition of minerals? Mr. WARREN. The Government retains the ownership of the minerals under the land.

Mr. CHILTON. I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask who objected?
Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir; I did.
Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.
Mr. CHILTON subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago I objected to Order of Business 879 until I could look into some matters. I have looked it over, and I desire to withdraw my objection; but I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that section 4 of the bill seems to me to need a correction in one word. On line 7 it should read "by" instead of "but," I think, if the Senator will look at it.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator has the matter in hand there, will he please offer the amendment?

Mr. CHILTON. I will ask the Senator to see if I am not right. It reads: "this act or shall, but constitutional legislative enactment," It means "by constitutional legislative enactment," I assume. I move that the bill be amended in section 4, line 7, by striking out the word "but" and inserting the word to read:

That the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stat L., p. 796), entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes," are hereby declared applicable to all grants of school lands heretofore made by Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming, and all selections heretofore made by either of said States and approved under said grants and in accordance with said act of February 28, 1891, if otherwise lawful, are hereby ratified and confirmed; that all pending and unapproved selections heretofore made under said grants by either of said States and in accordance with said act, if found otherwise valid, and for lands which are nonmineral in character and which were subject to selection at the time the applications were filed, and which have not, prior to date of approval, been withdrawn under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 847), may be approved under the provisions of said act of February 28, 1891.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 6, line 5, after the word "State," to insert "of Montana or Wyoming," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act shall be applicable only where the State of Montana or Wyoming is now authorized by law to make the selections, relinquishments, or exchanges permitted by this act or shall, but constitutional legislative enactment, authorize such selections, relinquishments, or exchanges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated, and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the States of Montana and Wyoming."

SAN FRANCISCO MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 7713) granting to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, a right of way for a storm-water relief sewer through a portion of the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It gives the consent of the United States to the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., to locate, construct, and maintain a 40-inch concrete storm-water relief sewer over and across Lobos Creek and thence through a portion of the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation to a point where it will again reach Lobos Creek and discharge therein, upon such location and plans as the Secretary of War may approve and under such conditions and regulations as he may prescribe, and expressly reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 890) for the relief of the legal representatives of John T. Brickwood, deceased, Edward Gaynor, Theodore Gebler, Lee W. Mix, Arthur L. Peck, Thomas D. Casanega, Joseph de Lusignan, and Joseph H. Berger was announced as next in

Mr. HUGHES. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1685) for the relief of John R. Monteith was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, there is apparently no Senator here who can give us any information with reference to that bill,

Mr. CHILTON. Let it go over, then.
Mr. HUGHES. I will ask that it go over if nobody can tell us anything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

WINFIELD S. SOLOMON.

The bill (S. 7433) for the relief of Winfield S. Solomon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Winfield S. Solomon, late of Troop D, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States of a member of said troop and regiment on the 26th States as a member of said troop and regiment on the 26th day of September, 1865, and that no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

and passed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the next bill on the calendar. Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, what action was taken on Order of Business 883, Senate bill 7433?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it was considered as having been read the third time and passed.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed. I was looking up another bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed. Without objection, that will be done. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to have some explanation of this bill. There is no explanation of it.

Mr. WARREN. Is that the bill in regard to Winfield S, Solomon?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. This was the case of a boy who enlisted before he was old enough, and his commander told him he could not remain in the Army, and sent him home; but in the meantime his enlistment had been had, and he was entered up as a I will say that from the record it is a very clean case, deserter.

Mr. HUGHES. This was the case of a boy under age?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes.
Mr. HUGHES. I will withdraw my objection to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. KIDD.

The bill (S. 7598) for the relief of John H. Kidd was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John H. Kidd, who was a private, unassigned, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said regiment March 18, 1864, and that no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, unless there is some explanation of this bill, I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that John H. Kidd is some 81 years old. He was held as a deserter. He has filed affidavits to show that he never did desert; that his name must have been mixed with that of some other Kidd. There were a great many of them on the list.

I want to say to the Senator that I know Mr. Kidd very well. He is about ready to die. He pleaded with me that that stain should be taken off his record, because it was untrue; that he was not a deserter. He did not serve the 90 days, so he is not entitled to a pension, and I expect the old man to die in a very little while. It is nothing more than right that the man should have removed an unjust charge of desertion appearing on the records against him, and have his record clear before he dies.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I may add a word, I think the Senator from New Jersey knows that generally speaking I am not in favor of these bills to remove the disabilities that arise from the records of deserters. In this instance, however, it appears that Mr. Kidd enlisted during the latter part of the war in an Indiana regiment, I think some time early in 1865. He was mustered in shortly afterwards, and went to the front, and was discharged before he had served 90 days. There are affidavits on file from reputable men, one of them being, as I now recall, at one time the adjutant general of the State of Utah, and at the time the commander of the Grand Army Post at Salt Lake City, who testified by way of affidavit that he at that time saw the certificate of discharge of the soldier.

Mr. SMOOT. He has an honorable discharge. I have seen

Mr. THOMAS. This man says that he actually saw it.

I have seen it, also.

Mr. THOMAS. It appears on the records of the War Department that John H. Kidd deserted from his command at Pittsburgh, Pa., and did not afterward answer the roll call. Kidd swears, and members of his family swear, that he never was in Pittsburgh or in Pennsylvania, but that he went from his mustering camp to the front, and back again. He has not served long enough to obtain a pension, although he had applied for a pension at one time and was refused. What he wants is that his record be cleared of this charge, if possible, before he dies.

The case appealed to me very strongly as the member of the subcommittee having it in charge, in view of the facts which I have outlined, and I therefore had no hesitation in recommending it to the Committee on Military Affairs, which in turn reported it favorably for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill'

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I look with more or less suspicion on all these attempts, 50 or more years after the occurrence of the event, to remove charges of desertion.

Mr. THOMAS. So do I.

Mr. HUGHES. And I have noticed recently that a number of these bills have been reported from the Military Affairs Committee and passed through this body. I have no sympathy, in the first place, for the man who deserted, and still less for the man who comes to the legislature years and years afterwards and attempts to have the stain of desertion removed. If this man was a deserter, the stain should remain upon his name.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree fully with the Senator; and I do not think the Senator will discover upon this calendar a single bill of this kind, other than this, that I reported out.

Mr. HUGHES. So far as I am concerned, I will withdraw my objection to the consideration of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALEB T. HOLLAND.

The bill (S. 7601) for the relief of Caleb T. Holland was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, unless there is an explanation of this bill, I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I trust that the Senator will on consideration withdraw the objection.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that I have not objected. I have simply asked for an explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make the explanation.

This bill is to correct the military record of the person named in the bill, Mr. Holland. He went into the service in 1862 and served until 1865. The correction that is required was caused by his leaving the service in 1864, after complying with all of the requirements of the service from 1862 to 1864. In 1864 he left the service at New Albany, Ind., as I remember the point, because of differences with the captain of the company.

It is undisputed in the evidence submitted to the committee that the captain of the company was somewhat dissipated in character and was guilty of acts of cruelty against a member of the company. The soldier at that time was between 16 and 17 years of age, a mere boy. He was influenced by his fear of the superior officer next to him, the captain. He left the service in 1864, and within a very short time reenlisted in another company, a regiment in Indianapolis, Ind., and remained in the service until the close of the war in 1865. He was placed on the pension roll under the general laws of the country and remained there for a number of years. Under the act of 1912 he applied for the increase provided by that act; and the Pension Department, in looking up his service record, found this lapse in his record from the time in 1864, which, as I remember, was some 30 or 40 days from the time he left his original company to the time he reenlisted in the company at Indianapolis. That record was not supplied, and because of that deficiency in the record, when the department looked it up, he was dropped from the rolls entirely.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, is it true that this man deserted more than once?

RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate stands in recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Thereupon (at 11 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1917, at 11 o'clock a, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, February 6, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

May the light of Thy countenance, O God, our Father, illumine our minds and the warmth of Thy love kindle a sacred flame in our hearts; that the work of the hour may proceed wisely, conscientiously, patriotically; that the interests of our Republic may be safeguarded. And grant that the hearts of all our people may beat as one in a firm resolve to protect our sacred rights, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, not only for our sake but for the sake of all humanity. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure just what the Journal shows in reference to the Indians' claim bill (S. 135) which was passed yesterday under suspension of the rules. The Record was passed yesterday under suspension of the rules. The RECORD will apparently show that the House passed the Senate bill. What the House did, as I understand, was to pass the Senate bill with the amendment which struck out all after the enacting clause; that the House, in effect, passed the amendment, and that the Journal should show that.

The SPEAKER. Here is what actually happened: The Clerk read the House amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk read the House amendment and did not read the Senate bill. The Clerk at the desk read the House amendment and did not read the Senate desk read the House amendment and the not read the Schatch bill, to my certain knowledge.

Mr. MANN. That is all right, just so the Journal shows that the motion was to pass the Senate bill with an amendment and that the amendment was agreed to and that the bill as amended

Mr. GARNER. May I suggest to the gentleman that the Journal ought to show, it occurs to me, that the amendment of the House was agreed to and that the bill as amended was

Mr. MANN. That is just what I said.

The SPEAKER. The Journal ought to show that the rules were suspended and that the bill, with the House amendment agreed to, passed.

Mr. MANN. That the House amendment was agreed to and that the bill as amended passed.

The SPEAKER. Yes. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected in that regard, and the RECORD, too, as far as that is concerned.

There was no objection.

PENSION BILL.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. SHERWOOD. To ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 18181, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18181) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, and Mr. LANGLEY.

THE LATE EDWIN CHICK BURLEIGH.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a resolution setting apart a day for services on the late Senator Burleigh.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Edwin Chick Bunleigh, a Senator from the State of Maine.

Ordered, That Sunday, the 25th day of February, at 12 o'clock meridian, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public service of Hon. Edwin Chick Bunleigh, late a Senator from the State of Maine.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table four Senate bills to change the names of four separate steamships and to consider the same in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. It does not require that; they are House Calendar bills.

Mr. GORDON. But I desire to substitute the Senate bills, which are identical in terms.

The SPEAKER. We will get at that in a minute.

Mr. GORDON. I ask unanimous consent, then, to take up and consider the bills.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 7779) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Frank H. Peavey to William A. Reiss.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Reiss Steamship Co., of Duluth, Minn., to change the name of the steamer Frank H. Peavey, official No. 121187, to the William A. Reiss.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 7780) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Frank T. Heffelfinger to Clemens A. Reiss.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Reiss Steamship Co., of Duluth, Minn., to change the name of the steamer Frank T. Heffelfinger, official No. 121205, to the Clemens A. Reiss.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 7781) to authorize the change of name of the steamer George W. Peavey to Richard J. Relss.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Relss Steamship Co., of Duluth, Minn., to change the name of the steamer George W. Peavey, official No. 86582, to the Richard J. Reiss.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 7782) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Fred-erick B. Wells to Otto M. Reiss.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Reiss Steamship Co., of Duluth, Minn., to change the name of the steamer Frederick B. Wells, official No. 121208, to the Otto M. Reiss.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House bills of similar tenor will lie on the table.

There was no objection.
On the motion of Mr. Gordon, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bills (H. R. 19901, 19902, 19903, 19904) were passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk. announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 7963. An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

RELIEF OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed the bill H. R. 11150 with amendments. I desire to call that bill up and ask unanimous consent that the amendments be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11150) for the relief of mail contractors.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.
On motion of Mr. Stephens of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

bill (H. R. 20660) authorizing the Postmaster General to increase prices for certain supplies to conform to abnormal market conditions.

tions.

Be it enacted, etc., That in view of the present high prices, due to the European war, of all paper and other materials entering into the production of envelopes, postal cards, and money-order blanks, which prices are greatly in excess of those prevailing at the time the existing four-year contracts of the Post Office Department for these supplies were made, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, from time to time to fix prices at or in excess of the contract price or prices to be paid the contractors for postal-card paper, blanks, blank books, engraved and printed matter for the money-order service, official and registry envelopes, stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and envelopes for the departments of the Government: Provided, however, That any increase or increases over the contract prices herein authorized shall not be sufficient to give to the contractor or contractors any net profit on the supplies furnished by them under the pending contracts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Specker, I

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Firz-GERALD] reserves the right to object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like some statement in regard

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is introduced for the purpose of obtaining a continuous supply of stamped envelopes, money-order blanks, postal cards, and material of that sort used in the department. There are some 28 or 30 contracts that have been made for four years for this material at fixed prices, about two years of time having elapsed. The cost of the material entering into these envelopes, postal cards, and so on, and the cost of labor and ink has gone up to such an extent that the contractors are not able to comply with the contract and furnish the material. They are about all to fail. Some of them have failed. Now, in the stamped-envelope contract they are asking for an increase of $80,000 in the item in order to comply with the contract without loss to the contrac-This bill provides that the Postmaster General may grant an increase of from 25 to 50 per cent over the contract prices on account of the abnormal prices existing as to this material now and because of the fact that all of the contracts are about to be abandoned, which would leave the Government without paper and envelopes, and so forth. If $80,000 is granted on that particular item, it will operate as a saving of $500,000 to the Government of the United States, because if that contract is not complied with and not completed, and you have to go onto the open market at present prices, the price the Government will have to pay will be from 100 to 200 per cent more than the contract price, and the loss to the Government upon that item will be about $500,000.

This bill provides that the contractors shall have no profits. It is a bill to enable them to carry out their contracts in the interest of the Government. To sum the matter up briefly, if this bill is passed it is going to cost the Government about $500,000 more than it would have cost if there had been no trouble about the contracts. If the bill is not passed and these contracts are all canceled or abandoned we are going to be without these supplies and be forced upon the open market to purchase them at an advance of 100 to 200 per cent, and the loss to the Government will be something more than $2,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Have these contractors given bonds to carry out their contracts?

Mr. MOON. They have given bonds to carry out their contracts, but they are going to fail to carry out their contracts, and we will have recourse upon the contractor and upon the bondsmen and may be recouped for some part of that, but in the meantime we are going to be without the material, and we will be obliged to go upon the market to obtain it at such prices that it will cost more to the Government if we have to go on the open market now for this material than the Government could get out of the contractors and their securities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the bill provide that in granting this excess price over the contract the total pay shall not exceed the actual cost of production?

Mr. MOON. It provides that there shall be no profit whatever to the contractors. It is just a measure to enable them to carry out the contract, which they can not now carry out on account of the rise in this material. If the Clerk has a copy of that report, I would be glad if it could be read at the Clerk's desk, because it gives a very clear explanation of the situation.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose these raw materials had fallen off 50 per cent, would the contractors have made a reduction?

Mr. MOON. I have no idea that they would. This is not primarily for the benefit of the contractor. It is for the benefit of the Government. If those contracts are all thrown out, of course we will have recourse upon the bondsmen. But there are only a few people engaged in this class of business, and you will be without the material for your postal cards and envelopes and

Mr. CANNON. Are the bondsmen solvent?

Mr. MOON. You will have to throw all these contractors into bankruptcy before you can have payment by the bondsmen.

Mr. CANNON. Are the bondsmen solvent?

Mr. MOON. I presume so; I assume they are solvent and they will respond to the full amount of the contract price. Yet if the contracts are canceled and we are forced on the open market to purchase at a raise of 200 per cent, it can be readily seen that the loss to the Government would be very much more than if we did not cancel them.

Mr. CANNON. What would be the measure of damages in a suit against the bondsmen?

Mr. MOON. They are required to furnish so much material at so much money. The measure of damages certainly would not exceed the amount provided, which in the aggregate under the contracts is about $2,180,000. But if forced upon the million dollars.

open market the Government will probably have to pay about $4,000,000 for this material.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this policy be adopted regarding this Post Office contract, what excuse will we have for not adopting the same policy with respect to shipbuilders and the armor-plate manufacturers and the people supplying rations for the Army and the Navy, and, in fact, every contract made by the Government, where there has been an increase in the cost of material and the contractor can not make a profit out of it?

Mr. MOON. That is probably true, and this bill provides that the contractor shall have no profit. It will be between 25 and 50 per cent increase, but the question is, Is it better, leaving out of consideration altogether the interest of the contractor and of the security, to let these contracts be canceled and the Government be forced upon the open market, where it will have to pay 200 per cent more than the original contract price, or advance the price from 25 to 50 per cent? In the one case, if we pass the bill, the Government will lose about $500,000 or $1,000,000, and if you do not pass this bill the Government in the other case will lose about $2,000,000 to $4,000,000.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I wish to state that the Joint Committee on Printing, which is vested with the power and charged with the duty of supervising the contracts for print paper for the Government, has recently received bids on the supply of print paper for the Government, and it has discovered that there is either a combination or a gentlemen's agreement on the part of the contractors, and that the total increase of the bids this year over that of a year ago is about $1,400,000, or about 107 per cent increase.

The Federal Trade Commission is at this time in the midst of an investigation of the cost of the production of print paper of all sorts, and it has so far reported to the Joint Committee on Printing the item of news print, in which the cost of producing news print in the year 1916 is $1.68\frac{1}{2} a hundred, as against $1.63 a hundred in 1915. Now, that is the difference in the cost of production, but the difference in the price made by the manufacturers or jobbers to the consumer, including the Government, is from 200 to 400 per cent over what it was a

The same thing is true with respect to other kinds of paper, and I want to call the gentleman's particular attention to the item of paper for Government money orders. The bid on paper for Government money orders has been rejected by the Joint Committee on Printing, and there has been a readvertisement placed, and it seems to me that if the gentleman from Tennessee will withhold his proposition and let it be pending until the joint committee can get some information from the Federal Trade Commission, which has already, as I understand, delegated to the Department of Justice some authority to take action in these matters, then within a few weeks we are not only going to know more about the cost of print paper and the profit which the jobbers and manufacturers are now making, which are colossal, but we will probably have some steps taken by the Department of Justice which will materially reduce the prices on those products.

I therefore hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withhold his request, so that the matter can be taken up and better results attained than would be had than if we were to take it up for one department at a time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When these contractors make a contract to supply the Government with certain materials for a four-year period, do they not at once make the contracts necessary for their own supplies to cover that contract during the four-year period?

Mr. MOON. I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question of price would not affect them at all.

Mr. MOON. I heard one contractor say that he was standing up to the Government on his contract as well as he could, but he had lost $68,000 already on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is one of the risks the contractor takes, either to make a profit or suffer a loss.

Mr. MOON. Of course, the gentleman from New York need not tell me that a man who makes a contract takes a risk of that sort. Everybody knows that. The question is, notwithstanding the risk and notwithstanding the liability of the contractor and the liability of the surety, whether or not, as a matter of common business sense, it is better now for us to give them an advance of 25 or 50 per cent on their contracts, in order that they may comply with their contracts without profit to themselves, or to force the Government on the open market, where the cost will be 200 per cent more and the loss over a

Mr. BARNHART. Is this proposition to give them an annual increase and for the balance of the contract?

Mr. MOON. Of course, it does not fix 25 per cent or 50 per cent, but it is from 25 to 50, whatever it may be, so that no profit comes to the contractor under the terms of the contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose it would require more than 50 per cent in order to keep the contractor whole?

Mr. MOON. Then this bill would not relieve them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then he has to suffer. It is only the man who requires an increase up to 50 per cent who would be cared for, while the man who requires an increase of 100 per cent would go to the wall.

Mr. MOON. No. The Government, which has the contract, has fixed this figure at 25 to 50 per cent. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, that the report be read. It gives a more lucid explanation of it than I can make. It is a memorandum from the department. The House can see what the situation is from the reading.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The reasons for the passage of the bill are fully set forth in a memorandum furnished by the Post Office Department, as follows:

"The purposes of this bill are to assure a continuous supply of stamped envelopes, postal cards, money-order forms, and departmental envelopes, and also to give needed relief to a number of four-year contractors who are suffering financial loss because of the great increase in the price of paper and other materials, at least some of whom will face bankruptcy unless relief is speedily given.

"There are about 30 contracts affected, all of which were made either before the European war or in the early days of the war, when paper was abnormally low. Since that time it has increased in price from 100 to 200 per cent, and inks and other materials have increased as much or more. Labor cost is also high.

"The stamped-envelope contract contains a provision by which the Postmaster General may require certain grades and designs of envelopes at a price fixed by mutual agreement, but there is no similar clause in any of the other contracts except in that for postal cards, and the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that inasmuch as the paper now being furnished for postal cards is satisfactory no increased price can be given under this clause.

"Inasmuch as it has already been decided to require new grades and designs of stamped envelopes at a price that will relieve the contractor, it is thought no more than fair to give the same relief to all other four-year contractors furnishing supplies manufactured of paper.

"So far as the stamped-envelope contract is concerned, this bill will affect only the contract grades and sizes and not the additional grades and designs that it has already been decided to supply.

"If this bill becomes a law it will not only enable the Post Office Department to insure a continuous supply of envelopes, postal cards, and money-order forms, but at a much lower price than could be obtained in

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] is a very distinguished lawyer. Did I understand him to say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] that the measure of the damages in this case would be any less than the Government was required to pay upon the market?

Mr. MOON. I think the contract provides for a sum equal to the amount of the contract price. If that is true, that would be the limit.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, if the contract so recites—
Mr. MOON. I think that is the provision.
Mr. GORDON. What is the amount of the bond?
Mr. MOON. The amount of the contract price, I presume.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COADY. I object.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object. This is one of the most important things that there is for the conduct of the Post Office Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman does not object, I will. Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any objection made to it.

Mr. BARNHART. Does not the gentleman think it should be withdrawn until we can get a report on these things?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Coady] objected, and that is the end of it.

Mr. COADY. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland withdraws his objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. Mr. MOON.

Mr. MOON. You will be without postal cards and envelopes. Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will go without postal cards.

Mr. MOON. New York does not need anything but pneumatic tubes, anyway.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, H. R. 20632.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For commissions and interests; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of midshipmen whole proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for actual traveling expenses of female nurses; actual expenses of officers while on shore patrol duty; mileage to officers of the Naval Reserve Force traveling under orders of the Secretary of the Navy; hire of launches or other small boats in Asiatic waters; for rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards, including the rental of offices in the District of Columbia; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; expenses of naval defense districts; stationery and recording; religious books; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service; all advertising for the Navy Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Navigation); copying; ferriage; tolls; costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home and abroad, including maintenance of students and attachés; information from abroad and at home, not exceeding $50,000, and the collection and classification thereof; all charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus for ice for the cooling of drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals), telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams, cablegrams, and postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; and other necessary and incidental expenses; Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the appropri

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of calling to the attention of the House an amendment which was discussed last Saturday when this bill was under consideration in the House in general debate. That is in relation to the general matter of commandeering shipyards, suspending the eight-hour law, and other provisions for the purpose of securing the more expeditious delivery of munitions, equipment, materials, and the construction of ships. In order that the House may have full opportunity to consider the amendment which I propose to submit, I ask to have the amendment read at this time. I want to state that I have prepared an additional copy which I wish to submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], the ranking member of the minority of the committee. I have another copy for use upon this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION.

(a) Definition: The word "person" as used in paragraphs (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) next hereafter shall include any individual, trustee, firm, association, company, or corporation. The word "ship" shall include any boat, vessel, and submarine, and any form of aircraft and the parts thereof. The words "war material" shall include arms, armament, ammunition, stores, supplies, and equipment for ships and aeroplanes, and everything required for or in connection with the production thereof. The word "factory" shall include any factory, workshop, engine works, building used for manufacture, assembling, construction, or for any process, and any shipyard or dockyard. The words "United States" shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, (b) In time of war or of national emergency, to be determined by the President by proclamation or Executive order, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, through the Secretary of the Navy, in addition to all other existing provisions of law and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor—

(1) To place an order with any person for such ships or war material as he may require and which are of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such person. Compliance with all such orders shall be obligatory on any person to whom such orders and contracts theretofore placed with such person, except orders and contracts of or for the United States. If any person owning, leasing, or operating any factory equipped for the building or production of ships or war material for the Navy shall refuse or fail to give to the United States such preference in the execution of such an order, or shall refuse to build, supply, furnish, or manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of ships or war material so ordered at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, the President may take immediate possession directions.

(2) To modify or cancel any existing contract for the building, production, or purchase of ships or war material; and if any contractor shall refuse or fail to comply with the contract as so modified, the President may take immediate possession of any factory of such contractor, or any part thereof without taking possession of the factory itself, and may use the same at such times and in such manner as he may consider necessary or expedient, and the occupier and every officer and servant of the occupier of such factory, or part thereof, shall obey his directions.

tractor, or any part thereof without taking possession of the factory itself, and may use the same at such times and in such manner as he may consider necessary or expedient, and the occupier and every officer and servant of the occupier of such factory, or part thereof, shall obey his directions.

(3) To require the owner or occupier of any factory in which ships or war material are built or produced to place at the disposal of the United States the whole or any part of the output of such factory, and to deliver such output or parts thereof in such quantities and at such times as may be specified in the order, at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

(4) To requisition and take over for use or operation by the Government the factory, or any part thereof without taking possession of the factory itself, whether the United States has or has not any contract or agreement with the owner or occupier of such factory.

(5) To waive all provisions of law restricting the hours of labor of persons in the employ of contractors therewith when employed on work in connection with such ships or war material, and to waive all other restrictions and limitations affecting the labor of such persons, with a view to increase output or prevent delay.

(c) No person shall, directly or indirectly, induce any person employed in any factory and engaged on work for the United States to leave his employment or to cease such work.

(d) In time of actual war, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, through the Secretary of the Navy, to draft into the naval service of the United States and to place under naval control any or all of the officers, agents, or employees of any factory equipped for the bailding or production of ships or war material for the Navy, and said officers, agents, and employees of the Naval Establishment of the United States, subject to all the conditions and restrictions imposed by the articles for the government of the Navy. The draft of the officers, agents, and employee

(f) Whenever the United States shall cancel or modify any contract, make use of, assume, occupy, requisition, or take over any factory or part thereof, or any ships or war material, in accordance with the provisions of the foregoing paragraphs (b), (c), (d), it shall make just compensation therefor, and in default of agreement upon the damages, compensation, price, or rental due by reason of any action hereunder, the person to whom the same is due shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover his fair and reasonable damages, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman-

I reserve a point of order upon the amendment. I suggest that this is too important an amendment to pass merely on reading it. I think it ought to go over.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me say to the gentleman that I have had it read now for the information of the House.

Mr. MANN. I was going to make a suggestion to the gentle-

Mr. PADGETT. I expect to offer it at the end of the bill, on

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN. We are in the Committee of the Whole now and can not order it printed, but the gentleman can introduce it as a bill and have it on our desks probably this afternoon, certainly to-morrow morning

Mr. BUTLER. We ought to have it. Mr. MANN. I hope he will introduce it as a bill, so that we will have it in print.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall be very glad to do that. I wanted to make this further statement, that after the debate—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can introduce it and send a hurry order to the Printing Office.

Mr. PADGETT. All right, I will do that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the determination about this?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to offer it as an amendment at the end of the bill, with reference to the expediting of the construction of ships.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman has had it read for information?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if he introduces it in the form of a bill it can be in the document room to-morrow morning, where we can get it and analyze it better than we can from reading it in the Record only.

Mr. MADDEN. Every Member ought to have a copy of it. Mr. PADGETT. I have stated that I will introduce it as a

Mr. GARNER. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous con-sent that copies be printed immediately? Then we can get them within an hour.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will introduce it, the Clerk will send a hurry order to the Printing Office.

Mr. GARNER. They can print it in an hour.

Mr. MANN. Probably we can get it this afternoon.

Mr. MADDEN. And every Member can get a copy. Mr. PADGETT. I want to state for information

Mr. PADGETT. I want to state for information that after the discussion here in the House on Saturday I took a copy of the Record with me containing all the discussion, and I took this matter up with the Attorney General of the United States and with Mr. Warren, one of his assistants, We have been working upon it, and this is the result prepared by the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. What was the basis of the bill? What was it taken from as a basis?

Mr. PADGETT. The bill that was passed at the former session with reference to the Army was one of the bases, and the discussion here on Saturday was another basis.

I mean the basis of the draft. Is this taken Mr. MANN.

from the English act? Mr. PADGETT. I think so, yes; very largely, if that is what the gentleman has reference to.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. There is nothing in this for a draft into the military service of the Government, is there?

Mr. PADGETT. In time of war. It is limited to time of war, and not to an emergency. All other provisions relate to war or a national emergency, but the draft is in time of actual war.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman the question again. I have just seen the proposed amendment. Is there anything in it that will require any American citizen to perform military service or is it only industrial service performed about munition factories?

Mr. PADGETT. Industrial service, not military service.

Mr. BUTLER. Very good. Then we all understand what is before us.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. CARAWAY. I understand from the reading of this proposed amendment that it gives the Secretary of the Navy or the President the right to draft men into the service in the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Into the industrial service.
Mr. CARAWAY. Then they would be identically under the same control as though they had enlisted as regular men in the naval service.

Mr. PADGETT. It authorizes the drafting of men in case of war into the industrial service of the United States for industrial work as a part of the Navy and under naval regulations.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is a part of the regular naval service.

Mr. PADGETT. They would be under the naval regulations and naval control, performing industrial work for the expedition of the construction of ships.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would there be any limitation of that, would not that reach out and bring anybody else into the service that was not in it at the time war broke out?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. CARAWAY. There is no limitation to the reach of it—on condition that war shall be declared the military authorities can draft any man in the United States.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not discriminate between individuals. Mr. CARAWAY. One further question. Has there ever been authority before in this country given to the President of the United States to draft, on a mere contingency that war should break out, every man in the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. There was authority for drafting in previous wars, but just at what stage it was enacted I am not prepared

Mr. CARAWAY. Ever since the war broke out in Europe have they not had the question up whether the English Government should or should not give authority to the military powers to draft everybody in England into the service?

Mr. PADGETT. Draft for the military service has been very much discussed. This is patterned after the English law, but drafting in the military service for industrial work.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman mean that they could draft them into industrial work, and that they would not be under control of the military authorities or would not be subject to military regulations?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand we are operating under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. We are operating under the five-minute rule and the time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask the chairman of the committee if we may not have an immediate print of this proposed amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated several times that I would introduce it as a bill and ask the Clerk to send a rush order to the Printing Office ordering an immediate print. Mr. BURNETT. So that we can all get it for immediate use. Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and I understand it has already gone to the Printing Office.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the gentleman the wisdom of having a meeting of the committee about half past 9 or 10 o'clock to-morrow morning to go thoroughly over this matter, so that we may assist Members of the House in reaching a conclusion on it. I know the chairman has just received it, or he would have had a meeting of the committee before this.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I received it this morning. We began work on it Saturday night after adjournment, and worked on it yesterday and this morning.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If I understood the gentleman in colloquy, it is not now his intention to offer it as an amendment, but as

Mr. PADGETT. I am offering it now for information of the House, with the statement that I expect to offer it as an amendment, after line 19, page 59, of the bill, which is at the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman expect to have the amendment printed as a bill in order that it may be before the House and then offer it as an amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and I understand it has already gone to the Printing Office.

Mr. TOWNER. And the gentleman will afterwards offer it as an amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.
Mr. DILL. Does this bill propose to abolish the volunteer system that has been the custom in this country?
Mr. PADGETT. It does not; it does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. DILL. Is there any provision made that the volunteer system is not to be abolished?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not say anything about the volunteer system.

Mr. DILL. It gives the President authority to draft men into the service under naval control?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the industrial service.

Mr. DILL. I do not see the difference. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. This is a bill authorizing the President to draft men into the industrial service.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. HUDDLESTON. What country has that been done in? Mr. PADGETT. This is copied largely from the English statute.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is it not a fact that this method has only been resorted to by Germany, and that within the last few weeks in the third year of the war, and only in munition works and other industrial service?

Mr. PADGETT. I think much earlier than that, and it has been adopted by England not a great while ago.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Can the gentleman give the date when was adopted by England? Mr. PADGETT. I can not; but I will later on in the discussion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $46,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention of the House to another amendment, which I am submitting now for information, and which I propose to offer after line 19, on page 59, prior to the amendment which I suggested a moment ago.

If the other amendment be adopted, or if any modification of it be adopted, to expedite the work, this appropriation will be needed, and I am calling attention to it now for the purpose of advising the House of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, after line 19, as a separate paragraph, add the following:

"To enable the President to secure the more expeditious delivery of materials, equipment, and munitions and secure the more expeditious construction of ships authorized and for the purchase or construction of such additional torpedo-boat destroyers, submarines, submarine chasers, and such other naval small craft, and ammunition for all of said vessels, as the President may direct, to be expended at the direction and in the discretion of the President, $150,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to be immediately available; and for the payment thereof the President is authorized to issue $150,000,000 of bonds of the United States bearing interest not to exceed 3 per cent per annum maturing in not more than five years."

ManN Man Chairman de Laundesstand this is being

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand this is being offered as an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is being read for the information of the committee

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that it has not been offered as an amendment, but merely for the information of the committee.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is another amendment that ought to be in print.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee can not order it printed.

Mr. MANN. No; but the gentleman can introduce it in the form of a bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well; I will introduce it as a bill now and will send it with a rush order to the printer to have it

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he has any other amendment which is long and of this nature?

Not of this scope; no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On Saturday last some remarks were made and a controversy had here about what the decision of the labor unions would be in case of an emergency. I have received the following letter from President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, which I think ought to be read to the House, which is as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., February 4, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sir: In the discussion in the House of Representatives on the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632), as published in the Congressional Record February 3, 1917, it is plainly evident that some Members have not had in mind at least one provision of existing law regulating and limiting the hours of labor. Section 1 of the eight-hour law of August 1, 1892, reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now or may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor upon any of the public works of the United States or of the said District of Columbia is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day, and it shall be unilawful for any officer of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia, or any such contractor or subcontractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control the services of such laborers or mechanics, to require or permit any such laborer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any calendar day and the stranordinary emergency."

Attention is respectfully called to the last six words of this section.

more than eight hours in any calendar day except in case of extraordinary emergency."

Attention is respectfully called to the last six words of this section. For emphasis I quote as follows: "Except in case of extraordinary emergency." That is, whenever an emergency shall arise the eighthour workday limitation may be waived.

The eight-hour law of June 19, 1912, specifically declares that "nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or modify the act entitled 'An act relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and the District of Columbia."

It is respectfully submitted that under existing law there is ample power vested in the Government to waive the provisions of the eighthour workday both in Government establishment and as it applies to contractors and subcontractors doing work for the Government. Surely a state of war or possibly impending war is an emergency contemplated by the provisions of the eight-hour law of August 1, 1892, and June 19, 1912, and that therefore there is no necessity for the passage of any law repealing the provisions of either of the eight-hour laws which I have mentioned.

Should the Congress pass a law repealing the eight-hour laws, when, I have the provision of the eight-hour laws when, I have the provision of the eight-hour laws when, I have the provision entered to the provision of the eight-hour laws, when, I have the provision of the eight-hour laws, when, I have the provision entered to the eight-hour laws, when, I have the provision entered to the eight-hour laws, when, I have the provision entered to the eight-hour laws, when, I have the provision entered to the eight en mentioned.

Should the Congress pass a law repealing the eight-hour laws, when, as I have shown, there is no necessity for it, after the existing emergency shall have disappeared it will require all the work to be gone over again to secure the enactment of an eight-hour law.

There need be no apprehension entertained by anyone that the working people of the United States will fall in the performance of duty and to give service for the safety, the integrity, and the ideals of our country.

to give service for the safety, the integrey, and country.
Should emergency befall the country the destiny of our Nation is dependent upon the creative labor power of men and women. Should Congress not more properly give consideration to the conservation of the human rather than to uneconomic utilization of that force? These workers constitute the rank and file of our Nation.

I think I am in a position to know as well as any other man in America the feeling and the spirit of America's workers. While I am sure they earnestly hope that war may be averted, yet when the emergency arises they will give a good accounting of themselves.

Respectfully, yours,

Samuel Gompers,

Provident American Federation of Labor.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, pending the reservation, I wish to ask to have read the letter of the Secretary explaining the status with reference to the matter, which letter has just been received.

Mr. MANN. Then, will the gentleman ask to have the matter passed over?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I am perfectly willing to pass it over and return to it. On Saturday night I had a conversation with Dr. Wolcott, chairman of the Aviation Board, and he discussed with me the urgency and the importance of this matter, and then this morning I had a conference with the Secretary of the Navy. The matter has been submitted to the President, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the President all unite in requesting this legislation. The letter will explain. I ask that the letter be read.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman before the letter is read if the purpose of this amendment is to buy the basic patents for aeroplanes? As I understand it, the Wright Bros. control the basic patents?

Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MANN. And the Wright Bros. and the Curtiss people are practically the only people who manufacture aeroplanes in the United States to-day?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. MANN. Is it the intention to have the Government own the whole thing after it is over-to buy out the basic patents?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; to buy out the basic patents

Mr. MANN. And then let aeroplanes be manufactured on payment of a royalty to the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. This does not provide that; that is, it does not provide as to what policy may be adopted, but the letter explains the status in which the Government is placed at the present time with reference to the development of aero-

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington, February 6, 1917.

Washington, February 6, 1917.

My Dear Mr. Paddett: A serious state of affairs exists in securing aircraft for the Army and Navy. The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, in a communication dated February 5 to the President, calls attention to the fact that various companies are threatening all other airplane and seaplane companies with suits for infringement of patents. This letter to the President goes on to say:

"The result is a general demoralization of the entire trade. It is difficult to get orders filled, and in order to protect themselves in case they are forced to pay large license fees the companies have greatly increased the sale prices of their products. As the Army and Navy are the principal purchasers of aircraft in this country, they are paying a large increased cost, brought about by the uncertainty of the situation as regards aeronautic patents.

"The executive committee of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics has had the matter up under consideration, and finds that the situation is such that immediate action is necessary if the Government and the aircraft industry are to be protected and the art developed rapidly in order to meet the demands that will be made for aircraft in the immediate future.

"It appears that there are certain alleged 'basic' patents or possibly a single patent for aircraft that need to be considered in the executive situation, and it is the unanimous opinion of the executive committee that such basic patent or patents should be acquired by the Government, both for the development of national defense and also for civil purposes.

"In relation to the Wright patent (U. S. letters patent, No. S21393.

ment, both for the development of national defense and also for civil purposes.

"In relation to the Wright patent (U. S. letters patent, No. S21393, Issued on May 22, 1906, to Orville and Wilbur Wright for flying machines, and recently purchased by the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, of New York City) Mr. H. E. Coffin, of the Council of National Defense, writes, under date of January 30, 1917:

"I am thoroughly of the opinion that we should take such steps as will open up the Wright patent freely to all manufacturers. It may be wise to use this patent as a rallying point for the industry; but no financial penalty of consequence should be exacted from individual manufacturers. It is only through some such arrangement as will permit the free extension of the commercial possibilities of aircraft through civilian channels that we may hope to build up a proper volume of business over a period of years. In short, I believe that we can and must arrange for a purchase of this patent on the part of the Government at a reasonable figure before we can hope to develop the quantity manufacture of aircraft."

"The Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation referred to in December, 1916, sent out a letter and copy of agreement and application for license under the Wright patent, which, in the judgment of many of the aircraft companies of the United States, were prohibitory from a business point of view, and also injurious to the development of aircraft and the aircraft industry in the United States.

"It is the judgment of the executive committee of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics that provision should be made at the present session of Congress for the acquiring of such basic patent or patents in connection with the aircraft industry that the present unfavorable situation may be clarified, the Government protected from excessive charges for aircraft, and all aircraft manufacturers encouraged to go on and develop their business as rapidly as possible.

"At the present time the cost of aircraft appears to be excess quickly corrected), and partly because the limited number of constructors, owing to the present uncertain condition of the industry, desire a large profit. These conditions at present operate to deter and prevent the investment of capital in an industry which is vital to national security and welfare.

"It appears that the available output of airplanes must be greatly increased to meet present demands and also that under existing conditions proper steps are not at present being taken to bring this capacity up to that which would be necessary in the event of sudden war."

capacity up to that which would be necessary in the event of sudden war."

In view of this statement and in order to meet the conditions presented, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have recommended to the President the incorporation in the pending naval bill of the following:

"To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such basic patent or patents as he may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies, for governmental and civil purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $1.000,000: Provided, That such arrangement may be made in relation to the control of any basic patent connected with the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States as in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will be of the greatest advantage to the Government and to the development of the industry."

The President has approved the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and I am forwarding it to you with his approval in the earnest hope that it may be incorporated in the pending bill.

I am sending you also a statement containing extracts from letters

I am sending you also a statement containing extracts from letters received from manufacturers of aircraft, in response to an inquiry from the executive committee of the advisory committee for aeronautics, of the effect upon the aircraft industry of the existing aircraft patent situation.

IOSEPHES DANIELS.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask also to have read a memorandum giving information from the aviation board explaining the situation-

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, these letters are very important. It is impossible for me to hear the Clerk read the letters. Now, can we have this material printed and put in our hands within a short period of time. This involves Government ownership of this great big industry not only now but hereafter, and I think we would want to know what we are doing.

Mr. PADGETT. Very likely before we reach that we will have it in print.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand, while the gentleman offers it here, there is a point of order pending; could not the gentleman agree that it go over?

Mr. PADGETT. I am going to ask that it be passed over and returned to later.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman, however, will find some means by which we can get copies of this letter we will be very greatly indebted to him.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Is there anything to indicate in the mind of the gentleman that we can acquire the basic patents of flying machines for anything like a million dollars?

Mr. PADGETT. I made the same inquiry, and my information was that we could.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Acquire the basic patents?
Mr. PADGETT. That is what I understood, but I am only giving the gentleman the information as it came to me. I made the same inquiry and I understand that it can be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the estimate include the price that will be required to pay for the improvements on the basic patents that are utilized in connection with alternate?

ents that are utilized in connection with aircraft?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand this would give us the basic ownership of the patents so we could operate, and it is a suggestion that has been worked out by the Aviation Board, sub-mitted to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President. That is the way it comes to me. I will state to the gentleman, however, that I have not had an opportunity to go into it personally, because it came to me, and my first notice, as I stated, I think it was Saturday, was that Dr. Walcott, the chairman of the board, called my attention to the importance of securing the patents, and that he would have forwarded to me communications on the subject. I received the communication since the sitting of the House this morning, but I did go by and had a conversation with the Secretary of the Navy this morning, and he stated to me in substance what I am stating now.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that connection may I inquire whether the gentleman or his committee has considered the question of the Government under a war exigency appropriating and using all patentable devices and paying a reasonable price for the

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose the Government could commandeer it in time of war, but this is a provision to acquire ownership and prevent the exercise of that power, or remove the necessity of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, the gentleman's committee has not considered any phase of the question of appropriating patentable devices for the use of the Government in case of emergency?

Mr. PADGETT. This information which I now desire the Clerk to read I desire to be available to the Members, and I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the matter indicated. The Clerk read as follows:

APPENDIX C.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS RECEIVED FROM MANUFACTURERS OF AIRCRAFT IN RESPONSE TO AN INQUIRY FROM THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS OF THE EFFECT UPON THE AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY OF THE EXISTING AIRCRAFT-PATENT SITUATION.

We understand that the Wright Co. is basing their license upon minimum royalty from every outside aeroplane manufacturer, amounting to $10,000 per year, payable in advance, and in addition to this a 5 per cent royalty upon the gross amount of sales over and above the sale of $200,000 worth of aeroplanes. We also understand that the Curtiss Co. has demanded from aeroplane manufacturers a royalty amounting to from 5 to 10 per cent of gross sales of any hydroaeroplanes or flying boats manufactured by outside companies.

It seems to us that if the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Curtiss Co. are protected in their claims for such royalty that there is absolutely no chance for the outside manufacturer of aeroplanes to continue in business. Notwithstanding the fact that we are supplying the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation with our equipment, it would hurt our business to a great extent if outside aeroplane manufacturers were pressed by royalties upon patent claims to such an extent that they could not continue.

It also occurs to us that patent claims may be instigated by other companies and present such a complex state of affairs that aeroplane manufacturers in general would not find it possible to continue with the aeroplane manufacturing, which has only just recently been put on a basis which would otherwise result in an advancement in the aeroplane industry, which this country certainly needs.

Unless it is possible for the aeroplane manufacturers to protect themselves in some way against such a mass of complex difficulties, I feel that it will result disastrously for the advancement of the aeroplane in this country.

I understand that a similar condition arose among automobile manufacturers, and an organization was finally formed among them for the purpose of straightening out patent litigation, and I understand that the scheme has worked out most satisfactorily.

II.

Some several months ago, when I heard of the patent fortifications

II.

Some several months ago, when I heard of the patent fortifications which the Wright Co. were seeking to build around the aeroplane industry in their control. I called at their office, because some of us here were discussing the advisability of starting a real aeroplane manufacturing institution here.

I found from discussing the matter with their representative that they had very large ideas of royalties—so large that I considered any kind of a proposition that they were likely to make as prohibitive, because it would give any outside manufacturer such a handicap that it would be impossible to overcome it in competition with a company which had no such handicap.

The substance of my conversation with Orville Wright at that time was that the Wright Bros. felt that no one could fly ever without paying them royalty, and that they were not interested in going into the manufacturing end—only to sit back and collect royalty—and the royalty idea he had was exceedingly exalted. So that my best efforts at that time to establish an aeroplane department in connection with the Packard Motor Car Co. were frustrated by the Wright patents, as they were frustrated, as I have mentioned above in this letter, by the Wright Co., which has since added to it the name "Martin" as the result of a combination with the Glenn L. Martin Co., of Los Angeles.

Of course, I know more or less about the value of patents and what their effect is generally. There is no doubt whatever but that this consolidated-patent situation has had a very deterring influence on the development of aeroplanes in the United States, which I regard as very unfortunate.

We believe that the policy of capitalizing the Wright patent by such a syndicate is one which should be opposed by the United States Army and Navy, and, in fact, by any branch of the Government interested in aeronautics, as it merely means that the Government is obliged to pay an additional 5 per cent in the final analysis.

We believe that a far better arrangement could be arrived at by the Government taking over the patents, if such a thing were possible. We have felt from the beginning that a great deal of credit is due to the Wright Bros., but we do not feel that the New York corporation, by virtue of their capitalization and strength, should "bleed" the Government and retard the development by "wielding a cudgel" over the manufacturers, which would be in the nature of a trust and highly undesirable. ndesirable.

The Wright patent has been and is, in my opinion, a serious menace to the development and growth of the industry. No manufacturer (with the possible exception of the Curtiss Co.) could go forward under the agreement proposed. The industry has been waiting for a 'decision of the courts in the Wright-Curtiss suit. The situation is much the same as it was in the automobile business before the Selden patent was broken. The expansion and growth of the automobile industry has been marvelous since that decision.

There is a score of young men and inventors throughout New England who are studying aeronautics, but have been unable to secure the necessary capital owing to the menace of the Wright patents which are understood to be so broad and fundamental.

I firmly believe that the unsettled status of the Wright patents has been paramount in holding back the progress of aeronautic development in this country, and I furthermore believe that if the present situation is allowed to drift along in the same unset. d manner the effect is going to be almost irreparably detrimental to our future, not only from a commercial but from a national defense standpoint. VI.

I believe that the attitude of the Wright-Martin Corporation in this matter, if they are able to carry it through to the conclusion that they wish, will have a very serious effect on the aeroplane industry, crushing out many worthy experimenters, stifling the development of many new and valuable inventions, and precipitating a controversy between the big aeroplane corporations, which may make it impossible to get financial support for any aeroplane enterprise. Its effect on the sources of supply for military aeroplanes and equipment for the Government will certainly be serious.

Apparently in response to this announcement by the Wright-Martin Co., the Curtiss Co. has announced that they will bring early action against all who make hydroacroplanes in infringement of the Curtiss statents, and there seems to be possibility of a great row between the Wright and Curtiss factions in which all but these two great corporations may be put out of business.

Mr. BUTLER. Whose statement is it? Mr. PADGETT. That statement was sent down to the Secre-It came to him from the Aeronautic Board—the Aviation Committee. I wanted to state that I have instructed that the letter of the Secretary and this information go as a rush order to the Government Printing Office as a committee print, and as soon as it is printed I will have the copies furnished here in the Now, I wish to ask, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment House. which I have submitted go over, and that the committee return to its consideration later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Pad-GETT] asks unanimous consent that for the present this amendment, which has been read, go over and be returned to later in the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. FARR. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit me to embody in this matter information of great importance to the aeronautic field?

Mr. PADGETT, Read it, if you want to.

Mr. FARR. May I do so? Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FARR. These facts are taken from the Army and Navy news in the Washington Herald of February 4 last. They are impressive in showing the great military use and benefit of air fleets and the tremendous importance to this country of immediate and expeditious action:

The United States is woefully behind other nations in the number of trained men able to operate aeroplanes. Army officials estimate that the average man at the end of two years' service in the Army is worth one-half a soldier. An aviator able to fly after three months' instruction is worth 100 soldiers, An aviator they estimate. An expert aviator at the end of a year's training, according to Lord Kitchener, is worth an entire army corps, while Gen. Pershing declares that one aviator is the equivalent of an entire cavalry squadron.

"It was not until Villa's raid on Columbus that this country awoke to the fact that eight aeroplanes were all we had available to meet an emergency, and that the names of Langley, Wright, Curtiss, and others, all American pioneers in America, were like the prophet, "not without honor save in their own country." Congress then passed an appropriation of $17,000,000 for aeronautics for land and water defenses. Up to date close to $25,000,- 000 has been allowed.

"To-day the United States lacks, in round figures, about 2,000 aeroplanes, 25 dirigibles, and 150 observation balloons to make this country seventh in aeronautic equipment for aeronautic defense. We have only about 100 trained military aviators, and plans to train about 400 more. Yet the aviation section of the Signal Corps has received about 1,400 applications from candidates. There is no dearth of men competent to fly and willing to learn; only the machines and equipment are missing, and that now is being supplied as rapidly as possible.

"Germany at present has more than 9,000 aviators and about 2,000 machines in daily use in the war zone, and she is building machines to carry 15 tons, equipped with high-speed motors of 300 horsepower. England has 107 aviation and kite-balloon training schools, and is rapidly drawing near her plan to have 10,000 aeroplanes in service. In the Royal Flying Corps there are all told 100,000 men, including officers, aviators, gunners, mechanics, repair men, and others connected with the business of flying.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recruiting: Expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; purchase, rental, maintenance, operation, exchange, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $319,-228.84: Provided, That not exceeding $26,500 shall be expended for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that item

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do that, Mr. Chairman, in order to obtain information as to the need of motor-propelled passengercarrying vehicles in connection with recruiting, for which you appropriate $26,500.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein are motor vehicles necessary for the purposes of recruiting?

Mr. PADGETT. The estimate was submitted by the department, and also testified to by Admiral Palmer, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in which he stated that in some of the other services the use of automobiles in enabling the recruiting officers to get around through the country and get in contact with the people at their homes and in their local communities was bearing very good fruit in aiding and assisting in recruitg. This is to purchase, I believe, 53 vehicles. Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand this is for the purpose of "joy rides," for recruiting officers to go and call on some prospective recruits?

Mr. PADGETT. No. This is not for "joy rides." This is intended to be very advantageous. This is to buy a small machine at a limited cost. It has proven very helpful in naval

Mr. STAFFORD. Where has it been tried out, and where has it developed any results save the pleasure of the recruiting officer in taking automobile trips?

Mr. PADGETT. It has been tried out in the Marine Corps. Mr. STAFFORD. In what place or city has it been used where the Marine Corps has attempted to get enlistments?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell the gentleman that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the policy of gaining enlist-ments in the Marine Corps and in the Navy was by means of illustrated posters and by having recruiting stations.

Mr. PADGETT. They use that method, and they use the other also.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman concludes to make his point absolute, let me say to him that I have always been and am at this hour strongly epposed to compulsory military service. While I have my doubts as to the wisdom of employing automobiles to procure enlistments for the Navy of the United States, I was willing to subscribe to the views of my brethren on the committee that it would be advisable to have them here.

This method of procuring recruits has been successfully tried for the Marine Corps. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] asked where it had been tried successfully, and I am told that in southeastern Pennsylvania they go out to the villages and small places in these automobiles and talk to the young men who wish to know something about the service, and I think it will be pleasing to the gentleman from Wisconsin to know that the Marine Corps is rapidly filling up. We think that the success in obtaining these recruits is owing somewhat to the employment of these automobiles.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BUTLER. Allow me first to say-Mr. SHERLEY. Right at that point. Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have a recruiting station for the marines at Louisville, and also for the Army and the Navy. We have secured a good many men. I have never heard of automobiles as being needful to get them. We are also authorizing their use by all the postmasters in the country, and it seems it is almost carrying the thing to an absurd degree.

Mr. BUTLER. I will agree with the views of the gentleman from Kentucky, but I would like, if the gentleman will permit me, to reply to him that I would prefer to resort to any means before conscription. I am one of the number of those who do not want to have that handed to me in peace times, and therefore I contend that if it is successful in obtaining recruits for the Marine Corps, it may be successful in getting recruits for However rapid we may have been in gathering rethe Navy. cruits for the Navy, the responses are not as rapid as I would like to see them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish further to reserve the point of order. A great many of us are now interested and have been interested in the past in helping the Navy and the Army in getting a supply of men, but there is no reason why we should be swept off our feet and do things without consideration. Now, certainly nothing has been advanced here, beyond a general statement that they have found this thing of value, to justify us in spending $26,000 to buy automobiles for use in the recruiting service. In the first place, if there is any great need of a particular trip being made that requires an automobile, it would be very much cheaper to rent a machine than to own automobiles. We have to spend enough money for important things to be a little careful about the expenditure of money for unimportant things, and a system that requires all of the aid such as now seems to be necessary in connection with its successful working is a system that is wrong fundamentally. You are not going to remedy your trouble about recruiting simply by furnishing officers with automobiles. I am surprised-and I say it with all proper respect for the members of that committee, for whom I have a high regard—that they should carry a loose item of that kind in connection with this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky. It seems absurd that in order to provide men for the Navy we should provide Ford automobiles, not for officers but for enlisted men engaged in recruiting.

Now, I want to make it plain to the gentleman from Kentucky and to the members of the committee, not by way of apology but by way of explanation, that I voted for this in order that I might do everything that was possible to avoid having the question put to me as to whether or not I am willing to vote for conscription in time of peace. I am willing to pay for posters and for literature and for men who will argue and reason with men who are willing to volunteer.

But to repeat what I have said to the gentleman from Kentucky, if this will help us to bring in enlistments voluntarily to the American Navy—and we need now from 17,000 to 20,000 men-I think it would be advisable.

Mr. SHERLEY. I might be willing to do things also in order to avoid conscription, though I am not ready to say I occupy the same position as the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but I would like to have some real information instead of some general statements that some officer has said that they were being used by marines with good results. That is a statement that is much easier to make than to prove. I submit to the House that we are not warranted by anything that has developed so far in expending $26,000 for automobiles for recruiting stations.

If there is anything in the way of detailed information, I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. PADGETT. The matter was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, upon experience had in the Marine Corps.
Mr. SHERLEY. What experience?
Mr. PADGETT. It appeared in the hearings that they have been trying it, and have gotten better results where they have used it, by going out in the country and getting in contact with the men in their homes and in their localities, than by waiting for them to come to a recruiting station in the city. It was also recommended by Admiral Palmer, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, who stated that it would be a matter of economy as well as efficiency.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like something more than conclusions. It is very easy for a man to say it is a matter of economy, but we are men of common sense. On what basis can it be figured as economy, and what concrete evidence is there that it has been of value in the marine service?

Mr. PADGETT. Just simply the statements of the officers, who say that they get more recruits at less expense.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to say that in my section of the country, up in New York, there is extreme competition in getting men for all industries, and I have not a doubt that the automobiles for the use of officers to enlist men would be of great assistance, because pearly every concern of any magnitude in the country has automobiles to bring its men to work, and they have automobiles to go out and find the men. Now, if the Government wants to get men, it must get there first.

Mr. SHERLEY. You are not going to get men simply by get-ting there first. You are going to get men by offering inducements to the men for the work that they are engaged in, or because of the patriotism of men, and not because some officer rides out in an automobile to see them, instead of seeing them in some other way.

Mr. SNYDER. But the gentleman must know that up in the State of New York the farmers now are compelled to have automobiles to take their men riding in the evening after their work is done, in order to keep them.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. SHERLEY. My time has expired, but I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. GARDNER. The debate is all proceeding by unanimous consent under the reservation of the point of order. fact that when the Secretary of the Navy appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee in December last he recommended that $5 a month more apiece be paid to the enlisted men, and was not that his principal recommendation and this only a minor one? The gentleman knows that the Navy is 24,500 men short, and it is a serious question how you are going to get them-24,500 out of a total authorization of 77,956, one man short in every three.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not questioning the shortness of men, nor am I questioning the desirability of getting them, but I have yet to be convinced that the automobile route is the desirable or the successful route to recruiting. I am perfectly willing to spend money for real things. Some of my friends think I am a little too willing, but I am not willing to spend $26,500 to buy automobiles on the information that we now have.

make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The item is not subject to a point of order. We passed a law a few years ago specifically providing that there should be no money used for the purchase of automobiles unless it was authorized in an appropriation, and conveying the authority to authorize it in the appropriation, and every one of the regular appropriation bills contains the authority to use more or less money in the purchase and maintenance of auto-mobiles, just as the District of Columbia appropriation bill did Those items were not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, we can get at it very much more easily. I withdraw the point of order and move to strike out, on page 7, line 8, beginning with the word "provided," down to and including the word "vehicles" in line 10.

Mr. MANN. But that would leave the whole item subject to be expended on automobiles.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not quite so sure about that proposi-

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly. The paragraph provides for the purchase and maintenance of motor-propelled vehicles, and this proviso is a limitation. There is no question about that. The language of the paragraph would authorize the expenditure of $319,000 for the purchase and maintenance of automobiles. am sure the gentleman does not want that.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is moving to strike out the limitation that the committee saw fit to put in.

Mr. MANN. The limitation on the amount that may be spent for automobiles

Mr. SHERLEY. I move to strike out the figures "$26,500," and to substitute the figures "$500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws his point of order and offers an amendment which the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 8, strike out the figures "$26,500," and insert in licu thereof "$500."

Mr. PADGETT. I hope that amendment will be voted down, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PADGETT) there were—ayes 39, noes 27.

Mr. PADGETT. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Pan-GETT and Mr. SHERLEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Arming and equipping Naval Militia: For the pay, subsistence, and transportation of such portion of the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers as shall engage in actual service or instruction afloat or on shore, and for pay, transportation, and subsistence of any part of the Naval Militia as shall participate in any cruise, maneuvers, field or other instruction, or encampment of any part of the Regular Navy afloat, on shore, or in the Office of Naval Militia Affairs; for prizes, trophies, and badges for excellence in gunnery exercises and target practice of the Naval Militia; for the purpose of providing for issue to the Naval Militia any stores and supplies or publications which are supplied to the Navy by any department; for the actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem not to exceed $10 to be established by the Secretary of the Navy, of the Naval Militia Board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and for the necessary clerical and office expenses of the Office of Naval Militia Affairs in the Bureau of Navigation, and for retainer pay of officers and enlisted men, and traveling and other necessary expenses of the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers, $1,527,617.70.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after line 5, insert as a separate paragraph the following: "For the completion of the alteration, installation of machinery, and repair of the U. S. S. Topeka, $85,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Any former member of class 1 of the United States Naval Reserve, established by the act of March 3, 1915, "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes," who shall have reenlisted in the Navy prior to May 1, 1917, shall be held and considered to have reenlisted within four months from the date of discharge from the Navy for the purpose of continuous-service pay. And any such member of the said Naval Reserve who was serving therein on August 29, 1916, shall upon his application therefor, any time prior to July 1, 1917, be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force, and any such person so enrolled shall, for all purposes, be considered as having served continuously in such Naval Reserve Force since August 29, 1916, with due credit for previous and continuous service in the Naval Reserve in the same manner and to the same effect as for equal length of service in the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That no such enrolled person shall receive any back pay or allowances for any period during which he shall have received pay or allowances, or either, for service in any other branch of the naval service, regular or reserve.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman I reserve a point of order on the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the purpose of the provision which says:

Any former member of class 1 of the United States Naval Reserve, established by the act of March 3, 1915, "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes," who shall have reenlisted in the Navy prior to May 1, 1917, shall be held and considered to have reenlisted within four months from the date of discharge from the Navy for the purpose of continuous-service pay.

Mr. PADGETT. There was a naval-reserve force created by the act passed in 1915, and a number enlisted in that re-serve. In the naval appropriation bill in the last Congress, passed on the 29th of August, there was new legislation with reference to the Naval Reserve. It is found that the last legislation repealed the former. There were 200 or 300 men who had enlisted in the Naval Reserve under the act of 1915 who were not members of the Naval Reserve as created by the act of August 29, 1916. The committee supposed that they would pass right in, but it is held that they can not. This is to allow the ones who were in the first Naval Reserve under the law of 1915 to be transferred to the Naval Reserve and be members of that Naval Reserve under the law created by the act of August 29, 1916, without loss of benefit of their time.

It gives them the benefit of the provisions of August 29, 1916, with reference to the enlistment in the Navy, and the benefit of a continuous service and pay as though they had been members of the last Reserve Corps from the beginning.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman's statement is correct, although that does not seem to be the way the bill reads. "Who shall have reenlisted in the Navy prior to May 1, 1917, shall be held and considered to have reenlisted within four months from the date of discharge from the Navy.

Of course, men who are in the Naval Reserve whose time expires and reenlist within four months, get some special pref-

Mr. PADGETT. Under the general law they get a benefit—Mr. MANN. I understand that. The gentleman states that the trouble arose because the act of last August dismissed a lot of men who were in the Naval Reserve. Is that correct?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I understand.

Mr. MANN. That is because the Naval Committee incorporated a careless provision in the law, or else the Navy Depart-ment made a foolish decision as to what the law was. Which

Mr. PADGETT. It never occurred to us when we passed the law of August 29, 1916, that that would be the effect of it.

Mr. MANN. It is inevitable that either there was a careless provision in the law passed or else there was a foolish decision by the authorities as to what it meant. I want to know which

Mr. PADGETT. It was a decision by the comptroller holding that the last law superseded the first law, the effect of which was that these men found themselves out.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows that if you pass a law to-day and another one to-morrow on the same subject, that the last one will operate as a repeal of the first. Why were not these men taken care of?

Mr. PADGETT. It was a matter that did not occur to the committee or the department in making its recommendations for the legislation:

Mr. MANN. Of course, we all know how those things are done. Some clerk in the Navy Department wrote the draft of the bill and sent it to the chairman of the committee. The committee may have considered it, or it may have been presented on the floor without any pretense of consideration by the committee. That is the form that this comes here in, and this was prepared in the same way.

Mr. PADGETT. No. May I state to the gentleman that the provisions of the law of August 16, 1916, were prepared by Admiral Blue, chief of the bureau, and he stated to us that he gave very great consideration to it.

Mr. MANN. Theoretically he prepared it, but, of course, he did not actually prepare it.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that he actually prepared it. Mr. MANN. That accounts, probably, for the fact that it was not well prepared. I was trying to excuse him, but if the head of a bureau undertakes to draft a bill, I am quite sure that it never will be well prepared. It ought to have been prepared by a clerk who knew something about it.

Mr. PADGETT. He was a member of the board that was preparing special legislation with reference to personnel.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought that the Naval Committee prepared and submitted legislation for the House.

Mr. PADGETT. The naval authorities make recommendations and frequently accompany those recommendations with a draft. The committee considers it, and sometimes makes very material changes in it.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Schools or camps of instruction, Naval Reserve Force: For equipment and maintenance of schools and camps established for the purpose of instructing members of and applicants for membership in the Naval Reserve Force, $30,000.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. There are several kinds of naval reserves now, I take it, under the law passed last year?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the law authorizing the Naval Reserve Force it is composed of men coming in from different occupations and different services.

Mr. GARDNER. Different subdivisions of the Naval Reserve Force, and one subdivision is the men who have finished their term of service with the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. That is called the fleet naval reserve. Mr. GARDNER. I thought it was the Naval Reserve. Mr. PADGETT. It is the fleet naval reserve.

Mr. GARDNER. At any rate, the particular subdivision which consists of men who have finished their service—

Mr. PADGETT. Ex-enlisted men.

Mr. GARDNER. Recent ex-enlisted men. How many are there in that division?

Mr. PADGETT. As I remember it now, I understand that any ex-enlisted men who go into the Naval Reserve go into the fleet naval reserve.

Mr. GARDNER. Unless they are retired enlisted men?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman have any idea of how many men there are, as a matter of fact, in that particular branch of the naval reserve force?

Mr. PADGETT. No. I had a statement the other day that they had altogether 845 who had gone into the reserve since August 29, 1916. Of course you understand that this has to be promulgated and regulations prepared and got out into the

Mr. GARDNER. I read Secretary Daniels's statement as to what Capt. Blue had told him about notifying enlisted men aboard the Texas of the advantages of the reserve, but what Admiral Palmer, chief of the bureau, just a day or two ago.

Mr. GARDNER. What I want to get at is this: I saw somewhere an estimate that we could depend upon 10,000 reservists in the sense that I have been using that term. Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Blue stated when he was chief of the bureau, in a former Congress—and I believe in the Congress before the last, though it may have been in the last session, as that ran over a very long period of time—that he had a list upon which he had the names and addresses of many thousands of the ex-enlisted men, and that he thought these men would be available in case of emergency, and that there was more or less correspondence kept up to know the addresses and whereabouts of the men.

Mr. GARDNER. A couple of years ago Admiral Blue and the Secretary of the Navy submitted to the gentleman's com-mittee a memorandum in which they anticipated that in the very first year that the Naval Reserve was organized they would get 6,500 men. As a matter of fact they got some 400, I think. What I want to get at is how many fleet reservists do they estimate they will get by their new plan?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Palmer submitted a statement the other day that from the information he had before him he was hoping that during the next fiscal year he would be able to increase the reserves to something like 10,000.

Mr. GARDNER. I saw that statement. Does the gentleman think the admiral's statement is likely to be fulfilled under ordinary circumstances?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Palmer feels very much encouraged over it. He says as he has gotten this information and the benefits afforded in the legislation of August 29, 1916, out among the service, it is giving very great pleasure and satisfaction, and is being very heartily and cordially received among the men, and he anticipates that as it spreads among the enlisted men it will bring in a large number and a much more satisfactory number than heretofore

Mr. GARDNER. It is true, however, that we appropriated in the appropriation bill of 1915 for something like 5,000 reservists at that time, and that you got only some 400.

Mr. PADGETT. That act of 1915 was so meager in the benefits or the retainer pay that it gave to the retired men or to others to go into the reserve, that it did not appeal to them, and because of that this legislation of 1916 was provided and substituted, giving much better and more advantages.

Mr. GARDNER. But, as a matter of fact, did not the Bureau of Navigation last year tell the gentleman's committee that if we enacted that Navy reserve legislation—and we enacted what the Secretary asked us for-we would get 6,500 men the first year Mr. PADGETT. The Bureau of Navigation did expect good results from it

Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman any reason to believe that we shall get better results under this new plan, because there is no use in fooling ourselves about these things?

Mr. PADGETT. I think much better, because we gave in the legislation in 1916 advantages and benefits that are so far in advance and so far superior to what was afforded in the act of 1915 that I think it will appeal to the men in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa., pay of employees: One secretary, $1,800; 1 foreman mechanic, $1,800; 1 superintendent of grounds, at $900; 1 steward, at $900; 1 store laborer, at $540; 1 matron and office assistant, at $600; 1 beneficiaries' attendant, at $360; 1 chief cook, at $540; 1 assistant cook, at $420; 1 assistant cook, at $360; 1 chief laundress, at $300; 5 laundresses, at $240 each; 1 chief scrubber, at $300; 3 scrubbers, at $240 each; 1 head waitress, at $360; 8 waitresses, at $240 each; 1 kitchen attendant, at $420; 9 laborers, at $420 each; 1 stable keeper and driver, at $540; 1 master at arms, at $720; 2 house corporals, at $480 each; 1 barber, at $480; 1 carpenter, at $960; 1 painter, at $960; 1 painter, at $420; 1 engineer, $960; 4 laborers, at $600 each; 2 laborers, at $600 each; 1 laborer, at $420; total for employees, $27,840.

Mr. STAFFORD Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. My purpose is to ascertain from the chairman of the committee the policy the committee has followed in providing increased salaries for some of the help carried in the bill. In the item under consideration every person has been increased from 10 to 15 and 20 and even higher per cent, and in other items of the bill I notice the salaries have been in some instances generally increased.

Mr. PADGETT. There are very few increases in the bill. In this item for the naval home these salaries are paid out of the interest upon what is known as the Navy pension fund. That fund was created by the prize money of the Navy, dating away back in the early history of the country, which money the Government holds as a trust fund, and the interest upon which it devotes to the maintenance of the Navy home, and the surplus is turned over for the respect to the maintenance of the Navy home, and the surplus is turned over for the payment of pensions and goes into the pension fund. These increases were all recommended by the governor of the home and approved by the department, and they are all of so small character that the committee inserted them just as they were recommended by the governor of the home and the Navy Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. While I am on my feet I would like to put this further question, which, I believe, is embodied in my original query, as to what policy the committee followed in the increase of salaries. I notice throughout the bill that the committee has made increases of salary where it was not paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. PADGETT. There are some salaries increased at the Naval Academy and new employees created. This is on account of the reorganization as provided for in the bill of last year, and there were a number of others, very few outside of the Naval Academy, and the committee has dealt with each case as it came up on the merits of that case and having in mind the service that was performed and the salary that was received.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the committee did not adopt any general rule in reference to the increase of salaries on any horizontal basis?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

Ordnance and ordnance stores: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department: for furniture at naval magazines, torpedo stations, and proving grounds; for maintenance of the proving ground and powder factory and for target practice; for the maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, to be used only for official purposes at naval magazines, the naval proving ground, Indianhead, Md., and naval torpedo stations, and for pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and naval magazines: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, cierical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and naval magazines for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not exceed $600,000; in all, $7,602,485.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, lines 25 and 26, after the words "1918." strike out the words "shall not exceed $600,000; in all, $7,602,485" and insert in lieu thereof "shall not exceed $750,000; in all, $8,848,323."

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the reason for it?
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think some explanation should be made of the item which makes an increase of $800,000, even though it is carried in a naval appropriation bill providing for $350,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will read from a memorandum from the department:

This is the bureau's regular working appropriation for procurement, maintenance, repair, upkeep, and handling of ordnance material. The increased amounts are required to cover the following items, which were in the original estimates, with the exceptions of items (f) and (g), which are due to new conditions:

(a) Fire-control and optical instrument, $206,500; (b) 14-inch gun hoops and liners, $70,000; (c) trinitrotoluol, $75,000—

That is a high-explosive powder-

(d) aircraft bombs, $50,000; (e) equipment for torpedo-testing barge, $50,000; (f) increase pay due to new wage schedules now in force, $280,000; (g) additional subinspectors, $150,000; (h) 21-inch firing tube for Keyport torpedo station, $5,000.

Those are the items, and it is due to the enlarged activities necessitated by the enlarged conditions of the Navy created by the act of August 29, 1916. You will bear in mind that in that bill we appropriated for one item-that is, for ammunitionabout $40,000,000 last year. That is to enlarge the work of the Ordnance Department and on account of these new conditions which have arisen, with which the gentleman is entirely familiar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was this enlarged amount generated in the last few months or last few days?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, some is due on account of the impera-tive necessity and some has been brought about in the last few days, but the most of it was known at the beginning and was submitted by the bureau to the Secretary, but the Secretary thought that some of it could be dispensed with until these conditions have arisen at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. They were part of the original estimates.
Mr. PADGETT. They were part of the original estimates sent to the Secretary, and the Secretary thought when things were running differently from what they are now they might be dispensed with, but the conditions now call for them instead of postponing them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose there are many other similar in-stances where the gentleman intends to increase the amounts carried in the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. A number of them I have here that reached me this morning, but the discussion of which has been heretofore necessitated by this condition for enlarged operations and enlarged preparations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any idea of the total amount involved in the revised estimates on account of extraordinary conditions?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; but it will be a very considerable

Mr. STAFFORD. Running into the millions, I suppose?
Mr. PADGETT. Running into three or four million, probably.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.: New and improved machinery for existing shops, $307,036; repairs and betterments to present facilities, $315,200; machinery and equipment for new gun shop, $1,798,500; in all, $2,420,736.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. The Clerk will find the amendment at the top of the letter and the reason given for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, under "Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.," lines 13 and 14, strike out all after the word "facilities" and insert "$395,200; machinery and equipment for new gun shop, $1,798,500; in all, $2,500,736."

Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire as to the appropriation of $1,798,500, which is new, for machinery and equipment of new gun shop, whether that appropriation will equip the shop complete with the machinery as contemplated by the department?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; I presume not. It will take care of all they would be able to make and handle during the year.

They are continually adding to it in new machinery

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite aware there are new types of machinery, borers, lathes, and other devices of automatic types which require installation from time to time, but I was wondering whether the appropriation of $1,790,000 would virtually put this new machine shop in running condition.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; where you insert the word "virtually" at all. But when you said "to absolutely complete" I made the reservation as to the absolute completion of the machinery

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume, then, from the gentleman's last statement that he could have replied "yes" to the former query I propounded to him? Of course, nothing is complete, so far as a Government establishment is concerned. They always find need for further appropriations to put it in a more up-to-date condition.

Mr. PADGETT. The Government holds on to its machinery more tenaciously than do the private yards. They scrap machinery more readily than the Government yards do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Projectile plant: To complete the erection and equipment of a plant for the manufacture of projectiles, on a site to be selected by the President, including the employment of all necessary expert, drafting, and clerical assistance, $705,611, to be available until expended.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of I would like to know when this was authorized and just what the authorization was.

Mr. PADGETT. It was authorized in the act of August 29.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, the phraseology here is "to complete the erection and equipment of a plant"; and then, further on "one of the baselested by the President". ther on, "on a site to be selected by the President." Has that site been selected?

Mr. PADGETT. It has not been selected yet. The President has appointed a board. You remember there was also an armorplate factory provided for in the bill of last year, and I under-stand it was the purpose of the department and the President to locate the two in connection or conjunction with each other. And he has appointed a board to visit and investigate and examine and make a report as to the proper location of the plant. There are a number of places that have been offered in various States, and that board is engaged in that investigation at the present time. They have not yet reported.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why are the words "to complete" used?

Mr. PADGETT. Because last year there was a limit of cost upon the amount to construct, and we appropriated one half of it. This is the remaining half that was to complete that factory.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The authorization was for twice the

Mr. PADGETT. Twice this amount; and we appropriated last year one half of it, and this is for the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

New batteries for ships of the Navy: For liners for eroded guns, to be available until June 30, 1919, $100,000; for one 12-inch, 45-caliber gun, to be available until June 30, 1919, $60,000; for antiaircraft guns and mounts complete, to be available until June 30, 1919. $341,000; for 1-pounder boat guns and mounts complete, to be available until June 30, 1919, $162,000; in all, $663,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Padgett: On page 20, under "New batteries for ships in the Navy," line 1, strike out "$341,000" and insert "$929,000"; for machine guns and equipment, "$1,250,000." And on line 4 strike out "$663,000" and insert "$2,100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, is this another instance of where the committee shaved down the original estimate on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and has now received the suggestion that it be restored to the original amount?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. The committee put in the amount, as I remember it, that was submitted in the original estimates, but they were distributing and procuring and getting all of these This is for antiaircraft guns. I will ask the Clerk to read the statement. It is very short.

Mr. BUTLER. Antiaircraft guns on the ships. Mr. PADGETT. Let the Clerk read the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

This is to provide for 32 additional antiaircraft guns and mounts which are required for installation on vessels other than battleships for which no provision has been made.

by the department Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, what is the date of that letter?

Mr. PADGETT. It came just this morning.
Mr. BUTLER. I understand.
Mr. PADGETT. They want these things now instead of distributing them over several years, as was at first contemplated.

Mr. BUTLER. This is for additional ones? Mr. PADGETT. This is for additional ones, and for additional ships not provided for, thinking that when things are running differently from what they are now some of them could be taken care of this year and others next year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The radical increase is in the last item, increasing it from $162,000 to over $2,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. STAFFORD. Where Where are those guns to be used?

Mr. PADGETT. On various small boats. For instance, they put a gun upon a very small boat that chases submarines, and on small craft generally.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this that new boat called "submarine

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; a type of boats used for that. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Batteries for merchant auxiliaries: For batteries for merchant auxiliaries (to cost not exceeding $4,367,174), to be available until expended, $1,650,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Why would it not do to make this appropriation available June 30, 1919?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, sir, I do not know of any reason. We are putting in the language that has always been carried in it. It has been carried in ammunition for the ships, and the ordnance. It has been a continuing fund and has always been

Mr. MANN. I know, but the next item, and two, three, or four items that follow it, are in the same language in the bill. Now, if the money is to be expended within a reasonable time, a limit of two years is a reasonable time. There is no way absolutely of knowing anything at all about what the Government's obligations are if you make all sorts of appropriations available until expended.

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection to making that 1919.

Mr. MANN. Last year we made the change in some of the other items which you carry now two years ahead.

Mr. PADGETT. And the reason for that is the getting of ordnance material.

Mr. MANN. I understand you can not do it very well in a year.

Mr. PADGETT. There is a great deal of difficulty in getting it, and some of it runs over two years

Mr. MANN. It is easily reappropriated.

Mr. PADGETT. If the Government does the work itself, it takes often over two years. And, of course, it could be reappropriated.

Mr. MANN. In some of these items the money will not be used for 10 years under normal conditions.

Mr. PADGETT. Suppose you make it 1920. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.
Mr. PADGETT. Then I will offer an amendment there to strike out "until expended" and say "June 30, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment to line 7, page 20.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 20, line 7, by striking out the word "expended" and insert in lieu thereof the words "June 30, 1920."

Mr. PADGETT. Now, I have another amendment to offer.
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption right there? Do I understand that under the preceding item only $629,000 will be available until June 30, 19203

Mr. PADGETT. No; it applies to that whole paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says there shall be available $1,250,000. Mr. PADGETT. It applies to the whole appropriation in the

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, "Batteries for merchant auxiliaries," lines 6 and 7, strike out all after "to cost not exceeding" and insert: "to cost not exceeding $5,781,174, to be available until expended, $4,131,174."

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to amend that amendment by striking out the word "expended" and inserting the words "June 30, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "expended" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "June 30, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is an increase of $2,500,-000 over that carried in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. The reasons are very clearly and succinctly stated. I will ask the Clerk to read in my time the reasons the department has given.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The original estimate for completing this project was $2,717,174, of which only $1,650,000 was included in the bill. To this it is now found necessary and advisable to add the following items and to make available the total of the estimate:

(a) One thousand four hundred 1-pounder guns and mounts for use on auxiliary patrol vessels, $1,134,000. The bureau originally contemplated providing 1,000 such guns and mounts, and has recently been advised that the General Board considers that 2,400 such guns will be required. There are no unassigned guns of this caliber available at the present time; manufacture of new guns should be undertaken without delay with a view to arming submarine chasers.

(b) It is desired to purchase 10,000 .30 caliber rifles and 4,000 automatic .45 caliber pistols and belts for the use of the crews of patrol bolts, armed merchantmen, and naval auxiliaries, at an estimated cost of $280,000. This item was not included in the original estimates as its immediate need was not at that time apparent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman I would like to direct this.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct this further inquiry to the gentleman, particularly as to the effect of the phraseology "to be available until June 30, 1920." I assume that this amount will not be immediately available, but only available beginning the fiscal year July 1, 1917.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the language of the bill as it is ordinarily passed it will not be, but if Congress should insert a general provision at the end of the bill, a provision which I am considering offering, to make all the appropriations in the bill, in the discretion of the President, immediately available, it would be immediately available.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the present phraseology it would not be available until the beginning of the fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. It would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition for merchant auxiliaries: For ammunition for merchant auxiliaries, to be available until expended, $1,500,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment there. I notified the House that there were a number of these amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman said they would not amount to more than $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. Gentlemen would not be surprised if there were a hundred millions, judging by the way they are going.

The CHAIRMAN, The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, under "Ammunition for merchant auxiliaries," on line 10, strike out "expended, $1,500,000" and substitute "expended, $7,281,941."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I have leave to ask the chairman of the committee a question? Even to me that is almost shocking. It is quite surprising.

Mr. PADGETT. Read the reasons given there. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The estimate for this item was originally $5,811,941, but it was considered sufficient to provide for immediate use $1,650,000. It is now strongly advisable to provide the amount contained in the original estimate and to add thereto the following:

(a) Ammuntion for 1,400 additional 1-pounder guns, $1,470,000, so as to permit of the undertaking of the actual manufacture and procurement of all ammunition required for the use of merchant auxiliaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman is going to amend the amendment by following the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to have this made available only until June 30, 1920.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Strike out the word "expended" and insert "June 30, 1920."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question. Here are amendments of very great size, with only four or five lines in explanation. Has not the committee seen fit to obtain a little bit more information than is being given by these memoranda that are being sent down by the department?

Mr. PADGETT. These matters came down this morning, but, as I stated to the gentleman, this matter has been gone into by the department, which, as the gentleman is aware, has instituted a method of being in touch with and having a register of a large number of merchant ships that would be brought, in case of an emergency or of war, into the naval service as naval auxiliaries. They require small guns and ammunition for small guns. There are a large number of those ships, with the owners of which the department has made arrangements, and it has them upon the list available and has its plans all made and consummated, in case of war, to take them over and to proceed with them as naval auxiliaries.

When the matter was first submitted to the committee conditions were very different from what they are now, and the department estimated for the next fiscal year the amount set out here in the bill-$1,500,000-and that next year it would take still more, stating that the total cost was estimated to be so much. They are now asking for much more than they asked for at the time of the hearing, because of the changed conditions. It is a question whether we will do it now or postpone it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, what we are doing is practically to appropriate large sums, on the general belief that they may be needed.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. If actual war comes, we will probably appropriate a good many million dollars in lump sums. I was just wondering what the need was for dividing these things up into these supposed divisions, when in point of fact we are taking these things on faith, and unless war comes we will not need to make these appropriations.

Mr. PADGETT. This is submitting it to Congress for a definite amount, for a definite and specific purpose, and Congress knows for what purpose this appropriation is made.

Mr. SHERLEY. I quite appreciate that; but I appreciate also what the gentleman is going to learn after this bill becomes a law—that if his committee does what it ought to do, checking up balances in the Treasury Department and finding out the status of naval work in connection with any one of these items, it will have a task that will be herculean, to say the least. fortunately there is apparently nothing else that we can do.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of anything else that we can do at this time

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr.

PADGETT) there were—ayes 43, noes 5.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Defense of naval stations: For defense of naval stations, to be available until expended, $1,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I understand that this item is for the purpose of building antiaircraft guns, to be put at the naval stations. Is that true?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is what I understand. We made an appropriation in the bill last year for that purpose, and this is for the same purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. I question exceedingly whether the Naval committee has jurisdiction of any such item as this. I am not going to make a point of order now, because I think it is important that it is important that these guns should be had; but I want my statement to show that the failure to make a point of order is not a recognition or an admission at all of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs; because in the future, when emergencies do not exist, and when we can exercise some individual judgment touching these matters, I think it is important that the question be threshed out.

I would like to ask the gentleman for information the character of these antiaircraft guns, whether they are to be on fixed emplacements, or whether they are to be mobile?

Mr. PADGETT. Many of them are to be on fixed emplacements. I will read from the hearings. Admiral Strauss was before the committee.

ments. I will read from the hearings. Admiral Strauss was before the committee.

The Charman. Admiral, the next item is, "Defense of naval stations: For defense of naval stations, to be available until expended, $1,000,000." That is a new item and a lump sum. Is there anything about that which you do not want to go in the record?

Admiral Strauss. No; I do not mind that, sir. That is to purchase antiaircraft guns for stations wholly under the control of the Navy and not otherwise defended against aircraft attack. It is a broad scheme involving the purchase of 104 3-inch antiaircraft guns and mounts complete. This $1,000,000 allotted will not cover the estimate. The Chairman. How much is the estimate?

Admiral Strauss. The estimate is $1,735,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Will you let me ask you a question right there?

Admiral Strauss. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Under the estimates that you have submitted do you include all the naval stations?

Admiral Strauss. I do not know whether I have the list here or not, but I will give you the list.

Mr. BUTLER. It would impress me that if we are going to defend any of these stations we ought to defend them all.

Admiral Strauss. Well, we will.

The CHAIRMAN. You said that your total recommendation was $1,735,000?

Admiral Strauss. Yes, ir.

The CHAIRMAN. You said that your total recommended, a shortage of $735,000?

Admiral Strauss. Yes,

The CHAIRMAN. Could you get all of those guns the first year?

Admiral Strauss. I think we could, sir; the guns and ammunition. that is only 104 3-inch antiaircraft guns, and I have little doubt but that they could be had the first year, the whole number. We have, as a matter of fact, begun to make 3-inch forgings at the Washington Navy Yard out of our own steel, and if we expand that it will permit us to do such work as this very much quicker.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it the same kind of a gun that goes on board ship? Admiral Strauss. Just the same.

Mr. KELLEY. Then why carry them in two different places in the bill? The CHAIRMAN. They are for different purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for making the inquiry is that we are carrying considerable sums of money for the building of antiaircraft guns in connection with the coast defenses.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

We are building a more powerful gun than Mr. SHERLEY. the one that is mounted aboard ship, and the question whether the guns shall be emplaced or not is a question that has not been finally determined. I wondered whether the Navy had come to a conclusion. I see there is no testimony on that point at all. The probability is that they will be on trucks that can be moved about. I shall not make the point of order at this time, because I think we need to have more of these guns, and I am willing to have the money expended for this purpose. my judgment, it is clearly not within the jurisdiction of this committee.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee proceeded upon the assumption that the naval stations and their management were under the control of the Navy Department.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are, but their defense is under the control of the Army, and a great deal of the money that we appropriate for fortification purposes is for the direct purpose of defending naval stations.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of Mr. PADGETT. It is not subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order? Mr. HUDDLESTON. That the item is not within the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee, but belongs to the Committee on Fortifications

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no extended argument to make upon it. The naval stations are under the control and jurisdiction of the Navy Department, and I certainly hope that the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order, if the Chair should be of the opinion that it is subject to a point of order, because this is a matter that is very much needed. With the many, many millions of dollars invested in our naval stations, we want them defended, and we need these guns. We need them very urgently.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why was not the matter brought to the attention of the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy Department thought that it was under the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee, and we thought so. Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is this the first time that this appropriation is sought to be made?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not think we ought to be stampeded.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention to the fact that this is the first time the Naval Committee has sought to exercise this particular jurisdiction, and it would seem to support the contention that it properly belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PADGETT. And this is the first time that there has been any effort or attempt made to defend the naval stations against air attacks. This is the first time that there has been any attempt to make these defenses.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That does not alter the situation at all, because there are other methods of defense that you could provide for naval stations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the rule provides for giving the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction over appropriations for fortifications and coast defenses. The language "coast defenses" was inserted in the rule 25 or 30 years ago. It was an addition to the language of fortifications designed to give the Committee on Appropriations control over submarines, mines, and the placing of torpedoes, and so forth, in connection with fortifications of seaports. That was the purpose of adding the language "coast defenses" to the language "fortifications" which had been in the rules for many years.

Of course, it might be said that the language "coast defenses" covers defense of the naval stations because the naval stations in the main are close to the coast; but the Chair must remember that the rules also provide that the Committee on Naval Affairs has jurisdiction over appropriations for the Naval Establishment. Now, the broad jurisdiction of the Naval Committee is over all questions relating to the Naval Establishment, including the appropriations for it, and undoubtedly before the words "coast defenses" were added to the rule in reference to the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Naval Affairs would have jurisdiction over any item which was to be expended under the Naval Establishment. No other committee had jurisdiction over an item in relation to the Naval Establishment, and any sum that was to be expended by the Navy came within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs. And it was not the design by changing the language, adding "coast defenses" to the jurisdiction of the Appropriation Committee to take anything away from the Jurisdiction of the Naval Committee. The design was to settle the dispute be-tween the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations as to whether appropriations for submarine mines, torpedoes, and so forth, in connection with fortifications should be made by the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations,

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him a question? What connection is there between naval stations and coast fortifications?

Mr. MANN. The connection is this: If it is a fortification under the control of the Army it would be a fortification outside of the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee. But to say that you can not build a fence around a naval station which is for its defense, through the Committee on Naval Affairs, but that you would have to go to the Appropriation Committee for it, absurd.

I am aware of the fact that the distinguished occupant now in the chair is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and that there has been a concerted effort on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to obtain jurisdiction over the defense of naval stations, but I do not think the present occupant of the chair will allow that to influence him. The construction of the rule is as clear as daylight. The Naval Affairs Committee had jurisdiction prior to 1890. Clearly their jurisdiction has not been interfered with by the change of the rule in 1890 adding "coast defenses" to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman from Illinois means by the positive assertion he makes that there has been a concerted attempt on the part of the members of the Committee on Appropriations to take over all jurisdiction, and the intimation that the present occupant of the chair, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, may be a part of that effort.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I made no such intimation as that, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not help being struck by the statement made by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not deny that there has been a concerted effort?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do deny it. Mr. MANN. I know it myself.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Illinois knows many things in his own mind that no one else has information of.

Mr. MANN. I have talked with some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations and I know what the situation is.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know that so far as I am concerned there has been nothing that would warrant any such statement. Perhaps more than any other member of the committee I am interested, being chairman of the Subcommittee on Fortifications. But that is aside. The gentleman is in error, in my judgment, in his statement that the change of the rule whereby the words "and coast defenses" were added served to enlarge at all the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations touching these matters. It did not. Prior to that language points of order had been made and repeatedly sustained in favor of the Com-mittee on Appropriations, and when it came to the revision of the rules it was believed that this language would more clearly express the recognized jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. Neither is the matter to be determined by the statement that if this point of order is sustained they could not build a fence by way of protection around a naval station. I personally should not have made the point of order and did not make it on account of the circumstances that confront the Congress. My own desire is to see an appropriation for this purpose made speedily, but as long as it has been made it is proper that the Chair should render the correct ruling touching it. One of the main purposes of coast defense is the protection of naval establishments. There is no naval establishment upon the coast anywhere that I know of that has not been the cause of coast fortifications for its protection. The fortifications that were at Port Royal were practically abandoned when the naval station there was abandoned, because the reason they were put there in the first instance was the protection of that naval station.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Mr. BRITTEN. Would that same theory prevail as applying to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Chicago?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, yes; it would apply there if we saw any need of fortifying upon the Great Lakes, which we have not

Mr. BRITTEN. Because you do not see any need, would that be any reason why the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, if need be, should be deprived of antiaircraft guns? Mr. SHERLEY. No. It is not because we would not have jurisdiction but because, as the gentleman well knows, under our trenty arrangements there have been no fortifications erected for a great many years. Of course, I know that originally there were fortifications there, but for a great many years on the Great Lakes nobody has proposed any such thing.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the treaty provide that there shall not be defenses?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; and I did not so state. I said that because of that treaty nobody thought it desirable to put fortifications there. The point I make is simply this: Jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations relates to all matters in connection with coast defenses. You could not have more basic words than those, and unquestionably it not only has jurisdiction but is now making provision for the building of anti-aircraft guns for the very purpose of defending the coast.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Does the gentleman state that the principal Mr. NOLAN. reason for fortifying the Golden Gate is to protect the Mare Island Navy Yard?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but I say that one of the great reasons for fortifying a particular place is because there is a naval establishment there.

Mr. NOLAN. Is it not a fact that the fortifications were put there mainly to protect the military reservation at the Presidio, long before the Mare Island Navy Yard was established?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, but that does not in the slightest mitigate against the argument I make, which is this, that in each instance where there has been a naval establishment of any magnitude there will be found fortifications for the purpose of protecting that naval establishment.

Mr. NOLAN. Can the gentleman state to the committee the nearest coast-defense gun to the Mare Island Navy Yard?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not from memory.

Mr. NOLAN. Or the nearest coast-defense gun to the Bremerton Navy Yard?

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not state it from memory. tunately both of those yards are situated so far inland that it has been a great expense to the Government in getting ships to them.

Mr. BRITTEN. Has the gentleman's committee at any time considered the advisability of appropriating for antiaircraft guns for the defense of the various naval stations of the country?

Mr. SHERLEY. That concrete proposition has not been brought up, but the gentleman, I am quite sure, is too good a parliamentarian to undertake to determine jurisdictions upon a question of whether a committee has seen fit to do a given thing or not. We had estimates for antiaircraft guns for coast defenses, and the bill that recently passed the House carried considerable items for that purpose, as it did last year?

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.
Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, because of the fact that the Mare Island Navy Yard and the Bremerton Navy Yard are so far inland, is it not reasonable to assume that a naval committee ought to have protection of those yards?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it would be rather the assumption that the Army would have it, because of their being so far inland.
Mr. NOLAN. Is the Marine Corps under the control of the Army or the Navy?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly it is not under the control of the Committee on Fortifications.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is under the Navy. Mr. NOLAN. Surely.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of whether the naval stations shall, or shall not be protected, nor will a decision on the point of order adverse to the contention of the Committee on Naval Affairs, mean that these stations will be undefended. These questions do not arise at this time. Appropriate action can and will be taken for the defense of our country, even though some particular committee is confined to its appropriate jurisdiction, and is ousted from jurisdiction which it has improperly undertaken to exercise. This point of order is directed against the effort of the Committee on Naval Affairs to exercise jurisdiction over coast defenses. Should it develop at any time that anything is needed for the defense of our naval stations that may be properly related to the head of coast defenses, we may rest assured that proper provision to that end will be made. We are more likely to err in that direction on the side of excess, rather than of penuriousness. So that the question before us is solely one of parliamentary law. I call the attention of the Chair, upon the authority of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the fact that the attempt to exercise this particular jurisdiction has never heretofore been made by this committee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. It has never been made by the other committee, and it is just as strong an argument against them.

mittee, and it is just as strong an argument against them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken as to the It has twice been made. facts.

Mr. PADGETT. As to antiaircraft guns?
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; provision for antiaircraft guns was carried in this bill and in the bill of last year.

Mr. PADGETT. For naval stations? Mr. SHERLEY. It was not restricted; they were for coast defenses

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman does not say they were for naval stations.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not say they were not, either. They were not restricted.

Mr. PADGETT. But they were not carried for naval stations, and they are so prescribed here.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman: The fact that the Naval Affairs Committee has never heretofore claimed jurisdiction to erect coast defenses is the vital question, not whether these defenses are to be equipped with antiaircraft guns. Antiaircraft guns, are a comparatively recent invention. If the Naval Affairs Committee has no jurisdiction to erect coast defenses, it is beside the question whether those defenses are to be equipped with antiaircraft or some other form of guns. The equipped with antiaircraft or some other form of guns. real determining fact in this connection is that this committee for the first time is seeking to exercise jurisdiction to establish, and appropriate for, coast defenses. Certainly it should be a very plain proposition that defenses of this character should be referred to some particular head, and to some one committee. It would be most undesirable in this connection to have a divided jurisdiction, and refer coast defenses of one class to one committee, and the others to another. Such a ruling would mean that the Committee on Appropriations would exercise jurisdiction over all coast defenses save those intended for the exclusive defense of naval stations. There is one head of jurisdiction broad enough to cover all coast defenses, and if the work which the Naval Committee is appropriating for in this connection properly comes under that head, in other words if it is a work of coast defense, then it matters not that it is exclusively intended for the defense of a naval station. That fact does not operate to deprive the Committee on Appropriations of its appropriate jurisdiction over coast defense

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that this is a very clear case, and the conclusion obvious, but we do not agree as to the nature of that conclusion. Plainly the language to which the point of order is directed, embodies an effort on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs to exercise a jurisdiction that belongs to another committee according to all reason, and all the precedents, and the point of order should

Mr. Chairman, I stated a while ago from impression the reason they added the words "coast defenses" to the rules, which was first done I think in 1890, but I can give a little more of the history in reference to the matter now. In 1890 at the beginning of the Fifty-first Congress the question came up in the House on a resolution referring the President's Some gentleman moved to amend the resolution by adding to it "that, in addition to public defense, all matters relating to coast defenses be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs instead of to the Committee on Appropriations." There was no contest then between the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations, but there was a contest between the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations as to which had jurisdiction of coast defenses. very distinguished parliamentarian from the State of Kentucky, of equal distinction with the present gentleman from Kentucky SHERLEY], and that is saying a good deal, ex-Speaker Carlisle, made this statement:

Carlisle, made this statement:

It seems to me this is not the proper time to discuss the question as to what extent, if any, Congress will enter upon a policy of providing defense for our seacoasts. The question before the committee now is simply one relating to the jurisdiction of the committees of the House. By the rules of the House, as they have always existed, since the appropriations were taken from the Committee on Ways and Means at least, the standing Committee on Appropriations has had jurisdiction over the subject of fortifications, and when changes were adopted at a recent Congress, distributing the various appropriation bills among the several committees having jurisdiction over the subjects to which they related, the appropriations for fortifications were still left to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, I agree with the gentleman from New York in my front that whatever committee exercises jurisdiction over appropriations for fortifications should have jurisdiction over appropriations for coast defense, because they are simply, or substantially at least, for the same purpose.

And there is further argument of ex-Speaker Carlisle along the same line for the express purpose of declaring that the Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction of fortifications, should not get into a constant quarrel in the House with the Committee on Military Affairs given jurisdiction of coast defenses.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will. Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true, but I think that is simply made plain, the jurisdiction that existed before the words were added. The words did not enlarge the jurisdiction, but made it patent on the face of the rule.

Mr. MANN. But nobody ever contended that without that language the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction to make any appropriations under the Naval Establishment.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the gentleman will permit, the Committee on Appropriations had all the jurisdiction at first. Now, certain jurisdictions were taken away and given to the Committee on Naval Affairs, certain to the Committee on Military Affairs, and unless the language creating jurisdiction in those committees brought certain matters within them, they remained where they had originated.

Mr. MANN. Oh, undoubtedly; but no ruling gives to the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction over matters of any kind whatever relating to the Naval Establishment or any money that is to be expended under the Navy relative to the Naval Establishment. Why, the Committee on Appropriations can make no appropriations for the Naval Establishment unless it is a deficiency. That the Naval Establishment. That is the only jurisdiction they get over

Mr. FITZGERALD. We also have the departmental service. Mr. MANN. That is not part of the Naval Establishment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We provide for clerical services. Mr. MANN. That is providing for certain clerks in Washington. You can not appropriate a dollar for an officer in the Navy unless it is a deficiency; not a dollar for an enlisted man in the Navy unless it is a deficiency—

Mr. FITZGERALD. We do not try.

Mr. MANN. Not a dollar for a ship unless it is a deficiency, not a dollar for a training station or a navy yard unless it is a deficiency. Now, it is idle to say that you have authority to appropriate money for the defense of a naval station under the Naval Establishment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the argument of the gentleman from Illinois were sound, it would have presented a very peculiar situation here a year or two ago. Because of the increase in the range of guns for the naval vessels it was ascertained that outside of the harbor of New York, off Rockaway Beach, there is a point at which modern naval vessels could lie and have within range the navy yard in Brooklyn. In order to protect that navy yard or naval station, and to prevent its bombardment by hostile fleets, a project was originated to install certain 16-inch guns at Rockaway Point. The essential purpose of those guns was the defense of the naval station, and they were part of the fortifications bill because they are a part of the coast defenses of the country. Such methods of protecting any coast establishment, or any station so located as to come within the purview of the coast defense, whether it be through some device now in existence or something to be perfected in the future, belongs to the coast defenses of the country and to the committee having jurisdiction of those defenses.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. Were the guns the gentleman just referred to placed in the Brooklyn Navy Yard?

Mr. FITZGERALD, No.

Mr. BRITTEN. They were not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. And neither necessarily will these guns be placed in the navy yard at Brooklyn. That is an important point which the gentleman has developed. effective defense of these naval stations against aircraft attacks the guns will more properly be located without the station than within it, because the areas are so restricted that in order to have a controlling fire over aircraft in attempting to attack the naval station the guns will probably be situated not within the station but outside of it.

Mr. BRITTEN. That would depend entirely upon the typography.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is so in connection with an aerial defense of such a naval station as the one at Brooklyn, N. Y. For the proper protection of the naval station at New York the best place to put some of these guns undoubtedly will be without the military reservation. The defense against these aircraft would not be guns located directly underneath where the craft is to discharge their effective weapons, whether they be bombs or large quantities of explosives.

Mr. TALBOTT. Who commands the troops there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are no troops there, unless they have smuggled them in since I have been talking. to yield for a question of that character. The military force that is there at the naval station is the marines, if there be any military force, but that does not mean that guns for the protection of the naval station are to be at the naval station. Take the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., which is located at Kittery, Me., across the river. There are coast defenses for the protection and defense of the naval station. They are not on the naval station. They are not a part of the naval station. And the antiaircraft guns that will be utilized in connection with the annual trait gains that the protection of the naval station will not be upon the naval reservation. The aircraft are a modern development of warfare, requiring new methods of defense, which must be fitted into the recognized plans and schemes

Mr. BRITTEN. If this paragraph provided that the antiaircraft guns be placed within the navy yard, would the gentleman still contend his point of order was correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would, because they are still part of the coast defenses.

Mr. BRITTEN. Notwithstanding-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there can not be a navy yard in the middle of a prairie. They can not be out on the mesas of the West, far removed from our coast. From its very nature a naval station must be located on a coast or sufficiently adjacent to it, with ample water facilities to permit it to be reached, to be practically on the coast. If it can not be reached by water and be adjacent to the coast, it is not in effect a naval station. Referring to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois about the naval station on the Great Lakes, under our treaty with Great Britain each country can maintain upon the Great Lakes but a single vessel of such insignificant armament and equipment that no one regards it now as a vessel of naval character. With the existence of that treaty the possibility of attack from water by formidable war vessels is eliminated, and the necessity for erecting coast defenses on the Great Lakes has not existed.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman think that other defenses than a military defense would come under the fortifications the defense against fire or against trespassers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Anything in the nature of a coast defense or fortification comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KELLEY. There are stone fences on the Indianhead Res-

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not a fortification or a defense.

It might be. Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is police protection. The gentleman should know that. We are not dealing with police matters. A watchman at Indianhead serves the same purpose as a fence, and a fence is erected in order to eliminate the number of watchmen that otherwise would be necessary. Of course, I can understand the gentleman, coming from the section of country he does, may confuse coast defenses or fortifications with an ordinary fence around a reservation, but nobody else will. ter.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman what he would say about the naval station that we sometimes call the "g factory" or the "navy yard" here at Washington? Would t defense of that be under the jurisdiction of the fortifications?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it would not be a coast defense. It is not a navy yard. It is a Government gun factory for the Navy. Mr. BRITTEN. It is a naval station, then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been called all three.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. How about the naval station at New Orleans, where there are no coast defenses?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. There are coast defenses to protect New Orleans.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How many miles away from the naval station? Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. How about the naval station at Pensacola and at Key West? Mr. FITZGERALD. Any defense placed there would be coast defense. What would the gentleman think they would be if placed at Pensacola? Inland defenses? Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Does the coast-defense proposition assume to exclude all hostile aircraft from coming over the territory of the United States. Is that their function?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Is the antiaircraft gun an instrument particularly and solely used in coast defense?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not necessarily.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Then, why, because we want an antiaircraft gun at the naval magazine at Iona Island, 30 or 40 miles up the Hudson River to protect it from aircraft, is it an infringement of coast defenses?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might be. Coast defenses at Iona Island, 52 miles up the Hudson River, would not necessarily be a place where coast defenses are excluded. Our second line of defense of Chesapeake Bay, within which Washington and other cities are located, are considerable. We are putting our first line of defense at the mouth of the Chesapeake, at the Capes. But that does not eliminate those defenses from the category of coast defenses, merely because they are so far back from the first line.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And how about League Island, on the Delaware, which is about 90 miles from the ocean? Would the coast defense at the mouth of the Delaware River keep the aircraft from coming up there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the purpose of those defenses is to protect them against the assaults of a naval force, they are certainly coast defenses. That is what these antiaircraft guns are for.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Does not the Chair think he has heard enough discussion to enable him to rule? [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will determine for itself when has had sufficient information. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The mere fact that the guns for coast defenses are not right on the seashore does not affect their character, because we are providing, Mr. Chairman, this year, in the fortification bill for the installation on the island of Hawaii, in the center of the island, high-angled fire guns as a part of the coast defenses. They are not located right down on the beach. They are located about the center of the island. They are to have an all-round fire. They are to have an all-round fire for the purpose of repelling attempts of ships to come near enough to the coast at any point to protect landing parties. Those guns are in the center of the island, not down on the coast. are to have antiaircraft guns to protect them, because they are in the center of the island. That does not change their character as coast defenses.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.
Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble with the whole proposition is that the language that the point of order has been made to is worded as to make it very much broader than any question of antiaircraft guns at some particular place. It is an attempt to appropriate money for the general purposes of the defense of all naval stations. Under it you could take the million dollars and build emplacements and put in guns of large caliber.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. How about the naval station at Guantanamo, Cuba?

Mr. FITZGERALD. As to the coast defense there

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Is there any coast defense

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The mere fact that some place under the jurisdiction of the United States should be or some time may be fortified does not deprive the Committee on Appropriations of jurisdiction to control the appropriations for that purpose whenever it may be determined to be advisable for the United States to defend it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman answer me another question?

Mr. FITZGERALD.

Yes. Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I understood as a part of his argument that the gentleman said these antiaircraft guns would not be installed on the naval stations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not necessarily.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Not necessarily, but at some distance, in order to get the greater range. Where would we install an antiaircraft gun to defend a battleship?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I were putting them up, I would put them on the ship, not in the ship or beside the ship. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the words coast defenses" have no double construction. They mean to defend our coasts against attack, and the rule of all construction is that the investiture of the subject in one committee excludes all other committees unless exception is made to the rule, and I find no exception. The entire system of coast defense is in the charge and under the direction and under the control of the Committee on Coast Defenses and Fortifications, otherwise some exception should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] is directed to the paragraph contained on page 20, lines 11 and "For the defense of naval stations, $1,000,000."

A great deal has been said in the arguments to the Chair about what this million dollars was to be expended for, but the Chair has no information. The language is so broad that it might be expended for a 16-inch gun or any other instrument for the protection of the navy yard.

Now, under the rules of the House the Committee on Naval Affairs is given jurisdiction over the Naval Establishment, which, of course, includes the naval stations and certain appropriations; but, on the other hand, the rules of the House gives the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction over fortifications and coast defenses to appropriate for those purposes. A naval station is necessarily situated somewhere near the coast, if not on it, and, in the opinion of the Chair, this language in the paragraph is so broad that it unquestionably throws it within the jurisdiction of another committee of the House, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 20, after line 10, insert the following:

"Naval stations: To provide for antiaircraft guns at naval stations, $1,000,000."

Mr. MANN. "For antiaircraft guns at naval stations," it should be

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes; antiaircraft guns. The Clerk read as follows:

Naval stations: To provide antiaircraft guns and ammunition at naval stations, $1,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$3,800,-[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order against the original amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. It is too late for the point of order now. Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the amendment has not been reported. A man can not report an amendment by stating it himself,
Mr. PADGETT. The amendment to the amendment is in order if the amendment itself is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee has not been reported.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is not making a point of order to my amendment. He is making a point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

The CHAIRMAN. Until the amendment to the amendment is reported, the Chair thinks the gentleman from New York is within his rights. Mr. MANN. I think we should have a decision on the point of

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from New York makes a point of order, the Chair thinks he has a right to do so.

Mr. MANN. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York state his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that it is a part of the coast defense to provide antinircraft guns for these naval stations and not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MANN. The ruling of the Chair has practically determined that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules-

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair has not ruled.

Mr. MANN. The Chair has overruled the point of order. The gentleman was not listening to the Chair. He was listening to

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was trying to listen to the impossible variations of the gentleman from Illinois. I can not pay attention to anybody else and keep track of him and know where I am at. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I am glad to keep the gentleman busy. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair would like to have the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval stations: To provide antiaircraft guns and ammunition at naval stations, $1,000,000.

Mr. MANN. I ask leave to strike out the language "and am-

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Ammunition is provided for

Mr. PADGETT. No; they want ammunition also for these 118 guns.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. To this amendment the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes the point of order, on the ground, as the Chair understands him, that this would also infringe upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, which has jurisdiction of appropriations for fortifications and coast defenses. The Chair in his former ruling indicated, if he did not expressly say, that expenditures for the defense of naval stations within those stations were, in his opinion, within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Therefore the!

Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from

New York, and the question is on the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. I have a letter from the department, one of the series I have been offering, in which it is stated that this is to permit of increasing the number of antiaircraft guns assigned to each station from two to three, and to make adequate provision for ammunition; for 118 additional 3-inch antiaircraft guns, $1,062,000; ammunition for 118 guns, $1,003,000; necessary to complete the original project, as under the original estimate, $735,000, which is on account of the increased cost of material, labor, and so forth, since the estimates were submitted, making the total that I offered in my amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. Where will these guns be manufactured?

Mr. PADGETT. As stated in a letter which I showed a while ago, they are expecting to make many of them at the gun

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the capacity of the gun factory for antiaircraft guns, in addition to the other work it is doing?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell the gentleman about that. They stated that they were enlarging their capacity. I do not know what the enlarged capacity will be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How long does it take to turn out one of these guns?

Mr. PADGETT. A short time. They manufacture them pretty rapidly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is a short time? Mr. PADGETT. I do not know exactly. Mr. FITZGERALD. How many months?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will pardon me, the hearing disclosed that 104 of them can be manufactured inside of one year. I do not know whether they are all to be made here

Mr. FITZGERALD. You are adding 118?

Mr. SHERLEY. The statement read on the floor did not say that the Navy Department was in a position to make anything like this number.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. What difference does it make where they come from, as long as we get them?

Mr. SHERLEY. The testimony showed that they were making steel forgings, and expected to enlarge the plant, and they thought at least this number might be obtained within a year. The inference was rather that they would be obtained from private manufacturers.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Suppose they are.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to get some information. I may not get it, but I intend to seek it. The original recommendation of the committee for $1,000,000 was to provide for 114 guns?

Mr. PADGETT. One hundred and four.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And this $3,800,000 will provide how many?

Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and twenty-two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is an increase of more than 100 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. One hundred and eighteen additional guns, and ammunition for the additional 118, and then $735,000 is needed to carry out the project as originally estimated, owing to the increased cost of material and of labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the testimony show that the 104 originally requested can be manufactured or procured within one year

Mr. PADGETT. They think they can get them within one year, and more besides. They can get them from private fac-

Mr. FITZGERALD. How long will it take to get the 224 that are now requested?

Mr. PADGETT. I think they can get them completed within the next two years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman, or anybody on the committee, any information at all as to how long it will take, and where they can be obtained, with the facilities they have for constructing them?

Mr. PADGETT. They are prepared to make some at the gun factory and some at the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What facilities has the gun factory to make these guns?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What private concerns can manufacture

Mr. PADGETT. The Bethlehem Steel Co. and the Midvale

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where have the antiaircraft guns that have been installed on vessels of the fleet been manufactured?

Mr. PADGETT. Most of them, I think, were made at the Midvale Steel Co. and the Bethlehem Steel Co.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. The original recommendation of the committee was for $1,000,000, and that is contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. As far as I can learn, the department believes that it can obtain the 104 guns provided for in the million dollars within a year. It can not expend, then, any of the additional money within the time within which this bill will be in operaton.

This is a time, Mr. Chairman, when the highest and most effective duty which this House can perform to the country is to refrain from being swept off its feet by undue exhilaration and excitement. This House should perform its work in a calm manner. If we are to begin now very radically to increase appropriations in every quarter without any more information about them than has been submitted in connection with this particular amendment, before the Congress adjourns it will have provided a sum of money that can not be wisely or beneficially expended, and the inclination and temptation will be to spend it in a manner that will not be beneficial or wise or

I am prepared, as I believe all the Members of the House are, to vote for all the money required, either now or under any emergency that may arise, for public defense. But I do not intend to be so worked up as to completely lose my head.

Only 10 days or so ago an estimate was before the Committee on Appropriations for $7,000,000 to provide quarters for the first two increments of the number of men authorized in the national-defense act. If I recall correctly, the national-defense act authorized an increase of 168,000 men. Nobody seemed to know much about it; and the officials of the War Department were instructed to prepare a complete detailed statement of all the quarters, accommodations, and improve-ments that would be required for the housing of 168,000 men, with detailed estimates of the cost. We received that informa-tion the other day, and it will cost $95,000,000.

The Secretary of War refused to approve the estimate, and directed the Quartermaster General to prepare plans for a cheaper construction, and a scheme has been outlined that is estimated will cost $34,000,000. The department has not yet approved that plan, but it is under consideration. In these days of excitement, when possibly grave and serious times are before the country, it is important that Members of Congress act intelligently and calmly and compel the military authorities to furnish complete and accurate information in connection with all requests for money for national defense. Otherwise the result will be that we shall provide enormous sums of money without the slightest resulting benefit. When the time of peril arrives, instead of having what the country expects adequate returns for the money-we will be commencing where we imagined we started a year or so ago.

A million dollars in this bill at this time will enable the department to do everything it can possibly do to obtain these antiaircraft guns. If any additional money is necessary, the department can submit the information to Congress, so that we can justify what we do and not proceed in the dark.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, this is not the time for quibbling. The President of the United States having severed diplomatic relations between our Government and the imperial German Government, the die is cast, and it now remains for Germany, whose friendship we value, to decide whether or not there shall be war between our country and her own. accordance with the warning given by the President, if an American ship is sunk or an American life lost through any overt act against the rights of the United States, war will be declared.

These are history-making and soul-stirring days in the Congress; the Nation's legislators find themselves suddenly confronted with duties of such import and solemnity that all dividing lines must be lost sight of, and the one great goal to which we must bend our every energy and give the best there is in us—and more no man can give—is the protection of honor, home, and Nation, with the utmost fairness to every other country on the face of the earth.

That there will be differences of opinion and expression given thereto goes without saying, but that any man of us, under the grave responsibility now resting upon this Congress and the administration, can fail to rise to his full height and do his full duty as he sees it, is inconceivable. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I trust the proposed amendment will prevail.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it does not matter how great the emergency may be, we are supposed to be here to consider the question, and it will be impossible for us to give consideration to the questions that are presented to us unless we have the information. I do not conceive it to be my duty to vote blindly on any question that comes here for consideration, and I believe that the Committee on Naval Affairs ought not to present to this House for its action a proposition which it does not itself understand. The mere statement that two or three or five million dollars is needed, coming from the Naval Affairs Committee, without any information as to what it is to be used for, ought not to receive the favorable consideration of this House. I will go as far as any man in the United States to make proper provision for the national defense, and I will make no quibble as to what ought to be done when the occasion arises, but even then I see no reason why I should not know what I am giving consideration to. I pay taxes and other people pay taxes. We have just passed a bill carrying $950,000,000 for new revenue, and we are already obligated to spend $2,336,000,000 during the Taxes are being imposed upon the backs of an coming year. already overburdened people beyond their ability to pay them. If we can accomplish the object sought by giving the necessary authority to do the thing that is needed to be done by the expenditure of $1,000,000, why expend $3,000,000? The danger is that we are going to be carried off our feet, that we are going to lose our heads, that we are not going to give consideration to the questions before us, that we are going to take the word of somebody as to what ought to be done without claiming the right to give consideration to its propriety.

The American people are patriotic. They are long-suffering; they are patient; they are peaceful and are in favor of peace. They are in favor of defending their honor, but not in favor of squandering their money unnecessarily even to do that; and we, as the conservators of the rights of the American people, have a duty to perform, and we ought to perform it without fear or We ought not to be reckless in our expenditure of the public money in order to appeal to the jingos of the country and get our names in the newspapers. I yield to no man in my patriotic devotion to America's honor or her rights, but I demand the right as one Member of this House to conserve the finances of the country while we are making appropriations to conserve the Nation's honor. The mere statement of the need by any man without explanation does not appeal to me, and I do not propose to sit in my place as a Member of this House and vote blindly for any money unless I know what it is for, how it is to be used, and why we should do it. No man does that in his own business, and I take it for granted that we are here to speak for the business of the people of America, and while speaking for the business of the people of America we are obligated to protect their rights while we are making appropriations to protect and preserve the institutions and the honor of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not excited. I have not lost my head, and I am as cool as a cucumber, determined to do everything I can to keep the country out of war; but, after all, there is some danger of conflict. We do not know what the balance of the day or what the morrow may bring to us. We have propositions to increase a good many appropriations. will have a great many more such propositions presented to us in reference to both the Army and the Navy. I think we can afford to anticipate a little the appropriations which may be expended by the Navy in providing early those things which must be provided in any event, even if we remain at peace, within the course of two or three years. Take the item before the House. The bill carried an item intended to provide antiaircraft guns for defense of the navy yards to the extent of $1,000,000. It is proposed now to increase the sum-I do not know how much, but two or three million dollars more. It does not take a wise man to know that if we should get into any kind of conflict at all we will need more than that for antiaircraft guns for our navy yards and a great deal more for New York City.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not now. Mr. FITZGERALD. I just wish to ask him where these aircraft are coming from?

Mr. MANN. I shall yield to the gentleman in a moment. do not know very much about the antiaircraft guns. I would not know one if I saw it, and I do not think anybody here has ever seen one. But I am not so blind that I have not been able to read some things, nor so deaf that I have not been able to hear some things about the progress of aircraft and antiaircraft guns on the other side of the water. It is unquestionably true that we will have antiaircraft guns in the Army. We ought to have them, and we ought to have more aircraft in the Army. will have antiaircraft guns in the Navy, and we ought to have them if we have a Navy at all. If we are to have these things within the course of a series of years, under existing circumstances we would better get them as fast as they can be supplied to us now. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Tennessee going to offer another amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I just want to explain this for a The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was complaining that he was in the dark. I regret that he did not hear the statement which I made when I stated that it was contemplated originally to supply 104 guns, or two for a station.

Mr. MADDEN. I heard it all.
Mr. PADGETT. We are now proposing to supply 118 additional, and make it three, and for the ammunition of those guns, which was not included for the original guns, $1,300,000, and on account of the increased cost of labor and material, $735,000, which sums make the amount of the amendment which I have With that statement, with what is current in the country as to the uses of aircraft and the necessity for antiaircraft guns for defense, and our condition and the situation that confronts us, I do not see well how the gentleman is in the dark.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has given no reason for the increased number, and neither has he given any information as to when we are likely to be able to get them.

Mr. PADGETT. We will get them just as quickly as we can. We need them all, putting one more at each of the different stations.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes,
Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell us who sent this statement here which he read?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy sent it to me, and Admiral Earl presented it to me this morning in a very urgent appeal, and he marked it "absolutely necessary" the conditions that have been brought about in the last few days. The gentleman knows that when the committee was considering the matter we were appropriating an amount for the year, expecting others to follow in the subsequent years.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; 102 guns, which we considered building, and for which we recommended an appropriation to this House: but that would not construct one-half of the antiaircraft guns necessary, in the judgment of the military officers, to defend our magazines and our stores of ammunition.

Mr. PADGETT. We need many, many more, Mr. BUTLER. And if we are to be in danger we need those guns, and need them at once.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if they have determined on any type of guns to be used and for which we are asked to appropriate?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that has been decided upon and they are making them. Admiral Strauss told me that they had a gun that would shoot straight up 20,000 feet.

Mr. McKENZIE. One other question. Can this sum-

Mr. BUTLER. Five miles.
Mr. PADGETT. That is too far up.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Twenty-two thousand feet. Mr. PADGETT. Shoot up accurately 20,000 feet. I do not want to mislead the committee.

Mr. McKENZIE. Could these guns be utilized for any other purpose in the matter of national defense, such as field guns-

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; they can be used for any purpose. The difference is in the mounting. For aircraft they mount them to shoot straight up instead of at an oblique angle.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand, but will they be so constructed that they could be used by mounting them on wheels? Mr. PADGETT. Certainly. If they put them on different mountings, they would be valuable for other purposes. Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. Has the gentleman any provision in the bill requiring searchlights to be used in connection with these guns? As I understand it, these antiaircraft guns are supplied with searchlights so as to find the aircraft in the nighttime.

Mr. PADGETT. I believe they have them on all the guns, and that is included in the manufacture, but I could not positively tell the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. What is the caliber of the antiaircraft guns?

Mr. PADGETT. Three inch.

Mr. GARDNER. Three and eight-tenths inches?

Mr. PADGETT. No; 3 inch.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported. I think there is a provision left out that has been in all other similar amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment offered by the gen-tleman from Illinois, to which the gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will now report.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee was again reported.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. Mr. Chairman, since I have been here I do not think that I have ever voted against any reasonable provision that has been offered as an amendment or by way of an original appropriation for the development of our Navy. tried on two occasions here to get the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to answer questions in regard to this proposed appropriation, and, as I can not get him to answer me, I shall feel compelled to vote against it. As I understand the situation now, the gentleman has declined repeatedly-

Mr. PADGETT rose.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman has declined repeatedly to yield to me.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I have not declined repeatedly, because others were asking, and they rose before the gentleman did.

Mr. RAGSDALE. But at the same time while I was on the floor of the House the chairman of the committee took his seat, knowing I wanted some information. Now, my position is simply this: The chairman of the committee states that this appropriation is called for because of recent circumstances, because of conditions which have just arisen.

Now, I know of nothing that has arisen recently in the history of this country that might call for the use of any weapon of this kind unless it has been the breach with Germany. to this time I think that, while I have read extensively as to the utilization of antiaircraft guns against aircraft, I never yet read of any vessel in the air that has been able to cross the water. It is not contemplated at this time that there is a possible breach with any country on earth with the United States as far as I am able to learn other than Germany. To my mind, it is incomprehensible to believe that Germany can send aircraft across the water and attack us here. If she can not send aircraft across the water at this time

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I have but five minutes; I am sorry. she can not send aircraft across the water to attack us and attack our naval stations at this time, if there is no hostile nation on this side of the water that is going to build aircraft that can possibly attack us, if there is not a possibility as far as I can see that there is any hostile government that can send any great fleet across the water to attack us now, where is the wisdom in making these enormous appropriations without any study, but only by reason of the sudden request from the Navy To my mind, it seems inexplicable, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the money we have to spend will be put in fast destroyers, in a fleet of craft that can go on the water and protect American rights and American commerce, and we shall not be frightened by bugbears into spending our money around these naval stations, where no danger now exists or can exist in the case of a war with Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After The Chair hears none.

a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for antiaircraft as provided for in the bill was made, of course, to carry out a regular building program outlined by the Navy Department that would in their judgment meet the demands and that in their judgment they thought they could get through this House.

There is not any question but the naval officials look all the time to the temper of the House and base their recommendations on what they want, as stated before our committee, on what they think they can get. They thought that they could get $1,000,000 for antiaircraft guns before this war scare

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] touched the button when he said: "If we get into trouble with Germany, how is she going to get any aircraft over here?" She can not get milk over there for her babies. Submarines do not carry aircraft. It is an attempt on the part of the Navy Department and Navy officials to take advantage of the conditions in the House and the temper of the country to increase the appropria-tion. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] was right when he said, just like I said the other day, with reference to the battleships: "Let us put the appropriation into things that we will need to meet the emergency that seemingly confronts or may confront us and not let the naval officials take advantage of an excited condition to push up what they want in the way of regular naval construction."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, for many years have been urging the improvement of waterways along the Atlantic seaboard with the view of preparing this country for just such an emergency as now confronts us. It may be that it will be found extremely advisable before this war preparation is over to make appropriations, and liberal appropriations, for the opening up of the miserable canals that now hinder and endanger our war craft along the Atlantic seaboard. It may be that gentlemen who have been talking economy on this line will be singing another song if it shall be found in the "bottling" up of our ships that we have not prepared ourselves in this regard. Gentlemen talk economy now after the President of the United States has been here to stir us up on this question of putting the country in condition. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. C.M.LA-WAY] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] differing with their President and their party, still harp upon economy, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] harmonizes for a moment with them, when the gunboats of the United States are said to be hovering around the port of New York, fearing that some enemy may blow up one of the bridges across the East River and impede navigation for years to come.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman pardon me? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not just now. The gentleman is talking economy in spite of the recommendation of his President and in spite of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman knows that statement is not true, if he listened to what I said.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I heard the gentleman say that this was not the time to indulge in this expenditure for antiair-

Mr. RAGSDALE. But expend it in some other way and in

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If my memory is not awry, the gentleman also contended that there could be no possible invasion of this country by aircraft.

Mr. RAGSDALE. From Germany at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not care from where. The gentleman is evidently protecting himself behind the 3,000-mile ocean limit, but yet the gentleman knows that Canada is on the

The gentleman has himself seen or, if not, he has read of the visitation of the Deutschland. He knows that 3,000 miles is not impossible for a submarine. He has already witnessed what he did not believe, that the submarine can come across The gentleman may find that even the strong line of English battleships may be penetrated some day and that aircraft may be landed on the Canadian coast. The gentleman talks about Germany. He does not have to worry about Germany any more than he has to worry about the other great countries of the world. Canada is being prepared to take care of itself, and if the gentleman will study the facts he will find that in the matter of canals and approaches to the cities, and in rivers and waterways Canada these last few years has put itself far in advance of the United States. It might be well to consider the Canadian border.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a possible vantage ground for submarines and for aerial fleets. And they might come from the Mexican border. We have not quite captured Mexico yet. We are discussing a bigger war than the war conducted with Mexico, I would say to the gentleman, but it is possible that some of these aircraft may come from over the Mexican border, as well as from the Canadian border, or they might come from ships at sea. The British line on the ocean or our own line of ships might be penetrated. We can not tell. Yet the gentleman would stand unprotected against these hostile aircraft for a paltry $3,000,000. The Department of the Navy comes to this House and asks for this appropriation to properly prepare itself. We can not get ready in a month; we can not get ready in a year. Let us have the money now and get down to business. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr.

KAHN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CAL-LAWAY] evidently have not been reading the newspapers of the country recently. [Laughter.] If they had been reading them, they would have seen articles showing that a German raider has stolen through the cordon of English battleships and is now somewhere in the Atlantic Ocean seizing the vessels of the allied belligerent nations wherever it finds them. Three years ago an experiment was tried in the Bay of San Francisco to show that it was not a difficult feat for an aviator to fly from the deck of a ship, sail through the air for some time, and ultimately land on the deck of the ship again. Brig. Gen. Squier testified before the Committee on Military Affairs recently that an enemy ship could lie off 300 miles from the city of New York, and could easily send a number of flying machines into the city of New York; that unless we were ready to shoot them down with antiaircraft guns, they could do incalculable damage in the financial district in 10 minutes' time. That was the state-ment made to the Military Committee by the distinguished officer who was at the battle front in Europe, who witnessed the efforts of the German flyers to do serious damage in England, and who had special facilities for observing the damage that was being done by enemy aircraft. The time has come when we should have these antiaircraft guns in the United States. This is no occasion, no time, I take it, to stand upon technicalities. We need some of these effective and efficient weapons, and the sooner we get them the better for our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting before the dollar mark of the amendment the language, "to be available until June 30, 1920."

Mr. PADGETT. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, before the dollar mark, the words "to be available until June 30, 1920."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I can see some reason for enlarging these estimates to provide for the exigencies of war in case we are brought into the maelstrom of the European conflict, but I doubt whether we should provide large future appropriations that may not be necessary in case we can avoid the undesirable entrance into the war. I can understand where we might desire to appropriate large sums for ammunition, but what is the need of appropriating money for these aircraft for the defense of our naval stations which will run into the year 1920?

Mr. PADGETT. This is to fix a limitation at that time, Under the existing law the obligation period would run to July 1, 1918.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it run to July 30, 1920, in case contracts were entered into during the next fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. No. If contracts were entered into we could obligate the money until July 1, 1918, and then they would have until June 30, 1919, in which to make payments; and this is to allow an additional year to complete the whole contract. They could go ahead and obligate it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has stated that these increases recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, aggregating something like $13,000,000, are occasioned by the fear and scare arising out of the danger of eventualities with Germany. If those eventualities should not happen, what is the reason why these appropriations should run into millions and perhaps hundreds of millions?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, we are making the appropriations. We think it would be expedient to allow them ample time.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the gentleman's statement, these allowances are on account of the emergency and exigent conditions. That emergency might not exist when the next appropriation bill comes up for consideration, I think, Mr. Chairman, there is no need of having this made available until July 30, 1920, and I shall feel constrained to make the point of

Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have tried to obtain information, but I have not received any from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, along the line of what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] has said, I would like to suggest to the Chairman of the Naval Committee that in the event of war we could pass a resolution appropriating perhaps a billion dollars, so that all this little stuff would not amount to anything. This is only to put more in the naval bill than you would otherwise get into it. I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman from Wisconsin says. I think it is a scheme to get more money than you would otherwise get. the event of war you would get all you want, and there would be no question about it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentle-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let me get a practical proposition before the committee. We are making an appropriation for the next fiscal year. It is likely that if we should have a declaration of war before the 4th of March, which I do not believe will happen, we would provide a lot of additional appropriations; and it is barely possible, although I think not probable, that we would then have an extra session of Congress

After all, these appropriations that we are making now are largely increased upon the contingency of war occurring-the active part of it, real war-when Congress is not in session, without making additional appropriations. I do not think this item will be expended unless we have war. I would much prefer to leave the Navy Department open not to expend the item than to tell them that unless they expended it in the next year they can not have it, because if you do that they will be sure to let contracts for the total amount, in which case it runs over anyhow

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he knows-and if he does not know, nobody

Mr. MANN. That does not follow-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long it will take to make these

Mr. MANN. I do not know, but it is stated that they can make 104 guns in the next year. But this is perfectly patent to everyone that no one can tell how long it will take to get guns or ammunition under stress of conditions growing out of war or fear of war, because we do a great many things much faster under such conditions than we do normally.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If you can not make them in less than a year, why, then, the stress will be over.

Mr. MANN. I hope so. But I am talking about a practical proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So am I.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly certain in my mind that if the Navy Department is told, "You have this appropriation"—they want the antiaircraft guns, with authority to contract for them—that if they only have the appropriation available for a year in which to make contracts, they will make the contracts covering the entire appropriation within the year, in which case they would spend the money within the next year or two years. I prefer to give them three years' time now within which to spend the money, under the theory that if they do not have war it will not be spent at once.

it will not be spent at once.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if they are going to make these guns, why not make this money available now?

Mr. MANN. Well, it ought to be; but it is not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague a question, whether, in case we merely make this appropriation available for the present fiscal year, they would not be able before the close of that fiscal year to enter into contractual obligations for a period of two years following the contractual obligations for a period of two years following the close of the fiscal year?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and that was what I was trying to obviate. Mr. STAFFORD. And also whether Congress will not be in session, in case an exigency arises, so that it can make available adequate amounts to provide for the contingency the gentleman has referred to?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman misunderstands me. We have already decided the amount of the appropriation. It is now available only for one year after July 1. I do not want to force the Navy to make contracts for the entire expenditure unless there is going to be a war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the Navy Department is asking for this increased appropriation with the idea that there will be an exigency arising that will require the expenditure of this money in the near future. If such an exigency does arise, then they should have all the money. If that exigency does not arise, then we, as guardians of the people's Treasury, ought not to allow them to spend this money in the following two years, when the exigency does not exist. Therefore I make the point of order.

IANN. We have already determined the amount of The gentleman's position is utterly unreasonable. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. PADGETT. All debate is closed.

Mr. PADGETT. All debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. I move that the committee do now rise for a short time. The Speaker wishes to have the military appropriation bill reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Byrns of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632) and had come to no resolution thereon.

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 20783) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which was read the first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1432), ordered to be printed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserves all points of order on the bill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632), with Mr. Byrns of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition for ships of the Navy: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ammunition for issue to ships, $1,500,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the words to be available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves

a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity for having a continuing appropriation, when we can increase the amount, if it is necessary, at a subsequent session?

Mr. PADGETT. This is for the making of shells, a work which runs over a year, and sometimes longer than that. a very difficult matter, and this language has been carried in the bill, I know personally, during the 12 years I have been on the We are simply doing what has been done heretocommittee. fore. I hope the gentleman will not interfere with the established practice with reference to this.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman put some limitation of date on that? This is indefinite as to time. I have no objection to an additional year.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman knows that we are starting a projectile factory of our own, and that will take perhaps a year. We are providing the money for the next fiscal year to complete that. That has got to get into operation. I believe if I were the gentleman I would not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman expect to offer an amendment to increase this fivefold, more or less?

Mr. PADGETT. No; they have asked for an increase, but I am not going to ask for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there ought to be some limitation-say, not later than July 1, 1920.

Mr. PADGETT. It has been running this way during the whole 12 years that I have been on the committee. There has been no abuse of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year we appropriated for this purpose $13,720,000, and this year we appropriate only $1.500,000. there a considerable amount of the $13,720,000 still available for expenditure?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes. It is all available, because it was only appropriated the 29th of August, and contracts had to be let. That was nearly all for shells.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much of the amount heretofore appropriated is now available for use under this item?

Mr. PADGETT. The whole of the $13,000,000 is available. Mr. STAFFORD. Are any appropriations made in prior years available?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. I think they have obligated all the preceding appropriations,

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the statement of the chairman of the committee that he does not intend to increase the amount under the hysteria of the moment I will not press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. Mr. RAGSDALE. I renew it.

Mr. KELLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman how much more the department wants?

Mr. PADGETT. A couple of million dollars more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr.

RAGSDALE] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] exhibited a great deal of glee in criticizing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway] and myself, stating that we differed from the Democratic administration. If we have differed from the Democratic administration by asking for judicious expenditures, and that they may be expended where they will bring the greatest amount of good at the present moment to American commerce, certainly we did not disagree with the gentlemen on this side of the Chamber and with this administration when we voted to provide the taxes that were necessary to carry on the enormous propaganda that the gentleman from Philadelphia so gladly joins in now unloading on the people of this country. He is willing to vote every dollar out of the Treasury that he can, but he is unwilling to stand by this administration in voting the taxes that are necessary to meet the deficit that he now knows exists in the Treasury.

When the devil was sick,
The devil a saint would be;
When the devil got well,
The devil a saint was he.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman would not yield to me, and he ought not to ask the same courtesy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to correct the gentleman's poetry.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I want to ask the gentleman to keep quiet, as he compelled me to do. He looks beautiful when he is sitting down. He is rather noisy when he is on his feet. The gentleman is on his feet so much that it is hard to find him when he looks well. He is usually noisy. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] speaks of the unjustifiable attacks on improvements for rivers and harbors. Why, if the gentleman had a memory he would know that I have assisted him in every single fight he has made for them.

I do not think the gentleman can record a single instance in which I have ever voted against a river and harbor improvement since I have been here in Congress. I have joined the gentleman in voting for river and harbor improvements. But by increasing the amount of expenditures that are made here to-day for these purposes carried in this bill, when we know that this money will not be utilized for years to come, do you realize that you will never get your river and harbor bill through the Senate, and that you will never get your public-building bill through the Senate? The people in the interior of this country who are entitled to some recognition are going to find themselves sacrificed in this bill, which justifies itself only by a war scare, when the appropriations can not be utilized for years to come, as everybody on this floor knows, because the chairman of the Naval Committee admits it.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] talks about our getting into trouble with some other country. If he reads the newspapers, as I read the newspapers, he will find the latest issues of the press carry news of the cheers in Russia for the United States, cheers for the United States in England, cheers for the United States in France, and all countries of the world that are not now training with the central powers. It is important for us not to be mixed up with any of them. If there is any trouble in the future, it is going to be with Germany, and everybody knows it; and everybody knows that Germany can not get her warships beyond the line of defense, and if they do that with her limited steam power if once they break through they never will get back.

When the gentleman from California knows that fact, and that whenever they have come out they have been driven to cover, it is ludicrous for a well-informed gentleman, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, to advance that lame excuse to justify his position. Everybody knows that Germany does not dare go on the high seas, and the talk of launching aircraft from the deck of some of her great vessels is absolutely ludicrous when made by any well-informed man. Everybody knows that; and when gentlemen come here in the hysteria of the moment and try to increase appropriations in a temporary fit of excitement by which anything is justified, to my mind they but rebuke themselves in principle and rebuke those who ask wise and judicious expenditures from the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is a point of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserved a point of order. Does the gentleman from South Carolina insist on his point of order?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] have one minute more in order that I may ask him some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina have one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman remember having read in the newspapers within the last two weeks that a number of German raiders have been operating in the Atlantic Ocean and seizing vessels of the belligerents?

Mr. RAGSDALE, I will say to the gentleman that I do not propose to vote for appropriation of the money of the people whom we tax to get it on an unsupported newspaper story. I have no definite information from the Secretary of the Navy or from the War Department or from the Naval Committee as to that. Will the gentleman tax the people whom he represents on unsupported newspaper scare stories? [Applause on the Democratic side.

Mr. KAHN. No. Does the gentleman mean to say that the reports that have been published about the vessels that have been captured by the raiders are false?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I mean to say that I have no definite information upon which they base their reports and their action, and that neither of the departments, the Secretary of War nor the Secretary of the Navy, has asked for this appropriation on that basis. I will ask the gentleman has he been called upon to make appropriations for antiaircraft guns by reason of these raiders?

Mr. KAHN. The War Department has called to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs the fact that it is desirable to appropriate for antiaircraft guns and antiaircraft ammunition, and the Committee on Military Affairs has undertaken to make such appropriations.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes; but we are not considering that bill;

we are considering the antiaircraft guns for the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not care to answer the gentleman from South Carolina, except to say this, that if I felt as thoroughly satisfied about the impotency of Germany as he does I might not vote for any additional appropriations for the Navy of the United States. But having recalled the fact that German navigators penetrated the vast ocean and got through the lines of the British fleet and landed safely on these shores with one little submarine craft—the Deutschland—I do not minimize the ability of the German navigator. Having read in the newspapers reports of numerous battles in the air between German, English, and French, I am not quite satisfied that the ingenuity and efficiency of the German aircraft sailor ought to be discounted. When we talk about entering a contest with Germany or any other nation we should consider these things.

If the gentleman from South Carolina is right about the incompetency of Germany to reach the Canadian shores through British lines, or to reach the shores of the United States direct, I would like to know why the President of the United States has given us this war scare? My understanding of his address was that he came here because Germany made the simple announcement that it proposed to throw a line of submarines around the British coast. If the gentleman thinks that Germany is not worth considering in this matter, then I do not quite understand why the President of the United States, whom we are all expected to support, broke diplomatic relations with Germany and then came here to tell us about it. Germany seems to have given Great Britain a scare along with the United States.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it is high time we got back to the days of George Washington and James Madison and Thomas Jefferson and at least perfected some of the preparation plans that they laid down. We have not improved some of the natural avenues of communication which they planned, lo, in these 100 years, and have some canal approaches of great moment now that have stood unimproved almost that long. With announcements that we are going to tax the people $400,000,000 in a revenue bill to meet ordinary and some extraordinary expenses, and with bills introduced to tax the people $500,000,000 more for war purposes, and possibly $500,000,000 beyond that, we ought to make some progress in real preparedness. We have not now sufficient men to man the ships that we propose to put upon the seas to defend the honor of the United States. If we must raise the money we can raise it. The people seem to have declared for this thing. The cry has gone up to "stand by the President." That means expense; the people understand that they must pay if the President is to be supported in this crisis. We can not stop short of preparing ourselves with submarines and with aeroplanes and with guns for both these implements of war. If we expect to go into a real war we must be prepared to meet men already in the field, who are not theorists, but who are practical men of war. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr., Moore]. We have spent 2 hours and 20 minutes

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield until I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman can make it two minutes, so far as I am concerned, because I am not going to talk over that long.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well, two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, we have spent 2 hours and 20 minutes discussing a proposition that is not before the House. We have already adopted the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee appropriating the amount indicated. We had points of order raised and withdrawn, raised and withdrawn. The original subject was antiaircraft guns. Good God! If we keep on here talking about the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee, about Charleston, S. C., and Philadelphia and New York, we will be shot to pieces before we know it. May I now, as a humble Member of this body, ask that we stop this talk fest and get down to business and read a few pages and see if we can not do something toward real preparedness. [Applause.]
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by increasing the amount for ammunition issued to the ships from $1,500,000 to $3,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 15, amend by striking out "$1,500,000" and inserting "$3,500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gordon) there were—ayes 56, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Torpedoes and appliances: For the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, to be available until June 30, 1920, $800,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, under "Torpedoes and appliances," line 22, strike out "$800,000" and insert "$1,049,280."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, that increases the amount for torpedoes by $289,000. It is to replace the old short-range torpedoes, and to replace torpedoes that have been lost in torpedo practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to re-turn to page 14 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amend-

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. What is the amendment? Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is for a naval training station at Key West, Fla. I thought it came under the naval training stations, but I find it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to page 14 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I stated to the gentleman that I did not want to commence to turn back in the bill at this time, that we would have to go back in the bill at other times, and when we were doing that I would not object to turning back for him in order that he might present his motion, although I did not say that I would favor or agree to his proposition. I do not want to break into the procedure of the bill at this time, and I will ask the gentleman to withdraw his request and let it come in when we are turning back for other matters which we have passed.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I would rather do it now. want to stay here, but it will not take very much time, I think. I think we will get through more quickly by doing it now than doing it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, has this amendment been recommended by the chairman?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 14. after line 17, by inserting the following:

"Naval training station, Florida; maintenance of naval training station, Key West; labor and material; building and repairing wharves; dredging channels; repairs to causeways and sea walls; general care, repair, and improvements of grounds, buildings, and wharves; wharfage, ferriage, and incidental expenses necessary thereto; purchase of live stock and attendance on same; wagons, carts, and all necessary implements; tools and repairs to same and maintenance of same; fire engines and extinguishers; gymnastic implements; models and other articles needed in instruction of apprentice seamen; printing outfit and material and maintenance of same; lighting; stationery, books, school books, and periodicals; for increasing the efficiency and perfecting the present fortifications; fresh water and washing; packing books and material; and all other continued expenses; lectures and suitable entertainments for apprentice seamen; suitable vessel or battle cruiser for training naval militia; in all, $1,000,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under direction of the Secretary of the Navy for physical training, instruction, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not exceed $6,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Let the gentleman reserve the right to object for five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not going to cut the gentleman from Florida off.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object and ask that the gentleman proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested by some of my colleagues

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that he has not finished the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object to unanimous consent to return, and I would ask that the gentleman may have five minutes in which to address the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Chair please instruct me how you can make a reservation here. You have either to object or you do not object to the return. I would like for the gentleman from Tennessee to ask unanimous consent of the committee that the gentleman may make a statement. I do not think the gentleman can make an objection and then withhold it.

Mr. PADGETT. I think we can reserve the right to object to return and let the gentleman make his speech by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow the Chair to make a suggestion, that if he intends to object to the return, let him object now. The gentleman from Florida can secure his time by a pro forma amendment at a later paragraph in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made an objection.

Mr. SEARS. If the gentleman will reserve it so I can have five minutes

Mr. BUTLER. Notwithstanding the objection I have made. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sears] may address the committee for five minutes, without prejudice to the objection made to his request to return, made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested by some of my colleagues perhaps something was omitted from the amendment. If it was, it was not my fault because I laboriously followed the provisions as printed in the bill upon which the committee has just passed. I wanted the 5 minutes—I would like to have 10 now-to explain to the committee this proposition, and I hope it will not be objected to at this time, and if it is I will have five minutes more at a later time to discuss it.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 minutes now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to amend his former request by asking that the gentleman from Florida have 10 minutes in which to address the House, without prejudice to the objection made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SEARS. The chairman overwhelms me with his gener-

If I had placed in this amendment perhaps $3,000,000 instead of only $100,000, I am satisfied the committee unhesitatingly would have voted it, judging by their votes on other propositions.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I will. Mr. EAGLE. I think the gentleman will find in due course that either the gentleman from Tennessee and certain gentlemen from Massachusetts and Pennsylvania will boss this bill or else with their generosity, about which the gentleman has expressed his gratification, they will have a long keen stiletto inside of a silk handkerchief.

Mr. SEARS. I thank the gentleman from Texas for his eloquence, in which I am not able to indulge, and also for what, I fear, is his true statement of the situation. Mr. Chairman, seri-I fear, is his true statement of the situation. ously speaking, any bill looking to the fortification of this country that omits Key West to my mind is fatal. I do not care to go into the question of geography with my colleagues because they are thoroughly familiar with same, and I simply desire to recall to their memory that Key West, if properly provided with naval facilities, would control the Yucatan Channel, the Carribean Sea, Straits of Florida, the Gulf of Mexico, and thousands of miles of the Atlantic Ocean. It is about three days nearer to the Panama Canal than Pensacola, and I am not fighting a single dollar of appopriations for Pensacola, represented by my able colleague [Mr. Wilson]. It is about four days nearer the Panama Canal than Charleston, nor am I fighting any appropriation for Charleston.

West, at the southern extremity of Florida, within about 500 miles of the Panama Canal, is the keynote to the situation to defend not only the Gulf of Mexico but to protect that part of our country located on the Gulf of Mexico, and besides ships from there could be sent up as far as Jacksonville, to Charleston, to Mobile, to New Orleans, or down to the Panama Canal, if it was necessary to send them to that canal, and on through to the Pacific Ocean.

Now, it is true there is not very much water there. There is only 22 feet right at Key West but I have asked the River and Harbor Committee for, and they have granted me, a survey, and if they will expend about $200,000 at Key West they can have approximately 36 feet of water the entire distance, which will be the best channel of any port in the United States with so small an expenditure of funds. All around, as shown by this plat which I hold in my hand, there is practically now 37 and 38 feet of water. While the chairman says, and Members of this House say, this amendment has not been passed on by the department, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that only a few minutes ago, because a naval official asked you to vote some $3,000,000 and more for aircraft guns, without any request from the department, you voted the appropriation. I insist the department has passed on the importance of Key West and in support of same submit the fol-

In 1916 the Secretary of the Navy wrote me in part, as fol-

The Navy Department fully appreciates the importance of Key West as an offensive and defensive base and all the department's plans include Key West.

Its primary use would probably be as an operating base for torpedo boats, destroyers, and submarines used to close the Florida Straits and Yucatan Channel to the enemy, thus protecting the whole of the Gulf coast from enemy attack.

That is signed by Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SEARS. I would rather not yield just now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to ask a question, I understood the gentleman to say that Key West was 500 miles from Panama.

Mr. SEARS. Approximately. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Was that estimate of distance also made by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. SEARS. I could not tell you.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As a matter of fact, is it not nearly 1,000 miles?

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman is better up in geography than I am, and if he says so I will accept his statement.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know that I am better, but I think it is about 1,000 miles.

Mr. SEARS. I was never on the water mentioned in my life, but, as you know, it looks on water nearer than it really is. [Laughter.] It depends largely on what you have been looking at.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think it is a submarine base for the Panama Canal?

Mr. SEARS. I did not intend to convey that meaning. I mean they could keep boats there, and if they wanted to send them to the Pacific coast they could send them down to the Panama Canal, and save the distance from Charleston or any other place or port you might name, and thereby save three or four days. I am sure the gentleman from Minnesota will admit this saving is very important.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I first took this matter up with the Secretary of War, and he stated it did not come before his department, because it was a naval proposition, and in part he says:

As Key West does not satisfy the requirements above indicated, it is obvious that it is not suited as a base for the land forces.

It is understood, however, that Key West has certain well-recognized advantages from the standpoint of naval operations. But any official estimate of its value for naval purposes involves a consideration of naval policy and should emanate from the Navy Department.

The War Department and the Navy Department both realize the importance of Key West as a naval base. You have there to-day naval improvements that are going to ruin because they are not being kept up. You have there to-day facilities for making a naval base that will be more advantageous to this country from a geographical standpoint than any other fort you could name in this country. It is unique. Situated in the Gulf, as it is, with the ocean immediately on the left, the Gulf to the right, and the Caribbean Sea just below, controlling the Florida Straits and the Yucatan Channel, the Members of this House can appreciate how important it would be for the Government to control and properly fortify Key West, not only for Florida but for the entire country,

In 1898, during the Spanish-American War, practically all of the troops were transported from Key West to Cuba, and then it was that they had United States boats there; their battle cruisers and those boats not drawing more than 20 feet of water. But since that time, and since I have been in Congress, it is, indeed, hard to get even a vessel there for the more than 100 naval reserves, young Americans who have volunteered to defend their country, on which to practice and to train. I want to say to the Members of this Congress if you really mean to prepare your country, there is no better place to start, even though it is in my district, than Key West, Fla., and I sincerely hope that the Members will grant the appropriation and pass the amendment I have presented, because it will be wisely used.

I want my position understood thoroughly. I am really glad it is passed temporarily, so the Members can thoroughly study same. There are other points in this bill that I expect to object to, that I shall protest against, and I shall do so because I believe, as in the case of Key West, each proposition should stand on its own merit, and that there should be no favoritism expressed or shown by my colleagues in their vote on any propo-

Not having the pleasure of taking up more of your time, when the amendment is finally offered, I sincerely trust you will have studied the proposition, and that you will agree with me and will allow the amendment I have offered to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to returning as requested. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Boston, Mass.: Sterilizing and disinfecting plant, $9,000; improved drainage and filling arrangements, Dry Dock No. 2, $17,500; locomotive and crane shed, $20,000; in all, $46,500.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not any appropriation was requested for the building out of the dock at the navy yard at Charlestown, Mass.

Mr. PADGETT. At Boston?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. TAGUE. Whether or not any further appropriation was asked for the yard in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall any that has reached the com-

Mr. TAGUE. I was given to understand, Mr. Chairman, that an appropriation was asked for the building of the docks at the navy yard, for the extension of the docks. That was my reason for asking the question.

Mr. PADGETT. It may have been asked for by the officials of the yard and sent to the Navy Department, but the department has not approved it, so far as we know, and the department has never forwarded any estimate or request for it to the com-

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa.: Dry dock, to continue, $1,000,000; central power-plant improvements, $120,000; 50-ton locomotive crane, $100,000; in all, $1,220,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania: Page 23, after line 22; insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The limit of cost for the purchase of ground adjoining quartermaster's depot, Marine Corps, Philadelphia, Pa., and the erection of an addition to said depot thereon, is hereby increased not to exceed in all $375,000, and for that purpose $200,000 additional is hereby appropriated."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against it, with a view to securing information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the point of order is, but if it is that this amendment is not offered at the proper place—
Mr. PADGETT. No. It raises the limit of cost that has been heretofore fixed by law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman intend to oppose the amendment, this being a matter of great moment and necessity at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that the department has communicated somewhat with the committee, and I realize that it is an important matter, but it was not in the regular estimates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit to the gentleman that we have approved other emergency matters that have come in here that were not submitted in the regular estimates and which were not so imperatively necessary as is this particular extension at this time. The gentleman is aware of the fact, of course, that the amendments he has offered contemplate the saving of time in the manufacture of certain articles and the promotion of preparedness as to certain things to be done.

Here is the establishment where all the supplies for the Marine Corps are made. All the clothing and all the men's outfits are provided for at this particular establishment, which by reason of a 50 per cent increase in business during the last year or so is simply crowded to the wall. If emergency appropriations are made for additional manufactures they will by the very nature of things force the department to go outside and rent apartments at great expense in which to do the business that will be imposed upon the quartermaster's depot.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that the factory at Philadelphia does splendid work. It is one of the best institutions in the Navy, and I think that in the saving it has made in the manufacture of clothing and outfits for the Marine Corps it has saved its cost several times over, perhaps. It is a very successful one and a very advantageous one. I have a letter here from Gen. Barnett, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, in which he calls attention to that. He says:

When the estimate of $175,000 for the purchase of land and an addition to the depot was originally made four or five years ago, it was not contemplated that the Marine Corps would be increased by 50 per cent, and even at the time the appropriation was finally made it was believed to be sufficient to provide the additional space required. Since that date, however, it has developed that a far greater necessity arises for additional space, due to the increased quantities of supplies and manufacturing activities over those that were apparent a year ago. In addition, it has been realized that the land can not be purchased for anything like the sum originally estimated; and as no satisfactory agreement could be arrived at as to this purchase price, condemnation proceedings have been instituted and an additional appropriation has been asked for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it not be to the advantage of the department to have this appropriation made now, rather than be compelled to pay rent for additional quarters, which it unquestionably would have to pay if we did not make provision quickly for such increased work as will be imposed on the depot by the department?

Mr. PADGETT. I recognize that there is very great merit in the gentleman's amendment, and it has been recommended by the department. Personally I shall not insist on the objection to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for that statement and for putting into the RECORD what he has. This is a practical question, whether the Government shall be driven to other quarters for needed floor space, to meet the requirements of the service.

Mr. PADGETT. I said I would not object to the consideration of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman. should like to ask some further explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves .

the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to have some further explanation as to the need for increasing the limit of cost of this marine depot at Philadelphia. I recall some years ago, when the item was carried in the naval appropriation bill, which the letter read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgert] states was $175,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The work there has increased 50 per cent during the last year or two.

Mr. PADGETT. The necessity for it has increased very much, because of the increased number of marines who have to be provided for, the number being increased by 5,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is proposed, as far as the property is concerned, to be obtained in this additional authorization?

Mr. PADGETT. There was some additional land to be acquired, and that was authorized to be acquired in the bill of last year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And condemnation proceedings have been entered and are about to be brought to a close.

Mr. PADGETT. It was supposed that the land could be purchased for the proposed amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it was supposed that the $175,000 would purchase the land and do some of the work on the buildings. We appropriated the $175,000 to get the land and to have some money remaining to start the work upon the enlargement of the factory. Now it develops that the land is going to cost much more than was estimated.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the amount that it is estimated will be required to purchase the required tract of land?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. Moore] can state that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am unable to state, but this appropriation includes the purchase of the land incident to the condemnation proceedings, which must be met under the au-

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman know how much we are appropriating for the purpose of acquiring a site and how much is to be expended for the erection of a building before we just go ahead and appropriate several hundred thousand

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that land in the heart of a great city is valuable.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe this property is about a mile from the city hall,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is at Broad Street and Washington Avenue. There is a very large and imposing building there, but it is not adequate to accommodate the business that is being done by 50 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the size of the tract of land that it is proposed to acquire, and what are the additional buildings that are projected that will be required by the Marine Corps at Philadelphia?

Mr. PADGETT. All of that was set out in the hearings last year, when we authorized the acquiring of the land, either by purchase or condemnation. It is land adjoining the present factory; but I do not carry in my mind the figures which were stated last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it intended to obtain any additional land other than that which was planned when the estimate was

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to-state what Gen. Barnett reports on this matter? This is by authority of law. He reports that-

Condemnation proceedings have been instituted and will soon be completed, and it is believed that the land will be in the possession of the Government before the next two months.

That means that the condemnation proceedings are about to come to a close, and the Government will have to pay for the land, which it has proceeded to condemn by authority of Congress

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, it is not intended to obtain any land in addition to that which was originally planned to be taken by the Government a year ago?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; this is to pay for that which has been condemned.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much additional is provided for buildings in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To pay for the land and construct the buildings, $200,000 additional. Gen. Barnett says:

This is the only manufacturing depot in the Marine Corps, and the supplies for the entire corps, both ashore and afloat, are manufactured, received, and inspected in this establishment, and distributed therefrom. Both the Army and the Navy have many depots for manufacturing and other purposes, while the Marine Corps exists with this one. Great pride has been taken, not only by the Marine Corps but the Congress as well, in the establishment, operation, and upbuilding of this very essential plant, which has been most successfully administered at a great saving of money to the Government, and it might be said that this saving has amounted to far more than the additional sum which is now requested of Congress. The capacity of the depot, however, has reached its limit, and no more work can be done there, and it was necessary only recently to authorize the manufacture of garments outside, at an increased cost, as there was no further room in the depot.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the gentleman's statement and the statement of the commandant, this only provides for an additional authorization of $200,000?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. To take care of the payment for the land

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which is now being condemned. Mr. STAFFORD. And some additional improvements on the property Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. BUTLER. The question of this depot is not new to the Naval Affairs Committee. Whether or not we should make this appropriation I do not know. I do not know why it was not in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Because it is not in the estimates, but came down afterwards in a letter by Gen. Barnett. He saw me personally and stated the great work that was going on there, under the management of Col. Radford, manufacturing clothes for the Marine Corps, outfits for the Marine Corps, and that the appropriation of last year was not sufficient.

Mr. BUTLER. With all that I am as familiar as I am with the chairman's face. I obtained the appropriation originally for this purpose. It was one of my pet schemes. But why did not the chairman insert the item in the bill and not have this reflection upon us that we omitted our duty?

Mr. PADGETT. Because it came down subsequently after we had passed on the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I had a letter asking me to have the item inserted in the bill, but I laid it to one side. I do not want it to appear that I neglected anything that I should have done.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not suppose that that occurred to anybody

Mr. BUTLER. But, anyhow, this is not in the right place.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it is under the head of public works. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is in the same place that it was in last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Washington, D. C.: Gun shop, to complete, $400,000; extending sight shop, $40,000; improving lighting facilities, $16,000; in all, $456,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 23, line 24, strike out "$400,000" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "$800,000, and the limit of cost, exclusive of equipment, is hereby increased to $1,000,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, pending the reservation of a point of order, I have a letter from the Secretary that gives the explanation with reference to enlarging the gun shop. for the manufacture of the 16-inch guns that are to be placed upon the new ships authorized in the construction of last year and fixing the limit of cost under very different conditions as to labor and material with which we are now confronted.

Mr. BUTLER. I could not hear the explanation made by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will listen to the reading of the letter, it will explain it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that a letter be read in his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington, February 3, 1917.

Washington, February 3, 1917.

My Dear Mr. Padgett: It is requested that provision be made in the naval bill now under consideration for increasing the limit of cost of the gun shop at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., from $600,00 to $1,000,000, and the amount to be appropriated to complete from $400,000 to $800,000.

It is of great importance that the increase requested be granted so that the shop may be adequate for present and prospective needs. This increase asked for in the appropriation is due to the rise in the cost of labor and materials since the original estimate was made and to the necessity of providing traveling cranes of 300 gross tons capacity in place of cranes of 200 short tons, which were originally considered sufficient.

The steady increase in the size of guns renders it necessary to con-

The steady increase in the size of guns renders it necessary to construct a shop capable of handling not only the largest guns now being built but those which may be anticipated in the future. The Bureau of Ordnance considers that the cranes for this shop should be of 300 gross tons capacity, which will require very much heavier steelwork for framing, with a consequent increase for foundations and a greater width of building to maintain the clear floor space required and allow for the greater width of columns required for the heavier cranes.

It is estimated that of the total increase of $400,000 that $200,000 represents the amount due to the increased cost of labor and materials and $200,000 to the additional cost of the structure due to using cranes of larger capacity than those originally contemplated.

The purchase of the additional land authorized by the last naval appropriation act, and on which the gun shop will be located, has been actively prosecuted and sufficient area has been acquired so that the construction of the gun shop can be undertaken at once.

Sincerely,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. L. P. PADGETT, M. C., Chairman House Committee on Naval Affairs, United States House of Representatives Washington, D. C.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Last year we made an appropriation for the gun shop.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. This year we recommend in this bill an appropriation of $400,000 to complete it.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.
Mr. BUTLER. Now, after we report this bill making recommendation of $400,000, why do we need an additional $400,000 to do the same work contemplated when we made the appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. They claim that the cost of material and the enlargement of the shop requires it. I have given the gentleman all the information I have,

Mr. BUTLER. I know the chairman is not withholding any information.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. EAGLE. Within the last 12 months has the material and cost of labor increased 100 per cent?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the cost of labor has increased thirty-odd per cent and that some of the material, like steel, has increased more than 100 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the committee this year give any consideration to the item under consideration?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; we did not; for the reason that this has come down since the bill was reported.

Mr. STAFFORD. It should have been submitted by the department officials if they had had their attention called to the conditions at the time the bill was under consideration by the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. If it had been submitted with the estimates or as a supplemental estimate the committee would have gone into it.

Mr. MADDEN. If I understood the reading of the letter, it was to the effect that they had changed their minds as to the size of the cranes they are to build.

Mr. PADGETT. One of the objects is to build larger cranes, and then they decided to build the walls stronger.

Mr. MADDEN. They decided to build a 300-ton crane instead of a 200-ton crane?

Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MADDEN. Was it thought that a 200-ton crane would be sufficient to move the 16-inch guns when the estimates were made and the explanation given by the department?

Mr. PADGETT. It was supposed that the crane would be sufficient at that time, but it seems it is necessary to handle much heavier weights. They are reinforcing the 16-inch guns more than was originally contemplated.

Mr. MADDEN. How long is it since the information was given to the committee to the effect that a 200-ton crane would do the work?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the estimates are about a year apart in the time of making.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, this was last year?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And they have decided since last year it will be necessary to have a heavier crane to handle the heavier equipment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and they want to strengthen the walls. Mr. MADDEN. They will have to do that, if they have a heavier crane, of course.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and a heavier crane costs more.

I thought perhaps the information upon Mr. MADDEN. which the Naval Committee made its recommendation was furnished to it during the present sitting of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. We had hearings at the present time upon this proposition of increase on some of the matters.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the hearings on this particular item on page 227:

The CHAIRMAN. "Extending sight shop, $40,000."

Admiral Harris. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reference to these appropriations, and possibly including this gun shop, that it is quite possible we will have to come to you this session, the same as on maintenance, and ask for an increase of these limitations. The estimate for this gun shop was based on conditions as they existed at the time. It is a structural-steel shop, and the prices for structural steel have gone up sufficiently to make it probable that we will have to have these amounts increased.

And this letter is in fulfillment of that averages?

And this letter is in fulfillment of that prophecy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this revised estimate embodies a revision of a project that is now in course of construction. It is shown from the hearings, from the statement of the chairman of the committee, that no consideration whatever has been given by the committee to the advisability of enlarging this establishment to meet the so-called claims of the There is another body which will pass Department. upon this item, and I think in consonance with proper procedure we should not adopt upon the ipse dixit of the Navy Department all of these increases. Therefore I make the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that this increases the limit of cost, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to execute such deed or deeds or other instruments as the Attorney General may deem necessary and appropriate to transfer to the United States, for use for naval purposes, title to lots 13 and 14 in square 801, District of Columbia, at a price to be mutually agreed upon between the said commissioners and the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That pending the transfer of title the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to assume control and jurisdiction over said lots and to make use of them for naval purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman L. reseaves the point of ender

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that in order to obtain some information from the chairman of the committee. Is this carrying out the original intend-ment to acquire property for this gun shop?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It was found the It was found that the District of Columbia has title to a house and lot that was originally used as a schoolhouse. The District of Columbia got title as I now remember it, shown by some letters we have here from the Commissioners of the District, about the year 1806. It was used up until a few years ago as a schoolhouse, when a new school was built in that neighborhood. Since that time it has been used only occasionally. The Commissioners of the District have written that they are perfectly willing that the Government should have it. Under the proceedings that were had last year the department did not feel that the District Commissioners would have authority to convey, and this is to allow them to execute a deed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.: Dry dock, to continue, $1,000,000; one structural shop, to complete, $600,000; water-front improvements, $500,000; improvements, central power plant and distributing systems, $300,000; in all, $2,400,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the need of half a million appropriation for water-front improvements. What is embodied in those contemplated improvements?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, at Norfolk, at Hampton Roads, and in the Chesapeake Bay is to be found the most important location and the finest water which the Navy has. It is the principal rendezvous of the Navy. At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made for a dry dock and also for a shop and structural shop. I think the shop was to cost a million and a half dollars and the dock three and a half million dollars.

The water-front condition there is very much congested-so much so that at times they have ships of the Navy lying two abreast when at anchor. Several of the committee were down there a few weeks ago, and we saw at times they had some two deep alongside the dock. This is to extend the waterfront improvement and give dockage and anchorage to a larger number of ships. It was stated to the committee that the improvement when completed would afford docking facilities or anchorage facilities for 29 capital ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this an improvement of the harbor at Norfolk?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not in the harbor; it is in the navy yard, in the basin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was this included in the estimates of the department?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. STAFFORD. It is virtually a river and harbor improvement, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; the River and Harbor Committee never deals with the inside of the yards. They only deal with the open channel out from the yard. This is in the yard, in the basin in which the ships anchor, and where the ships dock along-side the docks for repairs, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. My memory may be in error, but I do not recall such an item ever having been included for other yards as an appropriation for the improvement of the roadstead-

Mr. PADGETT. This is not the roadstead; it is right in the basin in the yard.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have we ever appropriated for a similar improvement at the League Island Navy Yard?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; got some perhaps in this bill and got some perhaps in New York and in all of the improvement of water front in all the yards; it has been the custom ever since I have been on the committee. It is not an improvement that comes under the head of rivers and harbors improvement at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, as I desire to ask the chairman a question. In the improvement for Norfolk on the water front, does that $500,000 include the purchase of land upon which the Jamestown Exposition was formerly held?

Mr. PADGETT. It has no connection with it. That Jamestown land is 5 or 6 miles distant. This has nothing in the world to do with that. This is simply to dredge out and get a depth there so that the battleships and the others at times may have berthing space inside the yard.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. May I ask the gentleman a further question? Is there anything in the bill that includes the purchase of the land on which the Jamestown Exposition was held?

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing whatever, directly or indirectly, remotely or otherwise.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and grounds, Naval Academy: Extension of Bancroft Hall (to cost not to exceed $2,270,000), $1,000,000; improvements central power plant and distributing systems, $300,000; two freight elevators, Bancroft Hall, $15,000; in all, $1,315,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it is subject to the point of

Mr. STAFFORD. I desire to inquire as to the authorization for the extension of Bancroft Hall to the amount of $2,270,000.

Mr. PADGETT. That is to enlarge and put two wings in the rear to accommodate the large number of midshipmen under the legislation heretofore increasing the number of midshipmen to be appointed by Congressmen.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the department consider the feasibility of erecting a new building rather than extending Ban-croft Hall itself, which might not be favorably situated for such an extension?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, it is favorably situated for such an extension, and it is one that is best suited of all the ground It keeps the young men together under better control and better discipline and more convenient to the mess hall.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the committee has considered the feasibility of this proposition, and I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows

Navy yard, Puget Sound, Wash.: Improvements, central power plant and distributing systems, $150,000; purchase of land and fitting up trial course (Vashon Island), $5,000: improved drainage in dry docks, $12,000; storage facilities, $500,000; in all, $667,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

What is the purpose of the improvement of the central power plant at the Bremerton yard? This is a new power plant, and I thought it was adequate to meet the needs of that station for some years to come.

Mr. PADGETT. No; at that station their activities, and so forth, have been very much enlarged, and it is still further con-We have only two stations on the templated to enlarge it.

Pacific coast.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am directing my attention entirely to the improvement of the central power plant. I am somewhat acquainted with it. I know this is a new plant, and I was informed that it had all that was needed to furnish adequate power for some years to come, and now we have an item here providing for an improvement in the sum of $150,000.

Mr. PADGETT. I will read you:

Mr. PADGETT. I will read you:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is, navy yard, Puget Sound, Wash., improvements, central power plant and distributing systems, $150,000.

Tell us about this, please.

Admiral Harris. This is for the installation of a 2,500-kilowatt turbo-generator at Puget Sound.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind have we there now?

Admiral Harris. We have now one 1,000 and two 500 kilowatts.

This is inadequate for the yard at present. The large dry dock there requires a good deal of power, and also the shop, shop lighting, and yard lighting. The installation of this large generator is necessary to look after the growth of this yard, and will also involve some additional boller capacity, which is now insufficient for as large a generator as this one.

The CHAIRMAN. Will this generator supplant the ones you have now or will it supplement them?

Admiral HARRIS. It will supplement and not supplant.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have, then, 4,000 kilowatt capacity?

Admiral HARRIS. Yes; but of course, you always have to have some

The CHAIRMAN. But this will give you that maximum capacity at the Admiral Harris. Yes, Mr. Roberts. Would that be enough to take care of the battleship construction ?

onstruction?
Admiral Harris, We do not know yet what battleship construction e are going to do there.

Mr. ROBERTS. Is it not pretty well understood what will go up there?
Admiral Harris. No; I do not think it is.

And then he goes into the question of the

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has furnished enough of the information that I desired, and I withdraw the pro forma

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval magazine, Charleston, S. C.: One building for ammunition storage, $35,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. wish to inquire if there is any existing naval magazine at Charleston, S. C.?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; I think not. It is needed. Charleston, you know, is some hundreds of miles south of Norfolk. We have nothing between Norfolk and Charleston, and this is for the storage of the ammunition of the torpedo-boat destroyers, submarines, and the smaller craft, and the medium-sized cruisers or battleships, and things of that kind that go into

Mr. STAFFORD. This magazine will be used as an adjunct to the navy yard in connection with the battleships and vessels that go to that navy yard?

Mr. PADGETT. That make that port; yes, sir. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total public works, $14,337,050, and the amounts herein appropriated therefor, except for repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations, shall be available until expended.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask permission that the Clerk be authorized to change the total on page 29, line 8. And there have been some other changes. I wanted to get permission to change that total to make it conform to the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may change the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I suggest to the gentleman that it is nearly half past 5 and it is time for the committee to rise?

Mr. PADGETT. I was going to ask that the committee rise when we get over to the next page—the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enter into contract for the use by the United States Government of a dry dock at Boston, Mass., which shall be capable of docking the largest vessel that can be passed through the locks of the Panama Canal, for a period of not to exceed six years from completion of such dock, at a compensation of $50,000 per annum during said period of six years, the right of the United States Government to the use of said dock in time of war to be prior and paramount: Provided, That the construction of said dock shall be undertaken immediately upon entering into this contract and shall be completed within 30 months thereafter: And provided further. That said contract shall provide for docking rates not in excess of commercial rates and for such other conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy prior to entering into said contract: And provided further, That in the event, during the said contract period of six years, the necessities of the fleet require the docking of vessels which will necessitate a charge greater than $50,000 per annum, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to have vessels docked therein at a rate of charge not greater than the price stipulated in said contract.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman I make a point of order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. This is a duplicate of the provision that was made several years ago with reference to the dry dock at Hunters Point, near the Mare Island Navy Yard, San Francisco, whereby we secured the benefits of a dock on the coast that would accommodate any ship that could go through the Panama Canal. need large docks also on the Atlantic. The construction of the docl: would involve an expenditure of three or four million dol--perhaps four millions. We appropriated for two, one at Philadelphia and one at Norfolk, at a limit of cost of $3,500,000, and this is a duplicate of that; and we would get a dock over there where the Government would have the benefit of it at a very small cost. And while it is subject to a point of order, I thought the gentleman, understanding the situation, could see his way clear to withdraw it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a proposition to lease a private dock?

Mr. PADGETT. This is a proposition to lease it for not exceeding six years.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why not construct a dock if we need one there?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because the Government has not the place at this navy yard and has not the room to do it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Are we going to permanently do without a dock there?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the chairman of the committee yield a moment? I would like to say to the gentleman that this dock is being constructed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It belongs to the State, and is not a private enterprise at all. It is somewhat questionable-in fact, there is grave doubt-whether the Commonwealth will continue the construction of this dock unless the State can be assured of some revenue from it. The construction has been started, and there has been an accident to the cofferdam, and, as I understand the situation, the excavated portion is already flooded, and the State commission now in charge of harbors and lands, that constructed this dock, find it will cost nearly $2,000,000 more than was contemplated when the State undertook the proposition.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. How much has been expended on this work?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I do not know how much.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Well, about how much?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I could not tell that, because there has been a question between the State and the contractors as to how much shall be paid. The estimated cost at the beginning was about $2,000,000 for the dock. They find now that it is going to cost nearly $4,000,000. I doubt very much whether the State will not stop all construction and pocket the loss sustained by it thus far if it can not get some guaranty.

In order that the gentleman may understand the situation, I wish to say that before they started the construction of this dock they had an agreement with certain steamship companies, among them a large German steamship company, but they do not now propose to keep their agreement. An English company, as I understand, made an agreement to pay a certain amount annually if the dock was constructed, but they are now lukewarm, and there is talk that the business of that company will be removed to a Canadian port. There was another steamship company that proposed to pay an annual rental, and——Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman is going into much more detail than I expected when I yielded to him.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I am trying to give the gentleman information.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the gentleman is not giving me the information I wanted. It is expected or proposed that the Federal Government shall have the exclusive use of this dock? Mr. PADGETT. No; not the exclusive use.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. But the prior use.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The opportunity to use it in common

Mr. PADGETT. Yes: and paying for the docking at commercial rates

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the Government need a dock there?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why does it not build one there?

Mr. PADGETT. Because we have not the ground on the water front, and it would cost the Government three or four million dollars perhaps, and the interest on that money will more than pay the docking, if somebody else should build it, for what use the Government has.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then I understand the only advantage in this is to give us a right to the prior use of it. In that case I shall insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama insists on the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say that the bills introduced this morning, as per the wish of the House, are now available. I understand Mr. Sinnott, the Doorkeeper, has a quantity of copies here. I also had a committee print made of the Wright patents, and they are now available to the committee. I have a number of copies here, and shall be glad to give them to anyone who wants them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee do now rise

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Estopinal, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of illness.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk rend as follows:

The Clerk rend as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20082) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of an act establishing a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act of August 11, 1916, be, and is hereby, amended so as to require the suspension of the operations of the act within four years from the date of said act of September 2, 1914, was approved.

Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. Speaker————

Mr. RITZGERALD. Bessenying the right to chicat what does

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, what does

Mr. ALEXANDER. It extends the life of the War-Risk Bureau in the Treasury Department for one year from September 2, 1917, to September 2, 1918.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The first act provided for two years, and then it was extended one year.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It was extended one year, and now it is extended one year more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This simply continues the bureau under the act which was amended in August last?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. It does not modify the provisions of the law, except to extend the law for one year from September 2, 1917, to September 2, 1918.

MOORE of Pennsylvania. This carries the life of the War-Risk Bureau over just one year more.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Just one year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Alexander, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I nominate for the majority vacancy on the Pensions Committee the Hon, Joseph B. Thompson, of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the nomination.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Committee on Pensions, Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? If not, those in favor of this one will say "aye"; those opposed "no." The motion was agreed to.

DISCHARGE OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. KEATING. To move to discharge the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from the further consideration of House resolution 475-

Mr. MADDEN. I object, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. KEATING. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. KEATING. I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Colorado to find out what he was up to.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I was trying to get at. The Chair has not yet recognized the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has made the point of no quorum present.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 230. Joint resolution authorizing the National Society United States Daughters of Eighteen hundred and twelve to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual reports to the secretary thereof.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5014. An act to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14978. An act for the relief of Ida Turner,

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1917, at 12

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balance of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund (H. Doc. No. 2028); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required by the several departments of the Government to complete the service of the fiscal year 1917, and for prior years (H. Doc. No. 2029); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed. 3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Attorney General submitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 2030); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims which have been presented to this department and require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 2031); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Flathead River, Mont. (H. Doc. No. 2032); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of harbor at Beaumont, Tex., with a view to removal of island in the turning basin, and Neches River, Tex., with a view to making a cut-off or cut-offs at lower end of Harbor Island, in order to facilitate the navigation of said stream (H. Doc. No. 2033); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. STEDMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20080) to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds, the ratifications whereof were exchanged on the 7th day of December, 1916, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1430), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6850) authorizing transfer of certain retired Army officers to the active list, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1431). which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20752) to amend an act providing mediation, conciliation, etc., approved July 15, 1913: to authorize the President to protect the operation of trains in time of peace, and to take possession of the common carriers and draft their crews and officials in time of war, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1434), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 354) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to conduct an investigation of wages and labor conditions in the coal-mining industry, and to report thereon to Congress as early as possible, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1435), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20605) to amend an act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1436), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14074) granting the consent of Congress to the village of Fox Lake, in the county of Lake, State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across both arms of the Fox River, which passes through Pistakee Lake and Nippersink Lake, a point suitable to the interests of naviga-tion, at or near their point of intersection, in the county of Lake, State of Illinois, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1437), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MILLER of Delaware, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10550) for the relief of Morris Busch, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1428), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate telegram, which will be read.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

[Telegram.]

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 6, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL, Washington, D. C .:

It is with pleasure that the directors of the American Aircraft Co., of Indiana, offer to the Government of the United States their loyal cooperation in providing an adequate aerial defense.

THE AMERICAN AIRCRAFT Co.,
By A. G. FEENEY, President.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from California yield to me just a moment for a formal matter?

Mr. WORKS. I yield for that purpose.
Mr. HARDWICK. Out of order I desire to present telegrams from certain citizens of Georgia respecting the pending revenue bill. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. I also present a memorial of the Board of Trade of Brunswick, Ga., respecting harbor improvements at that city, which I move be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.
Mr. SHEPPARD. With the permission of the Senator from California at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who is detained by illness, I ask that the telegram I send to the desk may be read.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Senator THOMAS P. Gore, Washington, D. C.: OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., February 4, 1917.

Mass meeting held at International College to-day. A unanimous appeal was made in the name of millions helpless to express themselves that you use your great office in crushing the war gods about to plunge our country into blood, death, and destruction. Give us justice at home before foreign regulation.

JOHN J. CARNEY, Attorney.

JOHN J. CARNEY, Attorney. KATE BARNARD. Dr. JAS. ARMSTRONG, President. FRED HOLT, Treasurer.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator from California yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon, but I hope that Senators will defer these telegrams until a later time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to present a telegram in the nature of a petition, which I ask be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., February 6, 1917.

Hon. Geo. E. Chamberlain,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We petition you as our representative in Congress to use your utmost efforts to preserve peace. We should not engage in war except to save our honor or national existence. No situation exists at present, and, while the voices of fingoes and munitions manufacturers are louder, the mass of the people oppose war. A blockade of Germany by Germany is of no greater moment than a blockade of Germany by Great Britain to the American people. In so far as we are concerned, the blockade by one belligerent of the other should be no cause of war. No urgent necessity or impending calamity requires us to break the blockade of either belligerent. Before the bloody scourge of war is brought upon us, with all its attendant dangers and calamities, we ask that the people who must do the actual fighting and undergo the hardships and danger be consulted and given opportunity to determine by vote whether they want to give up their peaceful vocations and engage in further crushing civilization in the mad shambles of Europe. President Wilson was elected with the expectation that he would keep the country out of war, and we ask you to aid him in his efforts to that end. We pledge our loyalty to America and urge you to show your loyalty by keeping us out of war.

Adopted by mass meeting of over 1,000 citizens, who request you to lay this resolution before the Senate and House of Representatives.

Thomas Mannix, Chairman.

OUR RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that this morning I would address the Senate on the subject of our relations with Germany. Since that time the Senater of the Senater from Missouri [Mr. Stone] offered a resolution bearing on that question which in effect is an indorsement of what has been done by the President of the United States up to the present time. I am not going to undertake to discuss that resolution at this time because it is not now before the Senate. I may desire to do so when it comes up for consideration. What I expect to do now is to address the Senate on the general subject of our relations with Germany growing out of the present situation. Before doing so I should like to present two or three telegrams bearing upon that question and have them read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the Secretary

will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 7, 1917.

Senator John D. Works,

Washington, D. C.:

We thank you most heartly for the courageous stand you are taking against the Stone resolution of indorsing Wilson's break with Germany. Fight on and you will win. We do not want war with Germany. Germany. Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE C. BARTHOLOMAE AND FAMILY.

GREENVILLE, PA., February 6, 1917.

Hon. John D. Works,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on your stand for peace. Strive to get Washington's ear for Him who said, Put away thy sword and avert a spread to our land of the Almighty's plague of Europe in war.

WM. LOOSER.

PORTLAND OREG., February 6, 1917.

Hon. John D. Works,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Oregon citizens in mass meeting assembled depend upon you to use your utmost efforts to preserve peace and highly appreciate your noble efforts of the past. The Nation does not want war. President Wilson was reelected because he kept us out of war, and is expected to keep us out of war in the future. The jingo press does not represent the true sentiment of the people.

Thomas Mannix, Chairman.

THOMAS MANNIX, Chairman.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a telegram from Chicago, Ill., and a letter from an outlying town in another part of the State. I wish to state that I shall submit no further telegrams or letters on the subject named, because of the very large number that I have received. I selected these two as fairly indicative of the sentiment of the great majority I have received, which aggregate several hundred. I ask that the telegram be read first and the letter following.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the Secretary

will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNION STOCK YARDS, ILL., February 5, 1917.

UNION STOCK YARDS, ILL., February 5, 1917.

Hon. Lawrence Y. Sherman,

Care Mr. Porter, 424 East Capitol Street, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was adopted unanimously at the annual meeting of the Goodman Manufacturing Co.: "Resolved, That the stockholders of the Goodman Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, in regular meeting assembled, commend unreservedly the late action of the President of the United States in the maintenance of American rights and national honor, and pledge to the use of our Government in their defense, upon the Government's own terms, anything the company has or can provide."

Frank S. Washburn, President.

FRANK S. WASHBURN, President.

ADDIEVILLE, ILL., February 4, 1917.

Senator SHERMAN,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I want to urge you to use your influence with the President to come out boldly on the side of the allies and civilization and use every honorable means to crush Prussian militarism.

Yours, respectfully,

Mrs. ELLA SCHMIDT,

H. SCHMIDT.

Mrs. ELLA SCHMIDT, H. SCHMIDT.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, we have severed our long-time friendly relations with the Imperial German Government. This with Germany.

is a first and long step toward war with that country. We may be about to plunge our people into the horrors of the dreadful war that is now dealing death and destruction in the countries of Europe, and are encouraging other neutral and peaceful nations to follow us in this fatal course. If this shall happen, as now ems almost inevitable, we are assuming the fearful responsibility of leading not only our own country but other nations now at peace into the most gigantic and murderous war the world has ever known. By our act we will make this an almost worldwide sanguinary struggle, that means the sacrifice of millions of lives, the destruction of the happiness of millions of now peaceful and contented homes, the peace and tranquillity of our own and other neutral nations, and the waste of untold millions of

Mr. President, can we be justified, will we ever be excused by future generations for taking this course, involving with unerring certainty the fearful consequences that must inevitably follow it? Can we in the years to come satisfy our own con-sciences that by such a course we, as the responsible represent-atives of this country, are serving the best interests of the peace-loving people of a free Republic or of humanity? The President has made the first fatal move. The next step that will plunge our people into a bloody conflict, if taken, must be ours. Congress alone has the power under our Government to declare war. So, if we go to war with Germany, it will be by our act and we alone will be responsible for the consequences. The President has been applauded for making this first move toward war. Doubtless thousands of the American people, little comprehending what must follow, would applaud Congress if it should at once declare war against Germany. The public mind has been prepared for such a mad course by the unseemly and unpatriotic propaganda in favor of preparedness for war. The war spirit, the desire for conflict, have been insidiously instilled into the minds of our people by this selfish agitation in favor of preparedness for the shedding of human blood. Preparedness for war has been established in the minds of the people without the physical means of making that condition of mental preparedness effective. The minds of the people were made ready to accept and applaud an act that means war. The act of the President that is expected to lead to this result has been accepted by the public mind thus falsely educated and inspired. Mentally the good, peace-loving people of the Nation have by this means been led astray from the paths of peace and made ready to accept the prospect of physical warfare with rejoicing. The act of the President to such a distorted mind is accepted as courageous, even heroic. And, Mr. President, this is looked upon in this time, when most of the world is convulsed with war, as an act of patriotism.

Now, Mr. President, let us stop a moment to look this appalling situation squarely in the face, consider whither we are leading this Nation and why, and ask ourselves whether or not we are justified in the course so far entered upon and in carrying it out to its legitimate and fearful consequences. Now is the time to take counsel with ourselves and our consciences. Very soon it may be too late. War once entered upon, however much we may desire it, we can not draw back. The Nation once at war must and will receive our earnest, loyal, and undivided support. Have we the moral courage to do the things now that will avoid the war? To avoid it now may call for a higher degree of courage and real and unalloyed patriotism than to enter upon it or even to pursue it to the end. If ever true and unselfish patriotism and the highest standard of moral courage, courage far more important and often more difficult than mere physical courage, on the part of public officials was called for, it is now. If we fail now the blood of millions of people may be on our hands.

I know how ready human beings are to resent encroachments on their rights and how hard it is to forbear and forgive such offenses. In the minds of too many people it is looked upon as cowardly and pusillanimous to forgive any offense. when personal offenses, or even trivial affronts, could be settled only by the spilling of blood on the field of honor and the man who failed or refused to resort to that means of redress was looked upon as a coward and a poltroon. But, in modern and more civilized times, to engage in a duel has become disgrace-ful and made unlawful. Unfortunately this is not yet so with nations. If it had been the world would have been spared the terrible war now raging in Europe and which is threatening to invade this continent.

It is my purpose, with the indulgence of the Senate, to consider whether we are justified, in the interest of our own people, in pursuing the course we have now entered upon in our dealings

The President, in announcing to Congress that he had severed diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany, has recounted in part the events leading up to this unfortunate step. He commences with the note of this Government, of April 8 last, to the Government of Germany, induced by the sinking of the Sussex by a German submarine and the consequent loss of the lives of American citizens. I shall review the correspondence between the two Governments, commencing with the note mentioned, in a moment. Before doing so I want to go back a little further. In any attempt to deal frankly with this situation, we must search our own national conscience and consider how far, if at all, our own conduct has contributed to the unfortunate situation in which we now find ourselves.

The first and most cruel wrong done to the rights of American citizens by the German Government was in sinking the Lusitania, which resulted in the loss of many American citizens. That it was a cruel and unjust wrong to our people and to the Nation no one, certainly no American citizen, will presume to deny. But, sir, it is well for us to consider in this connection how far we ourselves, by our own course of action, contributed to this loss of American lives. At the very time of this occurrence we were supplying to the enemies of Germany arms and munitions of war to enable them to carry on the war against that country with whom we were at peace. The Lusitania, a passenger ship, was loaded with these missiles of death. Many a German soldier had met his death in the trenches, many others had returned to their homes maimed for life, many widows and orphans were mourning their dead as the result of the nefarious trade of American citizens in war munitions. Before the Lusitania sailed warning was given that she would be torpedoed if she attempted to cross the ocean freighted with a cargo that meant death and destruction to German subjects.

Our Government knew what was threatened, but we allowed the ship to sail, carrying American citizens into the very jaws of Germany was fighting for her life. So were England and France and the other nations engaged in the war. What could have been expected of Germany under such circumstances? What moral right had we to tempt her to this fearful act by this threat against the lives of her people? This Government can not shield itself from the fearful responsibility it is bound to accept for this dreadful tragedy. We have continued from that time on to aid the enemies of Germany in the same way. I have consistently opposed it from the beginning. We have not been neutral as a nation; many of our people have not attempted to conceal the fact of their unneutrality. If we had been wholly neutral, as we professed to be, we would never have been brought to our present relations with Germany. Great Britain has persistently violated our rights on the sea as a neutral nation. She has searched our ships, rifled our mails, and in other ways treated our rights with contempt. We have borne these wrongs as patiently and with as great a degree of forbearance as if we had been the ally of Great Britain instead of being a neutral nation.

Mr. President, this was the unhappy condition of things affecting our relations with Germany when the Sussex was sunk and more American lives sacrificed. Certainly Germany had no reason to feel kindly toward us. She must be judged, as we must, by the conditions as they then existed; conditions brought about by us for merely commercial gain, at the expense of Ger-These conditions were not mentioned by the Presiman lives. dent in his message. We would all be glad to forget them. But the situation that now confronts us, that may mean war for our country, is too serious to permit of evasion or any attempt to escape the consequences of our own mercenary acts.

This brings me to the matter of the President's message in which he expresses his belief that he was justified in severing our friendly relations with the German Government. It is not my purpose to question the good faith of the President in taking this step. I assume without question he has taken the course that he felt it his duty to take as the Chief Magistrate of the Nation. However much I may differ from him, I must give him credit for conscientious motives and patriotic purposes in a matter so grave and important.

But, Mr. President, I do differ from him. With a profound sense of my own responsibility as a representative of the American people, I protest against this or any other movement that tends toward war with Germany for no greater cause than has yet been given us. It is charged against the German Government that she not only violated the rights of American citizens on the sea, but that she has violated her solemn promise, made to this Government, not to further engage in the sort of submarine warfare that resulted in the sinking of the Lusitania. That Germany has violated the rights of our people on the sea, under international law, no one can deny. But so has Great Britain, and so would any other belligerent nation fighting for existence, if necessary for her success. So would we do, I apprehend, under the same circumstances. So as to that phase of the controversy the question is, Should we go to war with Germany on that account? I can not bring myself to believe that we, serving the best interests of our people, should go to any such extreme.

Now, sir, let us look for a moment at the correspondence between this country and Germany and see whether that country has violated any promise made to us as to the future course of submarine warfare to be conducted by her. In the first Sussex note the President said to the Imperial German Government:

If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States considers the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

In this note we declared that unless Germany

Should declare and effect an abandonment of its present method of submarine warfare—

We should have-no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

This was a most unfortunate statement, we may call it threat, for us to make. It put the President in the position that compelled him either to back down or do what he has now done, sever our relations with that country. It was exceedingly unwise to say in advance, without qualification, that this Government would have no other choice. It had another choice as I shall presently show, a choice that would insure our continued peace and not involve us in war. But the German Government submitted to this demand in the following language:

submitted to this demand in the following language:

The German Government is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German Government believes now, as before, to be in agreement with the Government of the United States.

The German Government, guided by this idea, notifies the Government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: "In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance."

However, this promise not to pursue the then course of submarine warfare was not without reservation or qualification. It was said further in this same note:

Neutrals can not expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interests, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law.

Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality; and the German Government is convinced that the Government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the Government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principles of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been violated.

It is true that our Government did not secret this

It is true that our Government did not accept this reservation. Our second note contained this clause:

Our second note contained this clause:

The Government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes for granted that the Imperial German Government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the United States and any other belligerent Government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction.

In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it can not for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other Government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint; absolute, not relative.

But, as the President says in his message, the German Government made no reply to this note. Consequently, the reservation of the purpose to again pursue the kind of warfare to which we objected in the circumstances named still stands and was never withdrawn. This being so, we can not justly base our own warlike movement on any breach of promise not to reengage in this objectionable sort of warfare, for there has been no such breach. So we had greater cause to sever our relations with Germany as the result of the Sussex incident than we have now, because that was an overt act against our neutral rights, while the action we have now taken is founded on a mere threat to commit similar acts in the future. To have been entirely consistent we might better have waited until the threatened act had been committed.

But, sir, let me go a little further and ask whether we would be justified in plunging our Nation into this great war because our rights on the sea are being violated by Germany as a war measure. Of course, the President was right in his position that Germany could not, in a legal sense, be excused for violating our rights because some other nation was violating Germany's rights, as well as our own, in the same way. I am not discussing the question on the basis of legal or international right. Everybody knows that the rules of international law can not stand in case of actual war between nations. They never have and they never will.

No nation, not even our own, would submit to be destroyed by war if it could save itself by breaking the rules of international law as it affects neutral as well as belligerent nations. It will violate the law and take the consequences whatever they may be. It is idle to expect anything else.

Now, Mr. President, this was precisely Germany's case. was the case of Great Britain and France. They have violated our international rights just as plainly and conspicuously as has Germany but not in the same way. It was the avowed purpose of the enemies of Germany to deprive her of the benefits of the open sea and, as incidental to their purpose to starve the German people into submission, they deprived our and other neutral nations of the freedom of commerce on the sea. Our ships and others carrying our products, not to Germany, but to other neutral nations, were seized, the cargoes held, and our mails rifled. Let us assume that all this was done as a war measure against Germany and not an act of aggression against But so is the act of Germany directed against her enemies and not against us. She may do it in a more brutal and more effective way but one is as much an encroachment on our rights as the other and should be judged by the same standard. Therefore we can not consistently sever our relations with Germany and continue them with Great Britain. But, sir, was the President right in saying to Germany that we would, if she continued her then mode of warfare, have no choice but to sever our friendly relations with her? On the contrary there is an-other and far better choice open to us and one that leads to our continued peace while the choice made means almost certain

The German Government has declared a danger zone about its enemies and given notice that any vessels found in that zone, with certain exceptions, will be sunk. What should be our choice under such conditions? I say to keep our ships and our people out of this danger zone until the war is over or the embargo removed. Oh, but my belligerent but well-meaning friends say this would be cowardly and beneath the dignity of a great Nation or one of its citizens. May God protect this Nation from that kind of courage. To avoid the horrors of war this act of pru-dence on the part of our Government would be a great act of moral courage by a great country that should be a worthy and patriotic example to all the nations of the world.

Of course the Government is in duty bound to protect its citizens abroad as well as at home; but the best and surest protection it can afford them now is to keep them out of this danger zone. It would mean a temporary suspension of trade and the loss of a few thousands of dollars to a very few people. But what would this be to the millions of dollars lost, to say nothing of the sacrifice of thousands of lives by going to war to protect this trade on the high seas? American citizens in Mexico have been compelled by the Government to abandon their permanent homes, lose everything they had in the world, and become homeless and destitute refugees to keep us out of war with that country.

Why not be consistent and apply the same rule here?

And so of the individual citizen whose rights are thus invaded. To unselfishly surrender that right by remaining outside of the danger zone, thus protecting his country from the perils of war, would be an act of patriotism and devotion to the best interests of humanity worthy of the highest commendation. And, sir, if any citizen is so unpatriotic as not to do this thing, then the Government should compel him to do it and thus keep our country out of war. And why should this not be done? Suppose there were a riot on one of the streets of Washington dangerous to the lives of citizens in that locality. Any citizen would have the right to travel the street, but would not any sensible and prudent man for his own protection, and as a means of suppressing the riot for the public good, keep out of the danger zone, and would not the police use force, if necessary, to keep the people off the street? Most certainly this would be done, and no one would question its wisdom or its propriety. Then why should not this same thing be done, by force if necessary, where two nations are fighting, resulting in a zone where noncombatants can not enter without endangering their lives or their property and imperiling the peace of their country?

I insist that neither a private citizen nor the President nor the Congress of the United States can be justified in driving this Nation into war or endangering its peace by any such false sense of courage or national prestige or dignity.

Mr. President, my term of service here will terminate in a few days. I may not be called upon to assume further responsibility in this grave and important matter. I have felt constrained, under existing circumstances, to express my views on the subject now, as we may be on the eve of taking the final step that commits the Nation to the arbitrament of war.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I have a telegram, just received since the Senator from California commenced his remarks, which I believe he would be pleased to have read into the RECORD.

Mr. WORKS. Very well.
Mr. BRADY. I ask the Secretary to read the telegram I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the ecretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution I proposed on the day before yesterday, relating to the President's message in joint session on the 3d instant, be now laid before the Senate.

The Chair, hearing no objection, The VICE PRESIDENT.

lays before the Senate the following resolution.

The Secretary. Senate resolution 351, submitted by Mr. STONE on the 5th instant:

Whereas the President has, for the reasons stated in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session on February 3, 1917, severed diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government by the recall of the American ambassador at Berlin and by handing his passports to the German ambassador at Berlin and by handing his passports to the German ambassador at Washington; and
Whereas, notwithstanding this severance of diplomatic intercourse, the President has expressed his desire to avoid conflict with the Imperial German Government; and Whereas the President declared in his said address that if in his judgment occasion should arise for further action in the premises on the part of the Government of the United States he would submit the matter to the Congress and ask the authority of the Congress to use such means as he might deem necessary for the protection of American seamen and people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate approves the action taken by the President

Resolved, That the Senate approves the action taken by the President as set forth in his address delivered before the joint session of the Congress, as above stated.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President— Mr. JONES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.
Mr. JONES. What has become of the unfinished business? The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has taken its place by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES. I did not understand that the request was put to the Senate to lay aside the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair said if there was no objection it would be laid before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I desire to object to setting aside the unfinished business. I think the matter ought to be submitted to the

Mr. STONE. The unfinished business is the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. JONES.

Mr. STONE. I think there will be no difficulty in getting that up at any time. Mr. JONES. I do not give consent to laying aside the unfinished business

Mr. LODGE. I was sitting here listening to the proceedings. The Chair submitted the question and asked if there was objection; paused; there was no objection, and he recognized the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. JONES. I was sitting here just the same as the Senator from Massachusetts, and I was listening for a statement as to whether the unfinished business should be set aside. I supposed the resolution was simply laid before the Senate for discussion. I had no objection to that, but I do object to laying aside the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will immediately follow the disposition of the resolution. It is only temporarily laid aside.

Mr. JONES. But I desire to object to its being temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I make that request.

Mr. JONES. I want an opportunity to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can not be two things pending at the same time before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I appreciate that, but I object to laying aside the unfinished business to take up the resolution.

Mr. STONE. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, assuming that there was no objection whatever, laid the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. STONE. What is, then, before the Senate? The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington says he did not hear what the Chair said and he is objecting now.

Mr. JONES. No, the Senator from Washington did not hear any request made to lay aside the unfinished business The VICE PRESIDENT. We will cut the Gordian knot by laying the resolution before the Senate at the present time, if there be no objection.

Mr. JONES. I object to laying it before the Senate if it means setting aside the unfinished business

Mr. STONE. It has been laid before the Senate and read. Mr. JONES. If the Senate desires by motion to take up the Mr. JONES. resolution and displace the unfinished business, I suppose it can do it, but I object to laying aside the unfinished business

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask for information if it is in order now, having charge of the unfinished business, for me to make a request that it be temporarily laid aside. I think that will meet the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. JONES. I object to laying aside the unfinished business. Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 351.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I shall address the Senate at this time quite briefly, but before speaking directly to the resolu-tion read from the desk I desire to read a short cable dispatch which I clipped from the Sunday issue of a Washington paper

LONDON, February 4.

America's break with Germany to-day brought together a large number of prominent Americans in London.

A meeting, hurriedly and informally arranged, immediately took up plans for the care of Americans now in Germany and assistance to them in case they wish to return to America or to England.

Upon the Americans in London will fall a vast amount of activity connected with the probable exodus of United States subjects—

I pause here to interpolate that probably the foreign gentleman who penned this cablegram is not aware that the people who owe allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States are in the Constitution described as "citizens," not "subjects"; and while they are subject to the laws of the United States and of the States of which they are severally residents, the true type of the American prefers to be described as a citizen rather than as a subject-

Upon the Americans in London will fall a vast amount of activity con nected with the probable exodus of United States subjects from the central countries, and plans are being made to be of every possible assistance to the embassy here.

THOUSANDS LINE STREETS.

THOUSANDS LINE STREETS.

Thousands of Englishmen lined the streets of the West End to-day and cheered as members of the American colony paraded the streets to the American Embassy.

Every American in London to-day is a hero. The attitude of the English people, heretofore indifferent—at times almost antagonistic—has changed to that of enthusiastic approbation.

The tune of "The Star-Spangled Banner" was greeted by tumultuous applause at every public gathering. The staid Englishmen, usually apathetic to every tune save "God, Save the King." were stirred to-day by the American anthem to the heights of enthusiasm which marks the rendition of "Dixle" south of the Mason-Dixon line.

WILSON CHEERED.

WILSON CHERRED.

The picture of President Wilson displayed last night at theaters and movie houses was cheered tumultuously.

A great crowd that gathered before the United States Embassy last night cheered the President to the echo. Dignified business men, women in costly gowns and furs, mingled with saliors, clerks, and the human derelicts that are to be found in every national capital.

Frock-coated, black-cravated gentlemen joined with leather-lunged youths in the old "locomotive" yell of college days. The English spectators at first could not understand the phenomenon of several hundred persons, strange to each other, uniting as though rehearsed, in ear-splitting explosions of enthusiasm.

JOIN IN SALVOS.

But soon they caught the swing of the yell, and the shrill treble of the street urchin and rumbling basso of boulevard spectators joined in the rhythmic vocal salvos.

Editorial comment of London newspapers to-day was not only enthusiastic in the highest degree of President Wilson's action in breaking with Germany, but charitable over his previous restraint under "trying circumstances."

TYPICAL COMMENT.

THICAL COMMENT.

The comment of the Sunday Times—not the Times owned by Lord Northeliffe, but another newspaper—was typical. "The President," it said, "strove with all his power and resources to steer the country clear of war's maelstrom, but the official head of a great and proud people could not expect to stomach such deliberate, wanton insult as Germany's latest note. Its terms were in effect an ultimatum, and America so recognizes it."

"America, unhesitating, is accepting the challenge to the whole world," declared the People. "Its acceptance is tantamount to a declaration of war."

A number of London newspapers published pictures of President Wilson with the caption, "The man of the hour." Their laudation of his course was fulsome.

The News of the World declared: "The Kaiser goaded a great republic into hostility. Lincoln's land will answer with the sword."

A great number of articles of like import have been appearing

A great number of articles of like import have been appearing from day to day in the American press. I can not foretell what eventualities may result from the regrettable international entanglements in which we are now involved. Plainly we are facing a situation in which unhappily our diplomatic relations are sorely strained with respect to some of the belligerent European nations, but I desire to impress my conviction and to express the hope that we will not lose our equilibrium and be swept off our feet, at least at the instance of any foreign power or under the influence of a foreign propaganda put forth for the purpose of exciting us into war. In a matter of this grave import I resent and repel any attempted foreign dictation, no matter from what source it emanates or in what form it comes. We should take our own course in our own way, insisting that foreign powers and foreign or semiforeign peoples attend to their own business. At the same time I venture to express the hope that the officials and people of the United States will avoid any speech of a partisan character calculated to excite passion in our own country

I have presented this resolution because I think we should let the world know that we support the President of the United States whenever, acting within his constitutional power, he speaks authoritatively for the country. There are Senators who thought it would have been the better part of wisdom if the President had postponed the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany at least until Germany had committed some overt act offensive to this Government and sufficiently aggravated to warrant a step so grave in possible consequences; but the President took a different view, which with great ability he strongly supported in his address before the joint session on the 3d instant, and as, according to my view, he acted within his con-stitutional authority, I think it both wise and advisable for the Senate to say officially that it accepts and approves this action of the Nation's Chief Magistrate. The Constitution provides that the President "shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers." The Constitution says nothing about the dismissal of ambassadors and ministers, although Presidents have frequently dismissed such officials on their own initiative. I think the President has this authority, because to him is committed the primary duty and power of conducting our diplomatic affairs, and the constitutional authority to "receive" ambassadors and ministers probably carries with it, as a corrollary, the power to dismiss. Nevertheless, it has been said by some whose opinions demand respect, among them at least two Presidents of the United States, that it was the part of wisdom for the President to take the official advice of the Congress before even receiving ministers in circumstances that might be offensive to another and friendly Government, particularly in cases where a part of the people of such a Government had revolted and set up an independent government of their own. It has been said that in such circumstances it might be provocative of war for this Government to recognize a revolutionary government by receiving a minister therefrom, and so it was thought that as such action on the part of the Chief Executive in its final analysis concerned the "war-making it would be advisable for the Executive to consult the Congress in advance. This was the view of President Jackson with reference to the acceptance of a minister from Texas, but manifestly it was not the view of President Roosevelt in the case of Panama. E converso it has been argued that in view of the fact that the peremptory dismissal by the President of a foreign diplomatic representative to this country might lead to the most serious consequences, the President might wisely lay the whole matter before the Congress in advance for its official advice.

However, whatever may be said pro or con in this behalf, it is more a question of policy than of law. I hold that the President is primarily charged with the conduct of our diplomatic relations with foreign powers, and, unless the circumstances should be extremely exceptional, I feel constrained to support and approve the act of a President in dismissing a foreign ambassador or minister, or even in terminating diplomatic relations and putting an end to the ordinary means of international intercourse. As a matter of fact that is practically the identical situation in which we find ourselves with respect to the Republic of Mexico, and that situation has been at least acquiesced in by the Congress for three or four years. In the instance now before us the President has resolutely discharged his duty as he sees it, acting within his authority, and for one I feel that we should let the country know and the world know that we support his action in this behalf.

The mere severance of diplomatic intercourse, while it results in strained relations of acute form, is held to be not an act of war. If it were an act of war the President's right to take such action on his own initiative and without the concurrence of the Congress might indeed be regarded as questionable. The President understands this, and substantially so stated in his address. He recognizes that the Congress only has constitutional power to declare war or inaugurate hostilities against a foreign nation, and accordingly he said that if unhappily it should come to pass that he should believe it necessary to proceed in a more drastic way, he would present the situation to the Congress and ask legislative authority to take such action as the Congress might deem advisable in the premises. That would undoubtedly be the proper constitutional course. If the President should find it necessary, in his own judgment, to again present this matter to the Congress for legislative action, or if the Congress as the warmaking power should on their own initiative proceed to the consideration of the questions involved, it would then be the duty of the Congress to proceed upon their own initiative and upon their own responsibility. Whenever it becomes necessary for the Congress to act in this form and manner we will then have reached a point where the President must wait upon the action of the law-making department, unless perchance some emergency should arise making immediate action necessary to resist invasion. It is now only proposed to approve the action of the President with respect to a matter within his constitutional province. If, later, the Congress is called upon to act, then we must discharge our duty from our own viewpoint and upon our own responsibility.

I join the President in his expression of the hope that no ade-

I join the President in his expression of the hope that no adequate occasion will arise to make it necessary, even in his judgment, to again present this subject to the law-making power of the Government. I shall move, Mr. President, that the Senate agree to the resolution without reference to the committee.

Mr. President, I intended before taking my seat, and with the view of refreshing the memory of Senators, to lay before the Senate some authorities respecting (1) the declaration and commencement of war, (2) respecting diplomatic relations between independent states, (3) respecting blockades instituted by one belligerent power against another, (4) and possibly respecting one or two other cognate questions of special pertinence in this juncture of our affairs.

However, Mr. President, being averse to the unnecessary consumption of time in reading these various authorities, some of which are now lying on my desk, I believe I will ask unanimous consent of the Senate to print these excerpts from well-recognized authorities touching the several subjects indicated, in the form of a Senate document. It will not necessitate, I am sure, the publication of a pamphlet exceeding 10 or 12 pages. I think such a pamphlet would be useful to Senators at this time in view of possible eventualities. I therefore ask unanimous consent to print the matter referred to in the form stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. STONE. Then, Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this resolution gives the approval of the Senate to the action taken by the President as set forth in his address delivered before the joint session of Congress. That action consisted of the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany. The President then announced that he had handed to the German ambassador his passports and had recalled our ambassador from Berlin.

In my opinion, Mr. President, the President of the United States in taking that action did what was demanded by the honor, the safety, and the future security of the United States. But my personal opinion as to his action is of no consequence at this juncture. The Constitution of the United States has vested the President with the conduct of our foreign relations up to the point when war is the next step. Of his right under the Constitution to dismiss a foreign representative I have no question. The power which can alone receive must, in the necessity of things, be the power which must dismiss. In the exercise of his constitutional power, and with the high responsibility of his office resting upon him, the President has taken this action. It has placed us in controversy and created a strained situation with a foreign nation.

Under these circumstances, so far as I am concerned, party lines vanish, and any criticism of the past or any criticism of the present is silenced for me. When my country is in controversy with a foreign nation I can see for myself but one duty, and that is to stand by and to support the recognized constitutional authority of the Government in our dealings with foreign nations.

I see no place here at this moment for the discussion of an embargo on munitions of war. I think the President was quite right in refusing to impose such an embargo if he desired to preserve neutrality. It seems to me also quite out of place to attempt to apportion blame or praise among other nations. This is not the time nor the place for the expression of sympathies for one side or the other in this great war. There is only one question before us, and that is our relations with one of the great powers of the earth at this moment.

The President has taken grave action. I feel it to be my duty, as I have said, to support him to the utmost of my power. He is the President of my country, the President of the United States. And, Mr. President, if, as we all pray, further difficulties are to be avoided and we are to be saved from war, in my poor judgment there is one step more important than any other, if we are to preserve our peace under existing conditions, and that is to show to the people of the country that we are without divisions at this moment; that we are thinking only of the United States and its representative in all international questions. If we exhibit divisions we exhibit weakness, and weakness is the temptation to those intolerable aggressions which would surely bring the war that we all seek honorably to avoid.

My earnest hope is that at this time personal feelings, political feelings, political enmities will all be laid aside, that we may remember only that we are citizens of a common country, that we are all Americans, and that our first duty is to stand together in this controversy, which has unhappily arisen with another nation, and let that nation and the world know that when the President speaks, as he has spoken, he has the Congress of the United States and the people of the United States, no matter what their race or origin, behind him in the one simple character of American citizens.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I hesitate very much about intruding myself into the discussion, and yet I feel my responsibility as a Senator and think I will be better satisfied, at least, if I say what is in my heart to say.

We are asked to support a resolution offered by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone]. His appeal is not addressed to Senators upon one side of the Chamber or upon the other, but to Senators upon both sides. We are face to face, in my opinion, with a very delicate and trying situation. If there was any error in the course which has been pursued—and I do not assert that there was—it is now too late to rectify it.

Our diplomatic relations with Germany have been severed by Executive order, and international confusion and dismay have superseded the calm, dispassionate, and sympathetic attitude of the American people toward those engaged in an awful struggle for existence. Whether this situation could have been avoided or not, it is now useless to discuss. The President has committed the country, at least to this extent; and, no matter how Senators may have differed with him regarding the wisdom or necessity for the step, it has been taken, and it would be a national humiliation now to repudiate his course.

However, Mr. President, he can go no further. The next step, if it should be taken, must be taken by the Congress, to whom the people have confided their destiny by strict constitutional decree. The responsibility for war rests solely with Congress as the guardian and spokesman of the American people. Let us in this solemn hour take counsel of our conscience, measure the awful cost and sacrifice which hinges upon our act, and take only such course as necessity impels, guided by the spirit of the fathers and influenced only by the best interests of our country.

Mr. President, I do not believe the Imperial Government of Germany would intentionally affront us, and we must be very careful not to aggravate any belligerent State now struggling for existence. We must "play no favorites" in that awful struggle. Our first duty is to America and Americans, and we must face the present situation with calmness and candor, with courage and fidelity. May God grant that our country may be spared the horrors of war without humiliation or the sacrifice of any sacred right. I shall support the President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a grave responsibility rests upon every Member of this body in the consideration of the delicate question before the Senate. It is a responsibility which can not be avoided, however disagreeable it may be to meet the issue. That the Members of the Senate will rise equal to the demands of the solemn situation the heroic past of our common country bids me hope. The way to meet a grave issue is not to blindly follow the President or anybody else. The responsibilities of the Senate are equal and coordinate with the responsibilities of the Executive. If I could be true to my constituents and have the consent of my own conscience and avoid the responsibility of meeting this question by simply referring it to the President, I should be very happy; but I can not do that. I have a duty to perform which I alone can perform. Nor can any other Senator do it and be true to the obligations of his place. To paraphrase the language of another—

The American people honor the Senator wisely taught That serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought,
And simple truth his utmost skill.

In that spirit I shall try to meet the duties of the moment.

Mr. President, if in the mysterious providence of an All-Wise God war shall occur between the United States and Germany, there will be no division of sentiment or break in the ranks of patriotic Americans in defense of the Nation's flag. I shall do all within my power consistent with honor and national self-respect to avert the calamity of war. I am sure Germany does not desire war with the United States, and I know the people of the United States do not wish war with Germany, unless there is greater provocation for war than has yet been given. But if war must come, there will be no faltering on my part nor on the part of those whom I have the honor to represent in this Chamber in the performance of our duty to the Nation.

This country is the common parent of us all, and it matters not what the cause of the quarrel may be. When war is on we shall ask no question, but rather, inspired by a sense of heroic obligation to our country, present a solid, invincible front to the common enemy. I shall vote to give the President men and money to the last soul and dwindling farthing to be used in the Nation's behalf; but I can not vote for this resolution for the reason that it does not express my sincere and best judgment. I do not believe that the President's course was wise, prudent, justified at this time by the facts and for the best interest of the American people and the peoples of the world.

I do not in any sense condone murder upon the high seas, of which Germany may be guilty; nor do I in any way extenuate Great Britain's insolent, cruel, and persistent violation of international law and her contemptuous disregard of the rights of neutrals upon the high seas. Both of these nations are culpable. Their crimes differ only in degree. The motives behind their every act are identical. Cruel selfishness that would crucify truth and immolate justice to promote a personal end is the impelling purpose. Nor would I be understood as questioning the correctness of the President's interpretation of the cold, technical letter of international law. He is, in all probability, correct in his statement as to what the law is to-day, but—

New conditions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth.

And I think that the time is at hand and the circumstances demand that America, occupying a position of such commanding advantage, should write a little international law—law with heart and soul in it, adaptable to the new conditions, placing the rights of man and the human element above the increment of commerce. Such a law would vastly promote the welfare of humanity throughout the world and better protect the interests of the American people.

I admit that American citizens have the techincal right under international law to enter the danger zone. It will not on the other hand, be denied that their forbearance to exercise that right or privilege at this particular time would redound gloriously to the peace and permanent prosperity of the world. I submit that it would be the highest evidence of perfect neutrality if the United States Government should see to it that our citizens forbear the exercise of such a right. For our country to be drawn into this vortex of blood and plunder to satisfy the greed and cupidity of those who would coin the blood of the murdered soldier and the tears of the broken-hearted women into dollars or perhaps to gratify the desire and vanity of a few daring spirits bent upon a bold and venturesome enterprise would be a calamity, aye, more, a blunder on the part of this administration, the cruel consequences of which the present as well as countless generations yet unborn must sorely suffer.

I trust that God's loving providence may save our common country from further implication in this world disaster, this inexcusable, horrible, and heartless slaughter of human beings; but I am afraid that only through Divine intervention is there basis for such a hope. The men of Europe are mad, the brain reels with a suffusion of hot blood, and the passions of hate poison the heart. They are, as wild beasts following the instinct of self-preservation, fighting for existence. In this state of mind I am afraid that something may be done without intending to offend the American people to justify the President of the United States from his own sense of duty in doing what he has said he would do in the event that Germany persists in her threat to blockade the ports of Great Britain with her submarine fleet. The traffickers in the spoils of war, the sharers of enormous profits of international commerce, have done their pernicious work in the creation of an unhealthy, abnormal, pernicious sentiment in favor of war which seems to have temporarily dethroned the reason of men the world over and poisoned the very current of human love.

God give us pause to contemplate the consequences that will inevitably flow from the things we are about to do. Let prudence, love, fortitude, and truth characterize our deliberation to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have expressed my views upon the general subject of our relations with Germany, and do not desire to extend those remarks; but now, under this resolution, we, as Senators, are asked to connect ourselves with the act already done by the President and to make his responsibility our responsibility.

I am not willing to commit my conscience or my patriotism to the President of the United States or anybody else. I am asked by this resolution, as you are, to take affirmative action upon this question. If you believe the President was right, and you are called upon in the proper way to indorse his action, there is no reason why you should not do so; but by the same token, if I believe the President was wrong, when "am called upon to take affirmative action upon this question I shall be guided by my own conscience and convictions, and not by those of anybody else.

Mr. President, there is no reason why this question should have been brought to the Senate at all. The act of severing relations with Germany was an executive act. The President did not in advance ask the advice of Congress upon that question. There was no reason why he should. It was strictly within his jurisdiction. He took the responsibility, grave as it was, of pursuing the course he has taken. That responsibility should remain with him until we are called upon to take some action that is within our jurisdiction.

Why should we be asked to inforse what has been done by the President? We have no official connection with it. The responsibility does not rest upon us. But, Mr. President, there may come, and that very soon, a time when we will be called upon to follow in the footsteps of the President and take upon ourselves a responsibility of the highest character and the gravest consequences. Until that time comes, the mind of every Member of this body should be kept open and free to discuss and act upon that question uninfluenced by any previous action.

that question uninfluenced by any previous action.

What are we proposing to do to-day by this resolution? We are proposing to indorse the act already done by the President and make it our act. That involves two things. The President has severed our relations with Germany, as he had a right to do if he thought it was his duty; but he has gone further than that and said to the Congress: "If Germany follows the course that is threatened, I shall call upon Congress to give me authority to use the Army and Navy for the purpose of enforcing American rights." If we indorse the act done by the President in severing relations with Germany, at the same time, by enacting this resolution, we adopt his policy that if Germany pursues the course that is threatened we are ready to declare war upon Germany. That is what it means. It is practically a declaration of war on our part.

Mr. President, it may be that there are Members of this body who are ready now to declare war upon Germany, but I am not. Germany may do some act in the future that would cause you and me, as the representatives of the people of the United States, to take that step; but if the President should do what he says he is going to do under certain circumstances—call upon us to authorize him to use the Army and the Navy—who knows whether that is going to be upon such cause as you and I would regard as sufficient for a declaration of war against Germany?

If the President had severed relations with Germany, and if the Senator from Missouri had allowed the matter to rest there, as I think should have been done, and the Senate had not been called upon to take affirmative action upon it, nobody would have been inclined, I suppose—certainly nobody on this floor—to criticize the President for the action he has taken, however much we might differ from him as to the cause of severing relations with Germany. But now, as I have said, we are asked to take up this matter ourselves, as representatives of the Government, and make his act our act; and I am not ready to go to that extent.

Mr. President, it is all well enough for Senators to say that we should support the President. I am here, representing in part, the people of the United States, not any individual, whether he be President or somebody else; and I hold it to be my right and my duty, when I am called upon to act upon this or any other question, to do what I believe to be right, just as the President has done.

Of course, if we should come to war with Germany that would be quite a different matter. I presume no Senator would be heard to raise his voice against his own country if we should come to that pass. But now we are asked to take steps ourselves that may lead to war with Germany, and so far as I am concerned I am going to take the course that I believe to be right, and I am not going to commit it to the President of the United States.

We must recognize the fact that this is a critical time for the people of this country. If there was ever a time when Members of this body should act strictly upon their honest convictions, certainly this is the time.

Now, I am opposed to this resolution on conviction. I shall vote against it for that reason. It does not matter to me what the convictions of somebody else may be. I can not be guided by considerations of that kind. I am not here to criticize the President for what he has done so far. That was his responsibility. I am quite content to leave it to him. But now it is my responsibility, and I shall take the course to which I am led by my own convictions and oppose and vote against the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while I intend to vote for this resolution which the Senator from Missouri has offered, I regret very much that the resolution is before the Senate. If it is desirable that the action of the President in dismissing the representative of the German Imperial Government be approved by this body, then it seems to me it would have been much more appropriate if the action were asked in advance of the dismissal rather than to ask it now.

I know, or at least I believe, with the Senator from Missouri, that the weight of authority is that the President in dismissing the ambassador from Germany and severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government was within his province and within the bounds of his authority. I believe that has been, with few exceptions, the custom of the country. My own idea is that that doctrine is wrong. I do not believe that the President ought to sever diplomatic relations with any country with which we are at peace until he has first submitted all the evidence in his possession to the Congress and asked their action on it.

But I can not criticize the President for taking the other course. As I said, the weight of authority is probably with him in that course. So I must assume that he was acting then within his own province, and when he has so acted in an important matter like this I consider it my duty to weigh every doubt in his favor, and unless I have positive evidence to the contrary I would not criticize him, but, if compelled to vote one way or the other, would vote in approval of his action.

But, Mr. President, undoubtedly the President has had before him much evidence that we have never seen. How much weight that has had or ought to have in acting upon the question I can not say. At least, it seems to me it would be fair to the Congress, if we are called upon to pass our judgment on this question, that all the evidence and all the correspondence be laid before us before we act officially.

When the President, acting within the scope of his jurisdiction and his authority, takes a particular course, I feel it my duty as a citizen of the United States to follow him, but when I am called upon to vote "yea" or "nay" upon approval of an official act, then it seems to me I ought to be given all the light that he had when he acted officially. So while it does not seem to me to be quite fair to ask the Senate to pass upon the resolution in this way, I will vote for it, because I want no division in any matter as important as is this.

Mr. President, I do not believe the resolution ought to be here, because our action can add nothing to or detract nothing from what the President has already done. We had a resolution before us not long ago approving the action of the President in sending notes to Germany and the other belligerent powers, or at least approving them in part. It seemed to me that that was out of place, although I voted for the resolution because I want the world to know that in any contest we may have with any of the belligerent nations our country and our people will be united. But if we are to have a resolution of approval of every official act of the President it will not be long until the people will believe, and will be justified in believing, that when he performs some official act and we do not pass a resolution of approval, therefore we do not agree with him.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States says that Congress alone has the power to declare war; but the President has the authority that he has taken in this case; and. as I said, I believe that the weight of authority gives him the right to take steps that will make war inevitable. If that is the right doctrine then the provision of the Constitution which gives to Congress the right to declare war, and the sole right, is of but little value. If the President can sever at his pleasure diplomatic relations with foreign governments, then in the President lies the real power to declare war, because although the Constitution says Congress has the sole right to declare war, the President having diplomatic matters supremely in his own hands can get Congress and the country in a position where they can not avoid war. If we are to give practical effect to the constitutional provision that Congress has the sole power to declare war, then the President ought never sever diplomatic relations with any nation with which we are at peace, or do any other act that in its natural course would have a tendency to bring on war, without first submitting all the papers and all the evidence to Congress, and then act on the judgment rendered by that official body to which is given by the Constitution the sole right to declare war.

I would have been glad if the President had submitted to Congress all the evidence bearing upon the question before he acted. I wish he had laid aside any technical right that he might possess and had taken the broad view that that course was the right course to pursue. The power that has the right under the Constitution to declare war ought to have the power over the steps that lead to war. But the President took the other course, and I admit he has followed distinguished examples and illustrious predecessors in those steps, and I would not criticize him for taking it, but it is his responsibility and not ours when he takes that course. Mr. President, when I vote for this resolution I think if I remained silent I could be properly charged with approving every act that has led up to it. I do not approve of the course that our President has taken in foreign affairs altogether. I think many mistakes have been made; and yet I have always refrained from publicly saying so, because I realize that the President being charged with responsibility is entitled to my support, even though I do not agree with every detail and every step that he has taken. willing to give that to him as a citizen and as a Senator both, but I do not believe it is quite fair to ask me to vote officially for the approval of all these acts.

I felt, Mr. President, since the yeas and nays are to be called on this question, that I could not put myself on record here by simply voting one way or the other without an injustice even to myself, and I therefore felt constrained to say this much on the question in order that my action may be understood.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I feel that I can not vote on the resolution without a statement in the Record as to how far this vote commits my future action. I assume, and if I am not correct I hope the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will correct me—I assume that this resolution has not been introduced into the Senate without consultation with and the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Walsh in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. STONE. The resolution was introduced without consultation with the President of the United States, and since its introduction I have not seen or talked with the President, not since the day he delivered his address before the joint session of the two Houses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator a leading question then, because his answer may very materially determine my attitude in this matter. Did this resolution come merely with the desire of the Senator himself for an expression of opinion, or does the Senator understand that it is introduced with a desire to support the attitude of the President of the United States?

Mr. STONE. The two questions propounded by the Senator from Alabama strike me as being the same in effect. He wishes to know whether I introduced it with a view of expressing my individual opinion or to secure an expression of the opinion of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it may be that I have not made myself clear, and I wish to do so. I desire to know from the Senator whether he has talked with the President or talked with somebody else in authority, and as to whether it is his understanding that the Executive desires this resolution to be passed or not?

Mr. STONE. I have answered that substantially. I said I had had no consultation whatever with the President. I have had no consultation on this subject with any executive official.

Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not. I wished to find out from the Senator, if I could, as to whether the President of the United States in his opinion feels that the passage of this resolution will uphold his hands in this emergency or not.

Mr. STONE. I do not know what the President thinks or feels. I have had no expression whatever from the President on the subject. I thought, and so stated in my remarks, that it would be an advisable thing for the Senate officially to say that it approves the action of the President, and gave my reasons therefor. That is as frank and as full as I can make it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the President of the United States desired in this emergency action by the Senate of the United States to sustain the course that he has pursued in this matter, for one I would give it unhesitatingly and ungrudgingly and without criticism of any kind. But if it is not the desire of the President of the United States, and if he does not feel that it is necessary to sustain his course, the bringing of this resolution before the Senate, I think is very ill-advised and very ill-timed on the part of the Senator from Missouri. However, I intend to vote for the resolution since it is before the Senate. The Senator from Missouri in his high position should of course uphold the hands of the President of the United States in a grave emergency, but he should know that he is upholding the hands of the President of the United States in his action and be able to tell his colleagues on the floor of the Senate that he is doing so when he asks their support and their action.

Mr. STONE. Since the Senator is personally criticizing—Mr. UNDERWOOD. I mean it as no personal criticism. I am criticizing the action of the Senator.

Mr. STONE. It is not offensive at all, but the Senator says, if he will permit me, that I ought to have acted only in support of the President. The resolution approves the act of the President. If that is not supporting his act, I do not know what it means.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is dividing the situation in substance. If it is necessary to uphold the hands of the President of the United States in this hour by the affirmative action of the Senate, we can be assured of that fact. I do not believe there is a Senator on this floor who would not readily and cheerfully respond. But if it is not necessary at this time, the resolution is proposing a decision about which we ought not to be prepared to express our judgment in this hour and this day. It is too serious a matter. It involves too greatly the life of the Nation, the happiness of the people of the United States, to be forced to an immature and ill-considered judgment.

Mr. President, up to this time I have not allowed myself to become a partisan of either of the contending forces on the battle fields of Europe. I have stood for the peace of my Nation, an honorable peace. So far as the President of the United States is concerned, I approve his course in guiding the ship of state through the many dangers that have beset it in the last three years and maintaining peace for the Nation. No greater glory crowns his administration than the fact that he has been able to keep his people out of war.

I have no criticism of the President of the United States in his action in recalling our ambassador home from Germany. There were two courses open for him to pursue after the receipt of the German note advising this country that that Government intended to pursue a relentless submarine warfare. One was to await a direct violation of our neutrality by an affirmative act. The other was to recall our ambassador as notice to the Imperial Government of Germany that we would not recognize and did not recognize what it proposed to do.

I can not question and I do not believe there is a citizen of this Republic who can question in this hour the earnest efforts of the President of the United States to maintain peace. His position on that question is above criticism from the standpoint of the man who wishes that peace may be kept. So I do not think it lies within the mouth of any man to say that the President of the United States has taken this action with an intention that it may lead to war.

I feel, and I believe every citizen of the Republic feels, that the action was taken by the President with the hope that he may ultimately maintain the peace. It was a dangerous position to take, but possibly the correct position. It was not for us to determine. In matters of this kind we have but one chief. He must decide for the Nation. I am glad to feel that that decision will not fall on the side of war if it can be avoided. But when it comes to war, that is not within the province of the President of the United States. The responsibility will not rest with him. It will rest under the Dome of this Capitol.

Whatever opinion he has in reference to the situation undoubtedly will have great weight and receive great consideration when the time comes. But so far as I am concerned, representing in part the people of one of the Commonwealths of this country, bearing responsibility myself and with no desire to avoid or shirk it, I do not wish when I cast my vote for this resolution that has been forced upon us to-day to do so with any limitations on my action as a Senator and my right to express freely with my own judgment what should be done in the interest of my own people and the people of this country in the event that war or threatened war comes knocking at our door.

I say this that the Record may show it. I say this that my own people may know that in this day and hour I am not foreclosing their rights or my judgment in reference to their rights to maintain peace if possible, but on the other hand, although I think this resolution is ill-advised at this time, the President of the United States is a man of sound judgment, a man of great force of character, a man with undoubted courage, therefore I will uphold his hands. He has taken his responsibility before the nations of the world, and I have no doubt he is willing to stand as the Chief Executive of this Nation to speak for the people of the United States without a sustaining voice for what he thinks is right. I can not conceive that the Chief Executive of this land for one moment would ask or expect to foreclose the future judgment of the Congress of the United States.

Therefore, I say in my judgment this resolution at this time is ill-advised. It is before the Senate. It must be disposed of It must be voted for or against. It is not the effect on our own people that is material. The adversing of the resolution by the Senate of the United States might be misinterpreted in foreign lands. It might be given the misinterpretation that the Congress of the United States and the people of the United States were not ready and willing to sustain to the last dollar and the last man the Chief Executive of the Nation in time of peril. It is because I fear a misinterpretation might be made of the adversing of the resolution in foreign countries that I shall cast my vote for the resolution when the roll is called.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, in this fateful hour I wish to say a few words. I think if this were but a question of whether or not the President has the power to sever diplomatic relations with Germany all of us would concede it. Since there is no question of power, I think it is singularly unfortunate that this resolution has been placed before the Senate at this time.

As to my sympathies, it is unnecessary to state whether they are with England, who has been the proud mistress of the seas, and her allies or with imperial Germany. I think it was along in the commencement of this war that my own mind was made up as to what nation was in the wrong. My own sympathies, of course, are with one or the other side, and I should not hesitate to declare them here if I regarded it necessary; but it seems to me that the purpose of this resolution or its effect, if not its purpose, will be to declare in a preliminary way that the United States shall go to war. Feeling as I do about it in that way, I shall not hesitate to vote against the resolution.

It has been said that the President of the United States has not asked and has not desired that this question shall be brought into this assembly here. I do not know what the facts may be. He does not doubt his own power to accomplish the result that he has already declared. We concede it. The American Nation has not complained, neither has the Senate; but I want to say here to-day that I raise my voice in protest, not for the allies and not for imperial Germany, but for the United States of America. I do not believe the time has come when we should make a preliminary declaration of war which the adoption of this resolution commits us to. For that reason I am going to vote against the resolution.

The resolution says that the President has declared what his course shall be-to ask Congress for authority to use the power of the Nation to prevent-if Germany shall pursue the policy which it has declared it must. Germany says "England has blockaded our ports; our people are starving; our back is to the wall; and the time has come when we will unleash the tigers of the undersea and send menace and horror and blight and death through all the prohibited zone, blockading her ports yonder because we have the power to do it and must fight with the means at our command. Necessity requires it shall be done." That is the position of Germany. The President has said, "If Germany shall do that, I am going to come to you again, gentlemen of the Congress, and I am going to ask the power to use all the authority and all the power of the United States of America to prevent that condition."

Mr. President, I regard it as a preliminary declaration of war if the resolution shall be voted upon favorably to-day. Therefore, I shall not vote for it. I do not believe the time has come in the history of this country when we shall side with Germany or when we shall side with the allies. I do not believe if Germany ought to be thrashed in this great war—and I am not saying that she should not be—that it is the province or business of the United States to do the thrashing. The time has not come, in my opinion, when it should be done, and we should commit ourselves by the adoption of this resolution to any policy that the President may hereafter pursue. Under the Constitution and the law he has no power to declare war, but he has in fact the power to plunge the Nation into war and to make it necessary for Congress to declare it; and he has almost done so.

Now, gentlemen, I feel this way about it. I think this is the most momentous occasion that will probably ever come to me in my service in the Senate, and I shall raise my voice for America and for peace, and I shall not vote for this resolution, which is to commit us to granting the power to enforce by war our own views of what international law is by the power of the I will not do it. United States.

If war shall come, if we shall declare war-and I shall vote against that also-but I say after war has come, let the majority in this country rule. I say let the last man in this country of ours be sent and the last dollar be given freely to uphold the declaration of war by this country whether it be right or wrong.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, war, war! God knows I hate the very word! To my mind's eye comes a Mr. President, war, war! picture of horrors too shocking to contemplate. I harbor no hate for Germany nor to any other nation, but America has rights, and I feel it is our duty to maintain them.

Mr. President, my father came from sunny France, and my dear, good mother, from whose bosom I drank the milk of justice and liberty, came from Germany, from the Rhine. So why should I harbor hate toward either of these contestants?

No; God knows I have no hate for either, though I was born in America. I am an American in every fiber of my body and soul. I may disagree with policies, but first and last I am with my country. I am willing to trust the President in this We must be united in a crucial time like this. May God keep our blessed land out of war is my prayer and my plea.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I believe that the sentiment of the people of this country is known to every Senator here, and I do not think there is any reason why we should disguise that knowledge either from ourselves or from the country. If there is another Lusitania incident this country will go to war. If this country is forced into war, in my humble opinion it will be largely by reason of the misdirected efforts of some of those who assume to themselves all of the burdens of peace.

There was only one course for the President to pursue under all of the prior declarations and under the sentiment of the people of this country, and that was to say that the character of the warfare that brought on the Lusitania incident will not be tolerated again by this country. Other announcements have heretofore been made to the warring powers with regard to the intentions of this country, but those declarations to those belligerent powers have been minimized, if not destroyed, by pacifist speeches which we have heard on the floor of this body similar to those we have heard to-day. There have been other occasions when the press of Germany unequivocally stated that the people of the United States did not back up the President of the United States. To-day there is a resolution pending before this body, and whether it be here properly or not has nothing to do with the question. The action of this body will be construed by Germany either rightfully or wrongfully. I hope that the action of the United States will be rightfully construed by Germany, because I pray God that Germany, with whom alone to-day is the power of peace or war, will decide that there shall be peace. It is with Germany alone to determine whether or not our citizens shall be illegally and wilfully murdered upon the high seas. If that is done again, again I say that nothing, not even all of the eloquence of these gentlemen here, not all of the propaganda that may be started throughout this country, will prevent the American people from demanding reparation for such crimes.

We all want peace. I think it is presumptuous for some Members of this body to assume that they alone want peace, while those that pursue a different practice to obtain peace want nothing but murder and war. The peace sentiment of this country is known. I want to say here that, in my humble opinion, peace can never be obtained through a lack of self-respect or through acts that destroy the respect of the world

National honor, to my mind, means nothing but self-respect and the respect of other nations. The criticism has been made, and not without justification, that the citizens of the United States in foreign countries are less respected than the people of any other great nation. I do not know whether or not that is so, but it has been the cause of comment from time to time. We are a Nation, and as a Nation our duty to our citizens is not within our borders alone, but it is our duty to protect our citizens in every country throughout the world. It is the duty of this Nation to protect the citizen's life, his liberty, and his property according to the laws of the country, wherever he may be.

How can you protect them? You can only protect them resides through the respect that the nation where that citizen resides has for this Nation. Thus it has been that Great Britain and Germany and France and Russia and Italy and other countries have protected the rights of their citizens in other countries; and thus alone can America protect the rights of its citizens in foreign countries.

It is not this one right upon the high seas that we are demanding; it is not the right to ship our commerce upon the high seas; it is not the right of our seamen to work where they please upon the high seas; but it is the right of an American citizen to be protected in his rights wherever he may be. I believe that that which more endangers our country from war than anything else is the constant declaration to the world that no matter what they may do to our citizens; no matter how illegal their acts may be; no matter how barbarous they may be, we will not resent them if in that resentment it becomes necessary to engage in war. Those declarations, whether made here or in the press or anywhere else, in my humble opinion, are going to bring war to this country, if war comes at all.

I believe that if we had backed up unequivocally, and without the show of fear of war that we have shown here, the position taken by the President of the United States, the practices which are threatened would never be put into effect. They have not yet actually been put into effect, although the order has been in force for several days. I do not believe they ever would be put into force and effect if those who are contemplating doing so were told unequivocally that their loss by reason of such an act would be far greater than any possible gain that they could obtain by it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, during the interval between the outbreak of the war in Europe and the present time I have endeavored to keep aloof from those excitements and apprehensions which were the natural outgrowth of that awful struggle. I have during that time been in disagreement with those who have felt that because of this war, a vast and extensive preparedness was essential to our immediate or future safety. I have protested upon this floor on more than one occasion against that hysteria which was first created, and then capitalized for the transformation of this country into what seemed to me to be a permanent system of militarism. I have not permitted myself to entertain the view that any great nation could swiftly invade us or that an army approaching that of Germany or a navy approaching that of Great Britain was necessary for our protection. I have endeavored, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and a Member of this body, to proceed along the line of preparedness as though no great conflict existed. I was unable, therefore, to give my assent to either of the great war bills of the last session, because I felt that they carried this country to an extremity and committed it to a policy which no occasion warranted and increased the burden of our permanent expenditures to an undue No man therefore can accuse me, Mr. President, of being imbued with a warlike spirit or with harboring a desire to do ought that would magnify the solemnity of the existing condition when I announce my adhesion to the purpose of this resolution and my approval of its introduction.

Mr. President, since the first note sent by the President to Germany after the sinking of the Lusitania, and based upon that frightful tragedy, I read and reflected upon its recitals and requirements, I have felt that our future relations with Germany would be largely, if not entirely, controlled and dictated by its own policies and purposes. I thought, upon mature deliberation, that what the administration then did and then said was abundantly justified by the occasion which provoked its utterance. I was persuaded that it could have done no less, and that had it even faltered in that declaration which it sent across the seas, it would not have fully represented our traditions, our principles, or our existing opinion, and would not have measured up to the crisis which then confronted it.

The President was then and afterwards accused by his critics of vacillation, of weakness, of a willingness to sacrifice our highest traditions and to imperil our national integrity as the price of preserving peace. Some of his friends quietly criticized his judgment, while expressing and entertaining the highest opinion of his patriotism and earnestness of purpose. But I have been unable to discern between the first Lusitania note and the progress of American diplomacy and the severance of our diplomatic relations with Germany any deviation of the President from the course then announced, from the notification then given, from the policy then determined upon.

He appeared before the Congress last May because of other events in conflict with that policy, for which Germany was responsible, and informed us of the ultimatum which he had delivered to that country in strict compliance with his first notification. I approved of his course then, and would willingly have so said in public response to a resolution like that which we are now considering.

The notification of Germany on the 30th day of January terminating its former assurance to the President and announcing its intention to take advantage of the reservation attached to it instantly aroused in every thinking man and woman in the United States the conviction that the President would take, that the President must take, that the President would be recreant to himself, to his party, and to his country if he did not take, the identical course with Germany which he announced last week to the Congress. But I think, Mr. President, whether we commend or condemn that course, whether we approve or disapprove the action there taken, when we also reflect that upon him is imposed the supreme responsibility of action, that upon his judgment, his wisdom, his ideals, his devotion to duty rested the final determination, our judgment as American citizens was foreclosed when the final step was taken. We may not have approved it; we may not have justified it; aye, we may have deplored it; but the constitutional authority of the United States acted at a critical moment on a great occasion upon a matter of tremendous consequence to him, to us, and to our posterity, upon which he was required by the responsibilities of his great position to act, and upon which none other could act, we, as the people of the United States, we, as the citizens of the greatest neutral nation, have but one course to take, but one duty to perform, if we are Americans. We shall stand by the administration as our fathers before us have ever stood when facing another nation with which a rupture seems imminent.

It may lead us into the desolation of war and conflict, which God forbid; it may broaden the horizon of the mighty conflict now waging upon other continents, and our shores and our land may be red with the blood of our sons shed in the defense of their country; but, Mr. President, we have reached the point where reflection and argument is at an end, where the die has been cast, where duty now speaks, and where every impulse of patriotism and integrity calls upon us to stand by the President, forgetting party lines and past differences, our eyes fixed upon the future, the hope still in our bosoms that peace may yet prevail, but our resolution, our steadfast purpose, admitting of neither doubt nor hesitation. To falter now is impossible. To hesitate may be to be lost. But to be disunited in so supreme a crisis is to encourage, if not to court, the disaster we would shun.

Such, Mr. President, I believe to be the sentiment of the Commonwealth which I in part represent upon this floor; such has been the voice of the legislature of my State; such the assurance of its governor, with no partisanship in the expression of either branch of the government and no hesitation. There the ranks which were divided are closed; there men and women but one goal; their gaze is upon the President; their destiny, the destiny of a common country.

And so, Mr. President, I have felt it my duty on this occasion to take a few moments of time to announce my adhesionmy full, undivided adhesion-to the position taken by the President, and to voice what I know to be the sentiment of the people of the State of Colorado upon this selemn occasion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, to hesitate now is to invite While Congress is vested under the organic act aggression. with power to declare war, the maintenance or severance of diplomatic relations rests with the Chief Magistrate of the Republic. He has exercised that power; he has presented through a proper message to Congress his reasons for the exercise of that power at the time and in the circumstances named. The severance of the usual diplomatic relations verges dangerously near hostilities. That is universally understood.

This resolution proposes to do no more than to approve the reasons and generally accepted principles contained in the President's last message. The passage of this resolution does not commit us to war, unless the acts mentioned in the Presi-The passage of this resolution does dent's message shall have been perpetrated. The performance of the inhibited acts rests with another sovereignty. Those conditions we ultimately must meet, unless the declared purpose of the German Government shall be abandoned. On the passage or defeat of this resolution depends the view entertained by the German Imperial Government of the unity of the Amer-by the German Imperial Governing ican people or the lack of it.

We speak of the public sentiment, Mr. President, and of the American people. It is time that the American people awoke to world conditions. If the powers assumed to be exercised to be carried into effect, there under the guise of a blockade shall be carried into effect, there is an end to all neutral trade, ours alike with others. If the enlarged war zone mentioned in Germany's last note shall be made effective and shall be a precedent, then the neutral nations of the world had as well furl the sails of their merchant fleets, close their warehouses, and let their commerce rot on their piers, or by their united act establish the universal rights of market for every neutral nation in the world. If the war zone mentioned can be declared in the Atlantic Ocean and adjacent embraced waters, it can as well be extended halfway across the Atlantic, or within the 3-mile limit of the shores of this Republic. If it can be declared and established in one ocean, it can be declared and established on the blue waters of the seven seas of the earth.

I am reluctant, Mr. President, to take the step; but to hesitate now ultimately would be the signal to the world of national cowardice. In the final analysis of the passage or defeat of this resolution will be gauged the public sentiment of the American people. For one, I am willing to register my vote for this resolution, and to approve the message of the President to which it

If the law of blockade as proposed, and the proposed application of the submarines to enforce it, shall be the law of nations, then Germany's war zone may circle the globe. There is no limitation save the marginal waters that bound the different shores of the nations of the earth. How long will even they be secure against international lawlessness and the limitless law of force?

Mr. President, I believe I have been consistent on this question. know I have from my lights, from the viewpoint I have taken. voted, so far as it could be voted upon in this body, to warn American citizens to refrain from traveling upon the armed merchant ships of belligerent nations. Practically for the pur-pose of destroying submarines, every belligerent merchant ship that has left our ports since war was declared has been a naval auxiliary—not for general naval purposes, but their armament was of the character that would sink a submarine with its frail armored sides exposed to a shot carried by the average gun on a merchant ship. I so voted in order that we might seasonably avoid the difficulties which we now find ourselves approaching, I so voted because I considered the merchant ship of a belligerent nation so armed, with the uses to which submarines are now put, to be a fighting ship.

The open sea is a place where every fighting ship of a belligerent nation may lawfully engage an enemy in battle. If I were voluntarily to thrust myself between the contending lines of enemy nations in military operations on land, I would consider that I took my chances of destruction. I believed I would have no right to call upon my Government to protect me in such circumstances. I considered that if I traveled upon the merchant ship of a belligerent nation armed for defensive purposes sufficiently to destroy a submarine I voluntarily put myself on the high seas at a point of danger wherever a naval battle occurred, and that the Government therefore owed me no duty of protecstand shoulder to shoulder; they know but one duty; they see tion. Having held that view, Mr. President, I voted to warn American citizens from taking passage on the merchant ships of belligerent nations.

That, however, presented an entirely different question. In a previous communication before the issues presented by the last communication from the German Government it is true, as the Senator from California [Mr. Works] said to-day, that she impliedly reserved the right, if the allies continued to violate the law of nations as to merchant shipping, to pursue unlimited warfare by submarines.

Mr. President, the allies have not destroyed life in the prosecution of their blockade. England, I think unlawfully, has interfered with our neutral commerce. She has unlawfully taken cargoes of merchandise bound from our neutral ports to a neutral destination, impounded them in her prize courts, condemned them by decrees under her admiralty laws, confiscated and sold them, or appropriated them to her purposes. That, however, concerns merchandise. It is capable of reparation in damages, either now or in the future arbitration of the world. That concerns something which may be compensated for. I discriminate between the confiscation of insensate merchandise, whose lifeblood is gold, and the murder of women and children, whose defenseless lives can never be redeemed by the German Government and no adequate reparation ever be made.

It is threatened, Mr. President, in the event that the allies continue their breaches of international law in mere matters of merchandise and the cargoes of our ships to renew an indiscriminate and ruthless warfare within the prescribed zone which takes in, admittedly, the high seas of the world. Not since the days of the corsairs, the days when the pirates, unvexed, sailed the seas and undertook to confiscate at pleasure the merchandise and the lives of every nation, has there been a more unjustifiable proclamation to the nations of the world than the late one extending the war zone into the Atlantic Ocean and other bodies of navigable tidewater named in the German Government's last decree.

That is the question we are meeting. At last, Mr. President, our Chief Magistrate rose to the high level of the great emergencies of the hour and correctly stated in his message to Congress, after using exemplary patience, the supreme issues that face our people.

Mr. President, I do not desire to consume time needlessly. What I shall have to say will be condensed within the smallest possible compass. It is not the time for words. I deery war as much as those Senators who may oppose this resolution, but there are sacrifices of peace, there are prices paid to avoid war that are greater than the priceless atonements of war. There are more precious possessions in this world than mere life. At least, if American life shall be offered on the altar of a world's peace the strong will die that our weak and defenseless may live in the years to come. The preservation of life at the price of dishonor would stamp us as an unworthy posterity of the ancestors who gave us the splendid gifts of American citizenship and our heritage of liberty. Our ancestors fought in every battle of this Republic, from Monmouth to Appomattox, from Chapultepec to Santiago, and if we to-day upon the active stage of human affairs can not hold ourselves ready and willing to make the sacrifice our fathers made, then let us abdicate the high privilege of American citizenship and proclaim to the world the implied cowardice employed in the defeat of such a resolution as this.

I am no apologist for what I consider the domestic mistakes of this administration. From many of them—most of them—I totally dissent. But this resolution approaches the territory where partisan differences cease, where mere party dies, where the clamor of the politician must end, where discord is stilled, and where the rights of the American Nation must begin.

Mr. President, our conduct, our willingness now to approve the only honorable course that the Chief Magistrate could take, means, more than likely, the avoidance of the very difficulties we deprecate. An adverse vote on this resolution will give encouragement to those who have proclaimed their intention to destroy the rights of neutral commerce, including our own, in a zone that is totally unjustified by the laws of war.

On the 19th of April, 1861, President Lincoln issued a proclamation blockading the ports and waters of the Confederate States of America. It did not seek to go beyond the marginal waters of this Republic. It did not invade tidewater beyond our territorial waters and proclaim a zone in the ocean from which the commerce of neutrals was barred. Its very terms restricted it to a blockade of the ports of the rebellious States. It did not seek to exclude neutrals from the arms of the ocean and the great sounds that are the inlets of the maritime traffic of the world; neither did it seek to invade the channels and the highways of the ocean and interfere with the neutral commerce that legitimately traveled there. The blockade was more or less effective, but it was confined to the ports of the rebellious States.

This blockade, under the decree of the German Government, roughly speaking, as I estimate, extends approximately between 300 and 400 miles from the Irish coast. It comprises practically all of the North Sea; it comprises the English Channel, all the tidewaters adjacent to the northern coast of Spain, and denies ingress or egress to those going and coming from the Mediterranean Sea. By the same process, by the same logic of principle, the Imperial Government of Germany could blockade the water almost or quite from a point within gunshot of our coast, from Hell Gate to the Pillars of Hercules and from the Arctic Circle on our north to Cape Horn, marking the uttermost bounds of land in the Western Hemisphere, and still be within the admitted principles laid down in her last communication upon that subject.

What does it mean? It means that neutral trade is no more. It is more effective than an embargo laid by Congress, because when once in effect it destroys our commerce not only by confiscation of the cargo but by the sinking of the vessel. What does this note mean further? It means, Mr. President, a ruthless warfare, with no visit and search, with no saving of the life of passengers and crew, but returns to the ancient piratical method of destroying, without a chance of surrender, all on heard

What are the laws of war, both on land and at sea? They have been violated many times in this great war. Francis Lieber, an adopted citizen of our country, a German by birth, wrote the most humane code of civilized warfare known to the powers of the world. He fought at Waterloo, and carried with him to his American grave the marks of bullets received on that fatal day when the sun of Napoleon set on his dream of empire. Lieber wrote a code of war that is instinct with the humanities of a great cause. In it prisoners of war are recognized and their rights and lives are to be preserved. He wrote, it is true, for land; but from the time of Hugo Grotius the same humane rule has prevailed on sea as on land. An enemy can take his choice. He can fight under his flag and die, or he can strike his colors, surrender, and live. It is the universal right of the vanquished enemy to surrender and save his life, and the equally universal duty of the conqueror to spare his life upon that surrender, and to give him the opportunity to surrender.

The use of the submarine, especially that threatened in the last note, gives none of those humane rights. It is a declaration that no vessel, belligerent or neutral, will be spared; that no life, combatant or noncombatant, will be spared; that men, women, and children will be joined in an indiscriminate slaughter. To the horrors of war, sufficiently brutal at its very best, will be added the destruction that comes from the mingling in a common grave and in a common river of blood of those who, by the laws even of savage empires in the days of old, have been spared, when the women and children were collected and protected in camps. Even Attila the Hun, the scourge of God, when he came from the confines of central Asia and upon the night of the fatal day when he met his defeat at the hands of Christendom, piled high his spoil and arranged his war chariots for final defense in the morning, made provision for the care and safety of the men and women who were noncombatants and the helpless that might be involved with him in a common defeat.

The same territory over which surges to-day the tide of war, the scene of the battle of Chalons-sur-Marne and all along the eastern and northern front of France, is a historic field where the armed legions of the great martial leaders of the centuries have met in mortal combat. They fought, even those denominated by the sacred historians as pagans, with some regard for the rights of the helpless, the sick, the weak, the women, and the children. To-day we face the common tribunal of mankind. We meet the solemn occasion, and must assume the duty, once for all, of declaring in this Chamber whether we approve or condemn the ruthless warfare of the submarine. What shall our verdict be? Not by our generation, but by the centuries yet to come, shall we be judged.

I shall go on record against it, Mr. President. This is the first opportune occasion I have had. I have had my own views. I have my sympathies. Who has not? I have sedulously restrained them, and have voted at times contrary to my own private opinions on the merits of certain issues in order that we might hold ourselves aloof from this mighty struggle across the sea. I can hold myself aloof no longer. It is not a matter of ancestry. I do not know, as many of us in our country, especially those of the far West, do not know, from whom we came, of what ancestry in the Old World. It is enough for me to know that to-day I am an American citizen. What blood of Europe once pulsed in our veins is not now significant. To-day it is American. It is enough for me to know that upon the solemn issue presented to the Senate by this resolution, as the initial point at the threshold of our official action I shall vote to condemn in unqualified terms the use of the submarine as an instrumentality, used in the way it has been and is threatened to be used, totally inconsistent with the laws and practices of civilized nations.

Mr. President, it is said that we will need, some time, the submarine. It may be; but it will be in defense of our shores, of our ports, of our cities. At no time will we wage aggressive war. At no time in the future, I believe, by our traditions and our declared purposes of the present hour, will we seek an enemy across the sea and add to that the lust of territorial conquest to spread the borders of this Republic beyond the seas. If I had had my way about it, I never would have voted nor would I have shotted a single gun to take the Philippine Islands. It is a mere matter of duty now to hold them and administer them for the people, so that they may not be turned loose upon the world, a blazing derelict of nations and the scene of a mighty disorder. But for us there is no aggressive warfare, no spoils, no victims nor prisoners whose ransom shall the general coffers fill, nor kings to lead at the chariot wheels of the conqueror for us in the lifetime of our Republic. For us alone is reserved the development of the country given us by the beneficence of our ancestors and by the merciful dispensations of Providence to develop it, to hold it secure; so our future wars will be defensive wars. I have no fear of any limitations placed upon the submarine that may hamper us in the future defensive war or wars, whenever they may come.

defensive war or wars, whenever they may come.

I wrote not long ago, Mr. President, letters to several of my constituents on this question. I knew that ultimately it must be met. I believe it wise when trouble of this character is coming over the horizon not to wait until it invades your own household, but adequately and seasonably to prepare.

A prominent editor of a Chicago German newspaper, in its last leading editorial on the question, declared that if a break came with Germany the first problem this Government would face would be a race war, intimating that it would begin in Chicago. I am not intimidated nor dismayed by such a prospect. If it is no worse than the average riot in Chicago that I have seen, it will be a God-blessed relief. I do not think so. I am willing myself to take the chances in the western territory. Our polyglot races, I believe, are loyal. They know this Republic is for us all.

This morning by design, Mr. President, I sent to the desk and had read a letter which is one of many of a like kind that I have received. It was from Ellen Schmidt and her husband, Heinrich Schmidt. They are Germans. They did not come from Prussia. They came from other German States. When they sat in front of the old fireplace and watched the back log melt away in the long winter evenings, I heard them tell of the siege of Sebastopol. I have heard them tell of the struggles in the Crimean War, the men who in their later days were peaceful farmers in southern Illinois. I have heard them anathematize the father of the present Kaiser. The German people, it is true, when they face a foreign foe, are united; but in the day of reckoning, the day of settlement, Prussia will not forever dominate the public opinion of the German States. The Bavarian is essentially peaceful. The native of Saxony is essentially peaceful. I can call the roll of the States, and many of them are as kindly and humane and as peaceable as any American who sits in the quiet of his fireside to-night. So when Ellen Schmidt, the good soul, signing the name for her husband, wrote that they hoped the United States would preserve the principles and the traditional policies of this Republic laid down in the President's message, I know that there are some Germans in my country that do not approve of indis-criminate, ruthless warfare. I know, too, that their fathers came from Germany to escape the military service of that country. No militarism threatens this country except that of the Prussian. There is no militarism in this country. There is none in England. There is none in France; and there soon will be none, and but little of the Czar, in Russia. There is an awakening of democracy. Some have professed to say that no-body knows why this war is being waged, and why it has suddenly cast its ominous cloud over Europe and threatened the world.

The reason is patent to the observer. It is a war of democracy against absolutism; it is a war for the supremacy of civil power over that of the military—principles for which Jefferson wrote and Washington fought. Berlin is the only one of the great civilized powers of the world where in a time of peace a military officer can drive a citizen from the walks of the capital into the gutter, and when refused the privilege can run him through with the sword, with no penalty save that of the camp, with no trial by the civil courts in time of peace. No; it is the only country in the world where martial law is supreme even in time of peace, and the military power is supreme even over the civil authorities. When a Prussian officer killed a German subject by running him through with his sword, an humble shoemaker, he was not tried in the civil courts of that Empire, he was court-martialed and given an insignificant sentence in time of peace. If a military officer of this Republic were to slap the most humble citizen of Washington with the flat of his sword and the citizen slew him on the spot in necessary self-defense, he would be recognized as acting strictly within his rights. If assaulted by the most exalted of our military officers, even by a rear admiral while doing land duty, and if he were killed, the military or the naval officer would be indicted by the proper court, prosecuted according to the ancient form, given a trial by jury, convicted, hanged, or sent to the binder-twine factory in the State of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] if it happened to be in that district, or to the rock quarries of Indiana, or to making good roads, where he would learn the lesson of all the ages that in this Republic in time of peace civil authority is supreme and the military authority must obey the law of the land.

They have not learned this everlasting lesson of the centuries under the Kaiser's government. It is a contest of democracy against the absolutism of the king and the rule of an unrestrained unpublished military.

racy against the absolutism of the king and the full of an unrestrained, unpunished military.

I have not time to read, Mr. President, but on some future occasion I will read from the works of Bernhardi. I can summarize it. There never was a more materialistic, thoroughly heartless, conscienceless, bloody, unjustifiable proclamation of might and the sword over right and human justice printed in the lids of a book since Cadmus invented letters or Gutenberg invented type. In that he proclaimed it to be the duty of the Imperial Government to carry German "kultur" around the world. If the "kultur" of the submarine and the slaughter of men, women, and children who are helpless be the form of culture and the fruit of Prussian militarism, for one this afternoon I wish to vote nay and voice my eternal protest against it. Germany under the incubus of Prussia, the blood and iron traditions of Bismarck, is not the Germany of Goethe, of Schiller, of Heine. It has made the soldier its emblem and force its law of life.

This country is full of every nationality in the world—allies, central powers, and all. For their votes, gained by a sacrifice of a world principle, I care nothing; for the discharge of the duty of this hour I care everything.

So, Mr. President, it is a question that we now meet at the threshold indicated by this resolution whether we rise to the level of the occasion, follow the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy in time of war and the Chief Magistrate in time of peace, who is entitled to communicate with us in message, and to sustain or sever diplomatic relations—whether we follow him with heroic fidelity to the logic of the conclusions of the principle he has laid down or whether we abandon him to his fate. When we have done the latter we shall reap in due season the harvest of our folly.

This letter that I sent out to a great number who protested

This letter that I sent out to a great number who protested and some approved—about three to one approved, I think, so far as my correspondence and telegrams show—is dated February 6, 1917. In it I have stated my creed, my belief under present conditions, and on that I intend to shape my future course.

"It is intolerable to neutral nations that the sea be blockaded, as proposed by the German Government in its note of January 31, 1917. A blockade of the ports and marginal waters of the nations with which the central powers are at war is justified by the laws of war; but this does not carry with it the right to create such a zone as described, sow it with mines, and sink, by means of submarines or otherwise, as threatened, any neutral vessels found within the designated zone. Germany has as much right to declare the Atlantic Ocean a danger zone and warn neutrals to keep out of it. It resolves itself into might, not right.

"President Wilson's note of April 18, 1916, on the sinking of the Sussex without warning or saving the lives of the crew or passengers, among the latter of which were several citizens of the United States, said:

"Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

"To this the German Government replied:

"In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

"By the note of January 31, 1917, already mentioned, the German Government declared it would act after February 1, 1917, 'by forcibly preventing in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and the eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included. All ships met within the zone will be sunk.'

"This means the revival of submarine naval warfare as in the

"This means the revival of submarine naval warfare as in the Lusitania and Sussex cases without warning or the saving of life before destroying merchant ships. The loss of American citizens so caused is a violation of the rules of naval warfare. When to this is added that the neutral ships of the United States or its citizens shall be sunk without warning or saving the lives of passengers or crew the proposed course of the German Government is utterly indefensible. Both the laws of nations and the laws of humanity condemn it. This is a breach of a solemn pledge given us by the German Government.

"The question of warning our citizens to keep off belligerent merchant ships so armed as to be capable of sinking by a submarine presented a different issue. It is now, Shall our own neutral merchant ships be so destroyed? No loyal citizen of the United States can submit to such treatment of our people on the seas. Such naval warfare so threatened can scarcely be distinguished from piracy.

"I believe Great Britain has unlawfully interfered with our commerce. This relates entirely to merchandise taken in violation of property rights, and admits of reparation by paying damages. The lawless taking of the lives of American citizens by submarine warfare admits of no reparation. There is a marked difference between a cargo of merchandise and human lives, between condemning property in a prize court and drowning women and children at sea. Murder can not be justified by showing that another has previously unlawfully deprived the dead, when living, of their property. Such a course acquiesced in compels us in its necessary effect to cease to trade with neutral countries. The German Government has entered on that course which our Government and its people can not endure. If persevered in but one course is open. It is with infinite regret I observe the desperate expedient of Germany. Unless abandoned it means for our country war. I approve the President's message of February 3, 1917."

I have read this verbatim, and I ask that it be inserted not in the usual small type in cases of this kind but in the same type as the ordinary RECORD is published.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. With these remarks I close, although there is very much more that I should like to say. In the short time that is properly given for the discussion of the resolution I think it would be an abuse of privilege as a Senator to take further time. I can only express the hope that the resolution offered by the senior Senator from Missouri will receive so signal a majority in this Chamber that it will be notice to the world, and especially to all Europe concerned, that the American people are a unit, and that we are with our Chief Magistrate in his address.

Mr. STONE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, before the yeas and nays are taken I feel it my duty under the circumstances to say a few words in support of the resolution. I am from a State that contains a large proportion of foreign-born inhabitants, and many of them are poignantly desirous of seeing an amicable termination of the present crisis. I share their anxiety with them, and I would do nothing willfully to bring about war with Germany or any other nation if it can honorably, yes, decently, be avoided. I would do nothing which in my judgment would hasten a war that would be of our own making. We say we want peace. Of course we want peace. No Senator or Representative has arisen in Congress who does not want peace, but the question has arisen in our own minds how can peace be preserved, and can it best be preserved by evading responsibilities, by relinquishing rights, by suffering injustice, or is it the safest and wisest course to pursue before it is too late to assert our rights so that those who are about to trespass upon those rights may know the consequences if they so continue to trespass?

The issue that is presented here this afternoon is not a new issue. It has been in the making for two and a half years. Congress went on record in favor of it nearly a year ago. The country is on record in favor of the issue presented here by the resolution. It went on record in the recent campaign. The press of the country has gone on record; the citizens of the United States have gone on record long ago. The situation is not as though it were a new one that had been suddenly thrust upon us for the first time. We have been considering it, I say, for nearly two and a half years.

I want to say that since the sinking of the Lusitania this question has been upon us. Who has kept the country at peace during the past two and a half years? The President of the United States has done more to keep the country out of war than any other one man in the United States. If he had chosen to listen to counsel on one side or to counsel on the other, if he had not had his feet firmly planted upon the rocks of peace, the rock of right, and the rock of justice he would have been shoved from his position into war and he would have dragged this country with him months and months ago.

When Senators talk peace I want to say there is one man in the United States who will not have to yield to any Member of this body or any other man in the United States on the proposition of striving for peace, and that man is the President of the United States, for in all the months that these matters have been discussed the President of the United States, day in and day out, yes, and through the night, has been in every way possible endeavoring to secure peace consistent with the honor and the welfare and the interests of this country.

Two years ago when Congress adjourned in March who was left alone here in Washington to protect the honor, the interests, and the peace of the United States? The President of the United States. Senators went home, Representatives went home, attending to their own business, pursuing their pleasure in their own way, and left him alone here with the burden and with the responsibility of keeping us at peace, and he did so! Notwithstanding the sinking of the Lusitania, notwithstanding the sinking of the Sussex, notwithstanding all the ills that we have suffered at the hands of belligerents he has still maintained peace.

Then the question of the sinking of the Lusitania arose. Everybody knows how the country was excited, how men were wrought up, how quite a respectable number of our citizens believed that we should not tolerate a barbarous warfare, such as it was denounced, to be continued against us or our citizens. Through the summer, through the fall, through the winter, and through the next spring in notes after notes, in negotiations after negotiations, we had this matter up with Germany and her allies. I might add that in connection with that we had other issues up with the entente allies. There is not any question in my mind that our rights have been invaded by the entente allies, and complicated with this question of the taking of American lives was the further question with the opposite side who were invading our rights upon the high seas. Let me say right here that I resent the wrongs we have suffered at the hands of Great Britain on the high seas, and let me say further that they deserve drastic treatment and a heroic remedy, if necessary, to cure her of her tendencies, short of severing relations. wrongs we suffered at her hands could be compensated in dollars; and if the wrongs we have now to fear at the hands of Germany, if she carries out her threat, were of the same character, and not as they in truth are, not susceptible to money compensation, we could also bide our time to right our wrongs

But it is perfectly obvious, is it not, that we had to seek redress for the killing of our citizens first and to prevent a recurrence of the same capital wrongs suffered at the hands of Germany. We had to settle that matter which appears to me the most grievous invasion of our rights, and that was the taking of the lives of our citizens upon the high seas. Very well; did the country believe in that stand? Does anybody here wish to rise and say that the American people did not stand back of the President in his attempt to safeguard the lives of American citizens?

I remember the resolutions that were offered here. I remember how it was proposed that we warn citizens to stay off the high seas and place an embargo on munitions of war. All those questions were settled, at least those that came up here, and how were they decided? Decided in favor of the President's stand. Decided in favor of the right of our citizens to exercise their proper rights and their God-given right to live. The country stood back of the President, the press stood back of him, the citizens stood back of him, and the Senate and the House of Representatives stood back of him.

Ah, Mr. President, not only did the people of the United States stand back of the President, but Germany and her allies admitted the justice and soundness of our demands. It would be well to remember it is not quite a year ago when the ultimatum was given to Germany. And when pressure had been brought upon the President and upon Congress to recede from the position he had taken, Germany admitted the correctness of his position, did she not? The world admitted the correctness of our position, and it was promised on behalf of Germany that she would not again engage in the ruthless submarine warfare against which we complained. She recognized our rights and complied with our demands,

Now, it is true that a condition was attached to Germany's pledges, namely, to the effect that she reserved the purpose to resume her ruthless operations in the event of certain contingencies happening or not happening, but it is also true that the President, in a note immediately afterwards sent, explicitly and emphatically refused to accept Germany's pledges except unconditionally, and thus, by her acquiescence she recognized that we accepted her pledges unconditionally and not otherwise.

Ah, but, Mr. President, she did not even attempt to reserve that purpose on the grounds that our demands were unjust or our position untenable. No; she only attempted to reserve her purpose in retaliation against England for her alleged unlawful warfare. She admitted that she had no right to sink the Sussex when she agreed to make reparation and apologized for her acts. She did not place the reason for her yielding to our demands then upon the ground of expediency, but she admitted the correctness and the soundness of the position of the President of the United States in the premises. We thought it was all settled. So it seemed to be entirely settled. The sunshine of peace once more spread its rays over the land, and we supposed this matter was forever settled. Nay, to make it doubly sure the President, in a supplemental note, came out and said that while there might be something said in the German reply that might be construed as attaching conditions to the recognition of our rights, under no circumstances could we discuss, much less consider, any such condition as that, and that these rights were not relative but absolute; single not joint.

So the world approved our position. The neutral nations approved our position, the belligerent nations approved our position, Germany herself approved our position. Who was there, then, to question it? Nobody.

So we went before the people in the campaign, and we gave an accounting to the people of the United States of the record of the President in the handling of our foreign affairs, and the people approved it and reelected him to conduct our affairs for another four years.

Now, since that time considerable water has gone under the bridge. The President, after the war cloud had apparently passed away, undertook to bring a message of peace to the world. The people were glad to see him take that course. Some, indeed, thought that he was favoring one set of the combatants against the other, but the world knows and we know that the President had only at heart the best interests of the United States, which we all have at heart, and the welfare of the whole world.
